I am going to help you pass this bill. If I were on the committee I would have voted for it just as it is. But if we pass it and send it to the Senate, and then the Senate puts on five or six or ten million dollars additional for the increase of salaries of the commissioned officers and others in the Navy Department, are you going to stand by this bill and make the Senate back, or is it understood by the steering committee of the House, or by the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, that when the Senate puts on an increased appropriation he will brag about what the House has done, and when it comes to dealing with this increased appropriation put on by the Senate, he will say, "We could not help it, we had to yield to the Senate; the Senate made us do it"?

What are you going to do about it? I am going to stand with you, and when the bill comes back from the Senate, if the Senate puts on an increased appropriation, if the House conferees will stand out I will help you make a fight to make the Senate for one time in its life back down. I believe that is the sentiment of the House. I am sure the naval conferees of this House will fight it out with them. I remember in the last session they fought it out and made the Senate yield on practically every proposition. Let us do it this time. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution of the United States, as construed by Congress, such a bill as this must originate in the House of Representatives. It could not come from the Senate. It must be passed here and start on its road to final passage in the House in order to become a law, thereby assuming that the membership of this House would have the right finally to perfect and frame its terms and provisions, and I submit that under the rule brought in here, under the procedure by which this legislation must be passed, requiring the House under whip and spur to pass this bill without change, without even the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," the committee, in justice to the membership of the House, should have amended the context of this bill. It should have amended the enacting clause of this bill where it says:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

Because it is the creation of neither the House of Representatives, nor of the Congress of the United States. It should have stricken out "House of Representatives" and inserted in lieu thereof:

Be it enacted by the secret, silent, invisible steering committee of the Republican Party, whose names do not appear in the directory, whose names do not appear in the archives of Congress, who are unknown to the great majority of Congressmen, Republicans as well as Democrats, but yet who bring legislation in here already prepared to take $10,000,000 out of the Treasury annually in the face of a possible $3,000,000,000 deficit, with no possible chance to change it in the slightest particular.

That committee says to the Members of the House of Representatives, "We have no confidence in you to pass proper legislation. We have no confidence in the 400 other Representatives of the people drawing $7,500 a year each from the Public Treasury. We do not know what you might do with this legislation. We are not even going to give you a chance to discuss it for more than 20 minutes on the floor of the House." That is why I find myself for one time in hearty accord with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] in the position just taken by him on this bill.

I am going to vote against this bill. Very likely increases should be granted, and I would vote for proper increases if we were permitted to discuss and frame this bill, but I do not believe this is the proper way to pass legislation. If it is, this all-powerful steering committee should bring in a bill here changing even the Constitution and the law under a special rule always available out of the hip pocket of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], saying, "We will dispense with the balance of the membership of Congress and let all their salaries go to the steering committee, because we get better laws in that way. We can expect better legislation from the steering committee."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Who are the steering committee?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not surprised that the gentleman from Virginia asks that, because half of our majority colleagues on the Republican side of the House do not even know who they are, and were I to disclose their identity, and thus dispel some of the awful mystery surrounding them, such leaders might lose some of the power of their bull-whip; but we know what they are and why they are when we have legislation like this crammed down the throats of willing Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I wish I had more time, but I can not yield. There are some things to which I want to call attention. If there was a desire on the part of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and his invisible committee to accomplish real economies, why does he not have the Naval Affairs Committee look into a proper reorganization of our Navy? Does the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming know that if he were to go out to a battleship to-day in one of our harbors and advise the petty officer meeting him that he must see the captain of that ship, how long it would take him to see him? Does he know how many splendid young men of our country would have to act as flunky go-betweens for the petty officers and lower-commissioned officers and high-commissioned officers and run hither and thither back and forth before he could get to the captain of that ship? Our naval officers have entirely too many white American servants in uniform waiting upon them, whose salaries are paid by the Government, and whose services are wholly unnecessary. They should be dispensed with and this money saved.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BLANTON was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Michigan yielded to me his one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one minute.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It should be passed, and I hope it will be passed by the unanimous vote of the House, because it is desperately needed. The committee were in favor of including the commissioned officers from ensign to captain, and had authorized a report of such a bill, but we could not get consideration of that bill, and this is all we could get consideration for, and we are taking the best that we can get. It should be adopted, because for lack of it the Navy is in a desperate condition as to its enlisted personnel. If an opportunity ever offers for increasing the pay of the officers during these abnormal times, I shall support it, and I hope this House will agree to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I shall be glad to yield if I have the time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my name has been mentioned several times in connection with this legislation, I ask unanimous consent that I have two minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should have gotten that permission from the Rules Committee, and I object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken, Mr. BLANTON demanded a division.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. In order to help out the membership, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. As many as are in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill will, when their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 314, nays 9, not voting 105, as follows:

YEAS—314.

Ackerman	Ellsworth	Kreider	Porter
Andrews, Md.	Elston	Lampert	Pou
Andrews, Nebr.	Emerson	Langley	Purnell
Ashbrook	Esch	Lanham	Radcliffe
Ayres	Evans, Mont.	Lankford	Rainey, Ala.
Babka	Evans, Nev.	Layton	Rainey, H. T.
Baer	Fairfield	Lea, Calif.	Rainey, J. W.
Barbour	Fisher	Lee, Ga.	Raker
Barkley	Flood	Lehlbach	Ramsey
Bee	Focht	Lesher	Ramseyer
Begg	Fordney	Linthicum	Randall, Calif.
Bell	Frear	Little	Randall, Wis.
Benham	Freeman	Lonergan	Rayburn
Benson	French	Longworth	Reavis
Black	Fuller, Ill.	Luce	Rhodes
Bland, Ind.	Gallagher	Lufkin	Ricketts
Bland, Mo.	Gandy	Luhring	Riddick
Bland, Va.	Ganly	McAndrews	Riordan
Boies	Gard	McArthur	Robinson, N. C.
Box	Garland	McDuffie	Robsion, Ky.
Brand	Garner	McFadden	Rodenberg
Briggs	Glynn	McGlennon	Rogers
Brinson	Godwin, N. C.	McKenzie	Rose
Brooks, Pa.	Goldfogle	McKiniry	Rouse
Browne	Goodwin, Ark.	McKinley	Rowe
Browning	Green, Iowa	McLane	Rubey
Brumbaugh	Greene, Mass.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rucker
Buchanan	Griest	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sanders, Ind.
Burke	Griffin	MacCrate	Sanford
Butler	Hadley	MacGregor	Schall
Byrnes, S. C.	Hardy, Colo.	Madden	Sears
Byrns, Tenn.	Hardy, Tex.	Magee	Sells
Campbell, Kans.	Harreld	Maher	Sherwood
Campbell, Pa.	Hastings	Major	Shreve
Cannon	Haugen	Mansfield	Sims
Cantrill	Hawley	Mapes	Sinclair
Carew	Hays	Mays	Sinnott
Carss	Heflin	Mead	Small
Chindblom	Hernandez	Merritt	Smith, Idaho
Clark, Mo.	Hersey	Michener	Smith, Ill.
Classon	Hersman	Miller	Smith, Mich.
Cleary	Hickey	Minahan, N. J.	Smithwick
Coady	Hicks	Mondell	Snell
Cole	Hoch	Montague	Snyder
Collier	Hoey	Mooney	Stedman
Connally	Holland	Moore, Ohio	Steenerson
Costello	Houghton	Moore, Va.	Stephens, Ohio
Crago	Howard	Moores, Ind.	Stevenson
Cramton	Hulings	Morgan	Strong, Kans.
Crisp	Hull, Iowa	Morin	Strong, Pa.
Cullen	Husted	Mott	Summers, Wash.
Currie, Mich.	Hutchinson	Mudd	Sumners, Tex.
Curry, Calif.	Igoe	Murphy	Sweet
Dale	Ireland	Neely	Swope
Dallinger	James	Nelson, Mo.	Taylor, Ark.
Darrow	Johnson, Ky.	Nelson, Wis.	Taylor, Colo.
Davey	Johnson, Miss.	Newton, Minn.	Taylor, Tenn.
Davis, Minn.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newton, Mo.	Thomas
Davis, Tenn.	Jones, Pa.	Nichols, Mich.	Tillman
Dempsey	Jones, Tex.	Nolan	Tilson
Denison	Juul	O'Connell	Timberlake
Dickinson, Mo.	Kearns	O'Connor	Tincher
Dickinson, Iowa	Keller	Ogden	Tinkham
Donovan	Kelley, Mich.	Oldfield	Vaile
Dooling	Kelly, Pa.	Osborne	Venable
Doremus	Kendall	Overstreet	Vestal
Doughton	Kennedy, Iowa	Padgett	Vinson
Dowell	Kettner	Paige	Voigt
Dunbar	Kincheloe	Park	Volstead
Dunn	King	Parker	Walsh
Dyer	Kinkaid	Parrish	Walters
Eagan	Kitchin	Pell	Watson
Echols	Kleczka	Peters	Weaver
Edmonds	Knutson	Phelan	Webster
Elliott	Kraus	Platt	Welty

Wheeler	Wilson, Ill.	Woods, Va.	Young, Tex.
White, Kans.	Wilson, La.	Wright	Zihlman
White, Me.	Wingo	Yates
Williams	Wood, Ind.	Young, N. Dak.

NAYS—9.

Blanton	Good	Huddleston	Sisson
Clark, Fla.	Goodykoontz	Quin	Steagall
Dominick

NOT VOTING—105.

Almon	Evans, Nebr.	Kiess	Siegel
Anderson	Ferris	Larsen	Slemp
Anthony	Fess	Lazaro	Smith, N. Y.
Aswell	Fields	McClintic	Steele
Bacharach	Foster	McCulloch	Stephens, Miss.
Bankhead	Fuller, Mass.	McKeown	Stiness
Blackmon	Gallivan	McPherson	Stoll
Booher	Garrett	Mann, Ill.	Sullivan
Bowers	Goodall	Mann, S. C.	Tague
Britten	Gould	Martin	Temple
Brooks, Ill.	Graham, Pa.	Mason	Thompson
Burdick	Graham, Ill.	Monahan, Wis.	Towner
Burroughs	Greene, Vt.	Moon	Treadway
Caldwell	Hamill	Nicholls, S. C.	Upshaw
Candler	Hamilton	Oliver	Vare
Caraway	Harrison	Olney	Ward
Carter	Hayden	Reber	Wason
Casey	Hill	Reed, N. Y.	Watkins
Christopherson	Hudspeth	Reed, W. Va.	Welling
Cooper	Hull, Tenn.	Romjue	Whaley
Copley	Humphreys	Rowan	Wilson, Pa.
Crowther	Jacoway	Sabath	Winslow
Dent	Jefferis	Sanders, La.	Wise
Dewalt	Johnson, Wash.	Sanders, N. Y.	Woodyard
Drane	Johnston, N. Y.	Saunders, Va.
Dupré	Kahn	Scott
Eagle	Kennedy, R. I.	Scully

So, two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. WISE.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. WATKINS.

Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. FOSTER with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont with Mr. DRANE.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. DUPRÉ.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. JACOWAY.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. TEMPLE with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. TILSON with Mr. MOON.

Mr. TOWNER with Mr. MANN of South Carolina.

Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. Pending that, I ask the gentleman from Virginia how long he desires for general debate?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have had demands over here for two hours' time. I suggest two hours on a side.

Mr. PORTER. That will be satisfactory to us. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

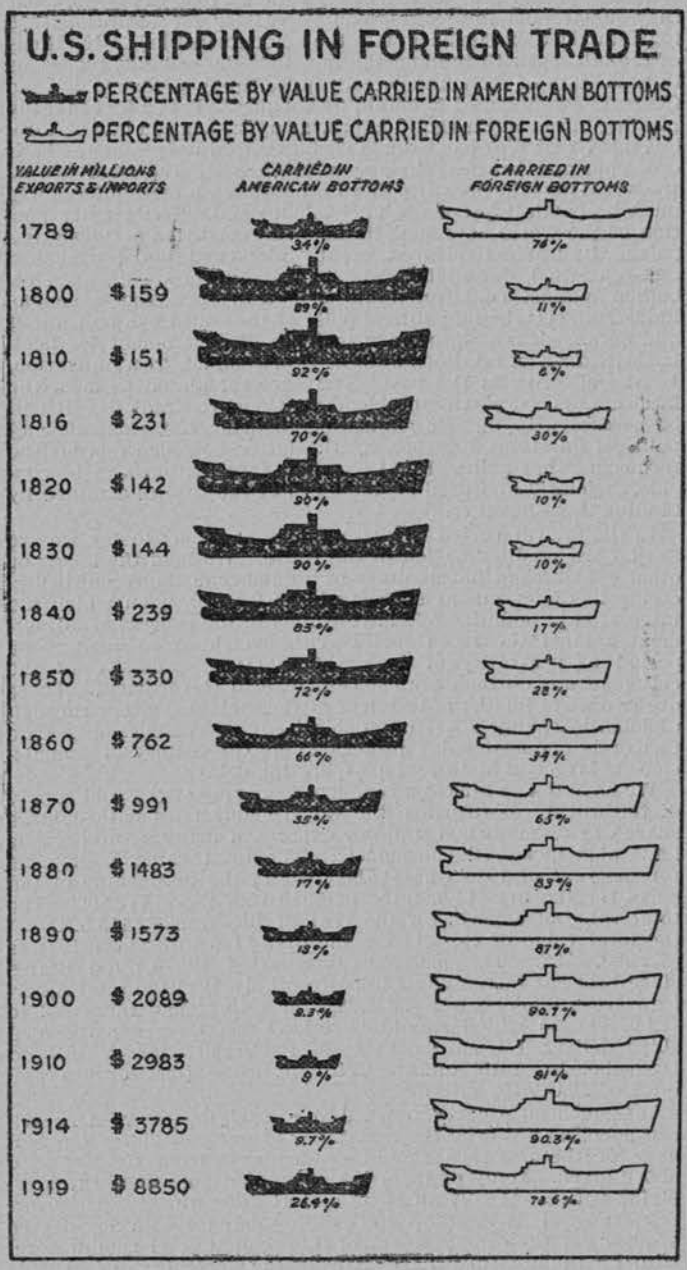
Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, the pending appropriation bill provides for the expenditure of $8,843,037.91 for the payment of expenses of our foreign intercourse during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. It is $1,122,073.76 less than the appropriation for the current fiscal year and $3,070,125 less than the estimates submitted by the department. If there be added to this amount the deficiency bills so far passed for this service, amounting to $844,140.28, there will be a total of $1,966,214.04 less expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in case there is no deficiency legislation.

Your committee realizes fully the necessity of rigid enonomy and has cut the department estimates to a point where further reduction would cripple and weaken the service. It is confident that our foreign intercourse can be carried on according to a high standard of efficiency with the amounts carried in the items of the bill, notwithstanding the fact that the war has placed us in a position of economic potency quite equal to that which the Central Powers hoped to obtain by conquest. It is a fact that the pending bill is larger than the prewar appropriation law of 1915, but this Great War has worked such extraordinary changes, both economic and political, in our relations with the countries of the world that the prewar policy in relation to foreign intercourse must be partially, if not wholly, abandoned. The greater portion of the world now finds its financial condition seriously impaired, its productive forces greatly weakened, and its inhabitants unsettled, dissatisfied, and in many instances in open rebellion against constituted authority; in fact, the economic, industrial, social, and political poise of the world has been upset and deranged. Our present machinery of government for dealing with foreign relations is in need of complete reorganization. It was effective in the past. It is not calculated to meet the intricate and perplexing problems that now confront us. It will be necessary in the reorganization to bring the economic and political questions together, as the latter now depends on the former, so that political and economic information may be considered jointly and used on the basis of the results attained by binding them together.

In the prewar period we were a debtor nation; to-day we are the largest creditor nation in the world. We hold the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of a number of the recent belligerents in the enormous sum of $10,000,000,000, upon which the interest is in default. We have claims in the process of adjustment against the recent belligerents which arose during our period of neutrality of over $1,000,000,000, exclusive of the claims of our citizens against the Mexican Government. There are two ways for the adjustment of these claims, either through diplomatic channels or the appointment of commissions. The former is unquestionably preferable, as the history of commissions is largely a history of exasperating delays.



We have to-day almost a complete monopoly of the gold supply of the world. We furnish the world's industries with a large share of raw materials, and our exports of manufactured goods have also increased enormously. The total value of imports for the year of 1914 was $1,789,276,001; the total value of imports for the first 11 months of 1919 was $3,523,772,899. The total value of exports for the year of 1914 was $2,113,624,050; the total value of exports for the first 11 months of 1919 was $7,242,045,798. The merchant marine of the United States since 1914 has increased 62.79 per cent. In 1914 the total American gross tonnage was 7,928,688; in 1919 it had increased to 12,907,300, to which should be added 690 Government-owned ships delivered from the close of the fiscal year of 1919 to December 31, 1919, totaling 2,151,852 gross tons, or a grand total of 15,059,152 gross tons.

Inasmuch as American-owned vessels plying between American ports do not need the assistance of our consulates the tonnage of these vessels should be deducted from the estimate above given. Many of them are engaged a part of the time in plying between American ports and at other times in the overseas trade. It is therefore impossible to secure with any degree of accuracy the exact amount of this reduction. I submit herewith an illuminating chart showing the percentage of exports and imports carried in American bottoms since 1789. It is interesting to note that the minimum of 9 per cent was reached in 1910, and that as a result of the war activities it has now increased to 26.4 per cent, and when vessels now under construction by the United States Shipping Board are completed and delivered will reach 40 per cent.

This enormous increase in tonnage of ships flying the American flag which carry the products of our factories and farms to the markets of the world, and these increased exports and imports, add very materially to the duties of our consuls, as a ship seldom stops at a port without receiving assistance of our representative, and they are persuasive evidence against cutting the estimates for consulates more than we have done. The fact that the fees collected at the consulates makes the service largely self-supporting is in itself sufficient justification for the appropriation.

Before the war there was no difficulty about the rate of exchange; to-day the problem is perplexing the ablest financiers of the world. The adjustment of this is undoubtedly more important to us than any other nation, with the possible exception of Great Britain; otherwise we will not be assured of payment for the merchandise which we sell to the people of foreign countries, and our efforts to take advantage of our present opportunities to increase our foreign trade will be wholly thwarted.

In the adjustment of this rate of exchange it may be necessary for us to give assistance to nations which are in financial distress, but I do not think we are justified in making them any more loans. I am perfectly willing to help these nations to walk, but I am not willing to have the already overburdened American taxpayer walk for them. We must impress upon Europe by this stern policy that more work and less bolshevism is the only remedy for her economic and political ills.

War is still going on in Russia and Siberia; Turkey and Mexico are completely disorganized and in a state of ferment and rebellion; and the relations between this country and the Central Powers have not so far been restored.

In the prewar period the peoples of the world were happy, contented, and reasonably prosperous; to-day there is a spirit of unrest that threatens the very foundations of organized society. The United States, with her beneficent government and great wealth, is the only safe anchor for civilization, and if we fail to discharge the plain duty which destiny, perhaps, has placed upon us, civilization may perish from the earth.

Before the war Congress gave little, if any, attention to the ascertainment of political and economic conditions in foreign countries. During the war we spent large sums of money for these purposes and were richly rewarded for our efforts. The appropriation for the emergency fund for the current fiscal year is $700,000. A number of the members of this committee felt that it should remain in this amount, but it was finally agreed to reduce it to the sum of $400,000. It is important, in fact more important, for this Government to keep itself fully informed of the changes now taking place almost daily in the political and economic conditions of many European and Asiatic countries than it was during the period of actual warfare.

The estates of American citizens in China are administered in the United States Court for China. They do not pay an inheritance tax to the Federal Government. Your committee felt it advisable to extend this tax to these estates so that the Government would receive the revenue without regard to the place of death.

These are the considerations which moved your committee to abandon, in part at least, the prewar appropriations and to maintain with material reductions, however, the war appropriations for our foreign intercourse. It may be that the ratification of the treaty of peace will aid in the solution of these great problems, but your committee does not think it prudent or wise to appropriate upon any such assumption. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, should not the gentleman reserve his time?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to distinctly disavow in what I have to say any disposition or desire to attack the Federal reserve banking system as a system. I have always approved the legislation which created that organization. I have always looked upon it as one of the constructive measures of this administration whose contributions to the country in the time of war are almost beyond computation. I have no complaint or quarrel with the system as a system, but I have become convinced in my own mind that many of the agents and employees of the regional banks have started on a policy of oppression toward State banks that can work only disaster. For some time I have been receiving letters from various portions of my own State criticizing the officers and agents of the regional bank at Kansas City in their attempts to control the affairs of the Nebraska State banks. These letters have been more or less infrequent until the last six weeks, since which time scarcely a day has gone by that some one has not written me, some State banker, some officer in some State bank, in respect to the unconscionable conduct of some of the agents and employees of these regional banks. Inasmuch as I am not fully informed I have no desire or intention to discuss the merits of the controversy between them. The matter that I want to bring to the attention of the House is the attempted coercion of the State banks to compel them to adopt a system that the State bankers are not willing to adopt. These State banks are the creation of State legislation. They are answerable only to State law and State authority. There is nothing in the Federal law creating the reserve system that grants any power to the regional banks or the Federal Reserve Board over the conduct of State banks. Yet I have received letters showing that the officers and agents of the regional banks in Kansas City, because some State banker in a small town would not be obedient to their commands, because some bank would not conduct its business in harmony with the ideas of the officers of the Federal reserve bank, have gathered together as high as $41,000 in checks on the bank in a small town and have sent employees to that bank in an automobile and demanded cash on the checks in legal tender. That is an oppression that is likely to close a bank. It amounts almost to a conspiracy to wreck a bank, and it is about time somebody should be prosecuted for that sort of conduct.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Can not the Federal Reserve Board here correct that evil?

Mr. REAVIS. I have written twice to the Federal Reserve Board. I wonder if I may be permitted to read a letter which reached me yesterday?

Mr. GARNER. What reply did the gentleman get from the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. REAVIS. Just the ordinary stereotype reply that the matter would be looked into.

Mr. GARNER. And how long is it since the gentleman wrote?

Mr. REAVIS. Two or three weeks.

Mr. GARNER. This same complaint is coming to other Members of Congress.

Mr. REAVIS. It is almost universal among the Members of Congress. It is coming from all sections.

Mr. GARNER. With reference to the oppression being brought against State banks by these regional banks.

Mr. REAVIS. I want to read a letter which I received yesterday from one of the most prominent bankers of a small State bank in my State. I know nothing of the facts which he relates here, but I have known the gentleman for many years, and any statement of facts he makes I would be willing to vouch for. I shall omit the name of the banker and the institution with which he is connected, because I do not want him to be submitted to further persecution, and also some little personal reference in the letter. Otherwise the letter is as follows:

JANUARY 20, 1920.

Hon. FRANK C. REAVIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We want to call your attention to the arbitrary methods employed by the Federal reserve banks in trying to force all banks to conform to their methods of doing business.

There was a meeting of the State Bankers' Association in Omaha this week, which we attended, and we find that all the bankers of the State are having the same experience. In one town—Pierce, Nebr.—this State, we understand that representatives of the Federal banks saved up enough checks until they had an aggregate of $41,000, and then went up in an automobile and demanded the cash for these checks.

We had a representative of the Federal reserve bank in our own bank within the last two months who told us that he would bring us checks here and in large amounts and he would demand legal tender and he would show us whether we would refuse to do what they wanted us to or not. He tried to browbeat us and said that he would make it hot for us, that they would make us do as they wish. If we employed this method of doing business with our fellow bankers and save up checks and go to a bank and try to force them to pay us the cash for a lot of checks that we had saved up on them, we surely would be liable to the law under a conspiracy act of trying to break the bank, and that is in effect what the Federal reserve bank is trying to do with the State banks who do not conform to their way of doing business.

I am even informed that at Pierce, Nebr., they have a man on the ground trying to start a national bank in order to force the other banks to terms. This is a great situation in free America, where we can have institutions supported by the Federal Government that is going into private business and trying to enforce methods onto other banks by such tactics. We ask that you take this matter up with the proper authorities and call the attention of Congress to the matter.

We are free-born American citizens and object to such methods in any line of the Government or in anyone. It is beginning to be that the Government seems to want to take charge of all our affairs in every way, and we think it is time to call a halt in the matter, not only in this matter of the Federal Reserve Board but in a good many other boards that have been created when there is no necessity of them.

We want the strictest laws against combinations and trusts and the like, and then let the laws of supply and demand take their course. Too many dictators in every line of business being created.

The town of Pierce, Nebr., is a small town, and the bank in the town necessarily must be small.

The conduct referred to with respect to that bank would swamp any small State bank in the Nation; and it was evidently done for that purpose, to coerce and oppress these men until from fear of the consequences they would become obedient to the organization which under the law has no control over them at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I am afraid that I will not have the time.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just want to ask what is the thing that they want them to do? Is not this the situation? Is it not where banks are charging exchange for remitting their own checks that the desire arises, and whenever they will not remit for their own checks without charging exchange the banks who get them for collection are sending them through and making them pay them over the counter?

Mr. REAVIS. I do not know the controversy out of which this arises, but I do know this, that the Federal Reserve System created under the national law has no right legally or morally to coerce and force by oppression a State institution to do their will. I will say further that if such reprehensible conduct is continued I shall do my best to see that legislation ample to protect State institutions is enacted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire an answer from the gentleman. He says they are trying to make them do something. What is the thing they are trying to make them do? Are they trying to get them to remit their own checks, or what is it?

Mr. REAVIS. It is not indicated, but I think the controversy arises from the charging of exchange on checks. I am equally certain the time has come to indicate to the Federal Reserve System that Congress, having in its heart the instincts of fair play, is determined that these State institutions shall not be unnecessarily oppressed by the great Federal banking institutions.

Mr. DENISON. Is not what they are trying to do to compel the State banks to come in under the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. REAVIS. There is no question about it. It is an effort to coerce State banks into a great centralized banking institution under Federal control.

Mr. DENISON. I think if the gentleman will take time to investigate he will find it originates in Washington.

Mr. REAVIS. I am not going to make the charge. I have mentally drawn deductions, but they are merely deductions, and I do not wish to reflect on anybody. But I wish to express my opposition to things of this kind.

Within the last few weeks there has been a special meeting of all the State bankers of my State, a special convention, to consider this very proposition. They have been compelled to employ counsel to defend their right to do business under a State law, and to protect their institutions from oppression and the coercion of the Federal reserve banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by the publication of the letter referred to and the resolutions adopted at a special meeting of all the State bankers of Nebraska, in which are cited the acts of oppression, and from which they desire protection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the resolutions referred to:

Resolutions unanimously adopted at a special meeting of State bankers of Nebraska held at Omaha January 14, 1920.

1. Whereas the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City and its branch at Omaha have served notice upon the State banks of Nebraska, which are nonmembers of the Federal Reserve System, that on January 15 all towns in Nebraska will be listed as par points, irrespective of the consent of the banks in such matter; and

2. Whereas the said Federal reserve bank, through its branch and representatives, has threatened in the event of refusal of the State banks to render the service of remitting for checks without a reasonable compensation to present such items for payment through the express companies or messengers and demand payment thereof in cash at par, and in event of noncompliance with such demand to protest such items; and

3. Whereas the said Federal reserve bank, through its branch and representatives, has held for an unreasonable time (in defiance of well-established usage and custom and in defiance of a decision of the Nebraska Supreme Court that a bank check must be promptly presented) checks on Nebraska State banks until an important aggregate has been accumulated and has then demanded payment in cash through messenger or express company, for the very evident purpose of intimidating and embarrassing payee banks; has in case of refusal to comply with this demand threatened and is now actually attempting to organize national banks in towns already amply supplied with banks whose patrons make no complaint of existing rules and practices; has protested checks which were not legally subject to protest; and in numerous other and undignified ways is attempting to discredit the standing of nonmember banks with their patrons.

4. Therefore be it resolved, That in our judgment such demands and methods are unwarranted by law, a distinct departure from well-established customs, and an unjustifiable invasion of the legal rights of State institutions by the Federal Reserve Board, which has no jurisdiction whatever over State banks.

5. Be it further resolved, That we pledge ourselves to resist in every legitimate way such demands and practices and endeavor to preserve for our institutions the rights guaranteed under the laws of our State.

6. Be it further resolved, That the committee of three appointed by the chairman of this meeting be given full authority to act for the nonmember State banks of Nebraska to carry out their wishes, to employ counsel, to make assessments against said banks to defray any expenses incurred, and to take whatever other action they may deem necessary to secure the relief sought, and to act in cooperation with similar committees in other States.

7. Be it further resolved, That we respectfully request the cooperation of our city correspondents in this matter, and will look with disfavor upon said correspondent banks if they assume an attitude to the contrary.

8. Be it further resolved, That we recommend that all nonmember banks which have agreed to par items for the Federal reserve bank be, and are hereby, requested to recall such agreement promptly.

9. Be it further resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be requested to demand an investigation of the acts and practices of the Federal Reserve Board and their representatives in relation to this matter.

10. Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be mailed to every State bank in Nebraska, the Federal reserve bank, our Representatives in Congress, and the official representatives of State banks in all other States.

11. Be it further resolved, That our thanks be extended to President H. K. Frantz and Secretary William B. Hughes, of the Nebraska Bankers' Association, for making the arrangements for this meeting and to the Omaha banks for the entertainment provided.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAIGE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 411. An act to confer jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the 3d of March, 1919, in the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress, the House of Representatives passed a resolution earnestly requesting the peace conference when passing upon the rights of various peoples to give consideration to the claims of Ireland. At a later date the Senate of the United States adopted a similar resolution. During the consideration of this matter in the House some of you may recall that I opposed its passage and sought to point out that the only probable result of that measure would be to offend a friendly power, and that it would in no wise cause the peace conference to assume jurisdiction of the question of the Irish republic. Of course, all of us now know that that result has come to pass. We now know——

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to know the gentleman's authority for saying the passage of that resolution offended a friendly power. I read a statement from Mr. Lloyd-George in the House of Commons, in which he said that resolution was inoffensive to Great Britain. I do not know, therefore, what friendly power the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that those of us who tried to keep up through the press with the manner in which our action on the resolution was received in Great Britain could not have failed to note in press dispatches that it was not received very graciously by the British press. I do not recall what Mr. Lloyd-George said and I do not take issue with the gentleman from Virginia as to what he said. I perhaps used language a moment ago that was not chosen with due discrimination if I said that it had offended. I should have, perhaps, said that I sought to point out that it was calculated to offend a great power.

But all of us do now know that the passage of that resolution did not have the effect of causing the peace conference to take up the question of Irish independence. One of the results of that action on our part, however, was to give undue encouragement to certain elements within this country who prey upon the credulity and enthusiasm of those groups of our citizens of Irish blood. The peace conference not having given consideration to the Irish question and Great Britain not having immediately recognized the independence of Ireland, we are now confronted in this House with a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], now pending before the Republican Committee on Foreign Affairs, in which it is proposed that Congress shall appropriate money to defray the expenses of a minister and a corps of consuls to the Irish republic.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BROWNE. I wondered why the gentleman termed the Committee on Foreign Affairs as a Republican committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. You are in charge. You are in the majority.

Mr. BROWNE. You are a member of it, are you not?

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure I am, but I do not control the committee. If the gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to disavow the fact that the majority is in control in this House and in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as it is in every other committee of this House, I shall be quite willing to put that disavowal into truth after the next election.

Mr. BROWNE. The practice has been for Republican committees to be nonpartisan, but I see that the gentleman thinks that a committee is either Republican or Democratic from his partisan view.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Wisconsin is unduly sensitive about this matter. I want to say to him and to others that, while I am frank to confess that I can not, except with great difficulty, believe that a Republican Congress is seriously considering the question of the passage of the bill, yet I am convinced that it is being sought by the majority party now, as it has been sought in the past, to try to make those portions of our citizenship which are of Irish blood believe that the Republican Party is in favor of the bill. A very unusual proposition is here presented. We are urged to send an ambassador to the republic of Ireland, and by so doing to recognize the putative Irish republic as a functioning and operating government. We are solemnly asked to officially challenge the authority and Government of Great Britain in so far as they apply to the island of Ireland. It is proposed that the Congress of the United States, speaking for the American people, shall say to Great Britain that the United States no longer recognizes Ireland as a part of the British dominions, but that henceforth our Government shall transact its diplomatic intercourse affecting matters pertaining to Ireland not through the ambassador at London but through a diplomatic representative at Dublin.

This remarkable proposal is seriously suggested just as we are laying aside our arms so recently employed in the greatest conflict that ever shook the foundations of ordered society or taxed all the resources and energies of republican governments and in which our own efforts were linked with those of Great Britain. I can not believe that the Congress will, and I know that the people of the United States do not, look with approval upon this unfortunate and mischievous measure.

The real temper and purpose of the more prominent protagonists of this bill may be ascertained somewhat from the attitude of Judge Cohalan of New York, who appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the hearings shortly before Christmas. While I said a moment ago that I could not seriously believe that the Republican House would undertake to pass this measure, yet the very fact that for two days the committee held open hearings on the bill has given weight to the suspicion that the Republican Party is seeking to create the impression among the Irish citizenship of this country that it sympathizes with the bill.

Judge Cohalan, while before the committee, was interrogated. I asked him questions, and as a result the following dialogue took place:

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask you this further question, as an American citizen: Supposing we should pass this resolution and Great Britain should take offense at it, and our action should eventuate in war; as an American citizen, would you be willing for America to go to war to maintain the freedom of Ireland?

Judge COHALAN. In any contingency, whether we were weak or strong, when a situation has been presented to the American people that appears to them to be just, I have never found any red-blooded American citizen who was not in favor of doing that which would maintain justice, even though it would bring war. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Then, I understand you to answer my question in the affirmative?

Judge COHALAN. Undoubtedly, under those circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY. That you are willing for the United States, if her action in this regard should eventuate in war with Great Britain—that you are in favor of going to war with Great Britain to liberate Ireland?

Judge COHALAN. I will put it this way——

Mr. CONNALLY. My question was very direct.

Judge COHALAN. I am going to answer squarely, yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Judging from the applause, there was not any question about what the audience took my question to imply.

Judge COHALAN. I am going to answer your question, and there will not be any doubt as to my reply. At this time, from conditions over there and from a close study of English history and from a knowledge of what confronts the ruling class of Great Britain to-day, when they are almost face to face with internal revolution, when the masses are demanding not only a share in the Government, but control of the Government, as they never have at any previous time, I say that, in my opinion, we would never be faced with any such contingency as that; but in the face of that I insist and reiterate that, as an American citizen, I would be in favor absolutely of doing that which was just. [Applause.]

It will be noted that when at last Judge Cohalan was held to make answer to the specific question as to whether he would be willing for the United States to risk the issue of war with another power to serve the Irish cause he unblushingly, though reluctantly, admitted that to be the opinion to which he held. While this Irish patrioteer remains here at home safe and secure, he avows it to be his will that American boys shall die on the high seas and their bodies be devoured by the monsters of the deep, or that others of them shall die in cold and cheerless trenches, or that others may bake and bleach on burning battle fields, if his own political purposes may be served here in America. He is perfectly willing and seems to view without alarm the fact that by his incitement brave and rash Irishmen in Ireland may rise in riot, only to meet useless and tragic death. If he here in America may ingratiate himself into the confidence and the affection of the Irish voters, may appeal to their imagination as the apostle of Irish freedom, he is indifferent as to possible consequences.

A short time ago the press carried a statement that Mr. Eamon de Valera, advertised as the "president of the Irish republic," would speak in the city of Washington. I heard his utterances on that occasion. I heard him, in attempting to repel the charge that certain elements in Ireland had been unfriendly to the cause of the Allies, undertake to deny it, but in doing so he used substantially the following language:

Ireland was at war with but one nation. That was the one with which she had been at war for 750 years.

Let us for a moment analyze the language which was thus employed. It can not be doubted that if "Ireland was at war with but one nation," then she was, at least in spirit, at war. Was she at war with the German Empire or with Austria-Hungary, or with Bulgaria, or with Turkey? It could not have been with one of these powers, for neither of them has for 750 years been at war with Ireland. There can be no escape from the conclusion that Ireland, at least in spirit—the Ireland of Mr. de Valera and the "republic" of which he is the putative president, not the Ireland of all the Irish people, but this Ireland of which he pretends to be the titular head—was hostile to the success of Great Britain in the struggle which has just come to a close.

If the Irish republic of Mr. de Valera was at war with Great Britain, she was hostile to our own purposes, because both in the test of battle on sea and in the clash of arms on land our interests were the interests of the Allies; our allies were Great Britain's allies, our friends were her friends, and her enemies were our enemies. And this, according to the "president of the Irish republic," was the attitude of those whom he represents. I am informed that the "president," De Valera, is an American citizen. If so, he values very lightly that proud status.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I would like to know if he has ever taken the oath of allegiance to the British Government?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not informed. The gentleman will have to ask some one else about that. But in so far as the matter affects my own convictions as to what this Congress should do, it is a matter of indifference whether he is a native-born expatriate or still an American citizen. In either event he sets little value on the citizenship he once enjoyed if he does not now enjoy it. He is willing to alienate and expatriate himself and surrender a status which usually proudly confers privileges greater than under any flag that flies, and is willing to become an alien in fact as well as he is in thought.

Some days ago a statement appeared in the public press to the effect that a campaign had been launched in New York for the purpose of floating a $10,000,000 bond issue for the "Irish republic." From the enthusiastic and credulous people of Irish blood, with their passions aroused by oratory and dramatics, these funds will be carefully collected, no doubt. It is not beyond the range of probability, however, that they will be expended in propaganda and in the exploitation of self-appointed leaders here in the United States. Mr. de Valera, as long as he is in the United States as an individual, as long as he respects the laws of this country and those considerations which should be suggested by the hospitality which he enjoys, is welcome, but when he parades himself around over this country pretending to be the "president of the Irish republic" he shows a lack of consideration for our own national interests and welfare. He is willing that we suffer embarrassment in order that reality may be given to his flimsy dreams, that his "presidency of the Irish republic" may be transmuted into actuality.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does the gentleman believe that there is any action that could be taken by our own Government with reference to the activity of the "president of the Irish republic," or, in other words, is the thing that he is doing here, which you may say is against the interests of a friendly power, of such a nature that the executive part of our Government should take cognizance of it?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would say to the gentleman from Indiana that that is a legal question which I have not had occasion to examine, and I am sure that the gentleman from Indiana, on account of his scholarship, is quite as well if not better prepared to examine that question than the gentleman from Texas.

Now, let no one go from this presence with the statement on his lips that I am lacking in appreciation of the many admirable attributes of the Irish race. I am not forgetful of the generous and chivalric nature of that brave people. With a spirit and recklessness that excite the wonder of all men, they have struggled and died for what they have conceived to be their rights. Ireland's sons have with pen and sword inscribed their glory and heroism on every glowing page of modern history. Her sons have played a large and noble part in the making of America, while others have shed imperishable luster upon the British realm and have generously contributed of their genius to the improvement of her institutions. Her poets and playwrights have charmed the readers of the English language, and her orators at the bar and in Parliament have marvelously persuaded the reason and stirred and swayed the emotions. In sharp and striking contrast to the conduct of Cohalan and De Valera in America was the action of thousands of patriotic Irishmen in Ireland who volunteered and fought courageously in the armies of the Allies. It is pleasing to turn from the pictures of the former to look upon the gripping chapters of some of the most desperate engagements and campaigns of the war and to see written there in large letters the exploits and achievements of men of Irish blood. To them and to their valor we cheerfully accord an abundant measure of admiration.

I also embrace this opportunity to give assurance that I am no apologist for British rule in Ireland in the past. There can be no question of the unfortunate methods which have often been employed by Great Britain in dealing with that people. However, the British Parliament and ministers, prompted by their own national interests, seem disposed to devote their best energies to a solution of the Irish question. It is said that the land act of 1903 has realized much of Parnell's dreams and has enabled the Irish farmers to purchase their land upon most favorable terms. While Great Britain is striving to bring to bear the best thought of the Empire to devise a plan of political autonomy for Ireland, no true friend of the Irish serves her well by inciting revolution and riot which can but bring tragedy and despair." Ireland, perhaps, if left alone by the agitators and strife breeders beyond her borders, who during the strife, the revolution, and riot which their efforts may bring about, may be trusted to remain safely out of the zone of fire, might realize home rule through the establishment of two parliaments coordinated and unified by a supreme council of Ireland. She might attain a dominion form of government similar to that of Canada or Australia, and while enjoying self-rule would lose nothing of her security by the protection of the British flag.

Under this state of affairs the real friend of the Irish people serves them poorly, and the real American serves America poorly, when he seeks, either intentionally or by incitation, which in its indirect effects may have the same result, to incite turbulence and terror among the Irish people.

Aside from the other angles from which this matter may be viewed, politics is playing a dominant part. The Republican Party has been, and is now, I believe, seeking to insinuate itself into the good graces of those elements of foreign extraction among whom it is believed that there still lingers an affection for foreign lands. I believe that for some time there has been an attempt to foment among them a dissatisfaction and a discontent with the manner in which our international affairs have been handled, for the sinister purpose of capitalizing that discontent in the impending election.

Now, you will perhaps recall that—not by direct statement but by implication and insinuation—those elements of our citizenship who are of Italian blood have been given to understand that the peace congress did not solve in a fair and proper manner the question of Fiume, and that within the party which is now in power in this House may be found their only friend. The Greek voters of the United States have been informed—not in black and white statement, perhaps, but nevertheless just as effectively informed—that Greece was not accorded as large a share of territory out of the spoils of victory as was her due. And even those of our citizens who are of German extraction were told in the Senate of the United States only a little while ago by a Senator of the same political persuasion as the majority of this House that the terms of peace, as imposed by the treaty, were too onerous; that they bore too heavily upon their kindred across the sea; and that complaint came from those who only a little while before the terms of peace had been made known had been clamoring for the most exacting terms, for a dictated peace—one that should grind the vanquished into the very dust.

And now, last and largest, because they have the most votes, the Irish are told that at Paris Ireland did not get its freedom, and by hints and nods and shrugs and winks they are insidiously urged to believe that the Republican Party is the party that wears the shamrock and the green nearest its heart. Gentlemen on the Republican side of the House, why do you not keep your implied promise to the Irish and bring out this bill and pass it or else do your duty and kill it, so that there may be no doubt as to where this Congress stands on that measure? [Applause.] Oh, do not be deceived. Why does not that wonderful, noiseless, rubber-tired, ball-bearing steering committee of yours——

A MEMBER. Some one suggests "bearing." [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, I know that it is bearing; not perhaps that which it ought to bear, but it is bearing nevertheless. Why does not that committee "that bloweth where no one listeth and no man knows whence it cometh or whither it goeth"—why does not that committee say something to its waiting and docile servitors so that you may know what to do with this measure? Has it come to pass that the telephone and the telegraph wires are down? Can you not get any communication from that magic man, Will Hayes, that political prestidigitator, from whose radiant personality comes that which the Republican House of Representatives is required to pass—this wonderful potentate, who both forecasts and recasts Republican legislative action? Oh, why do not you let the Irish know? Why do not you let the American public know what is to be done with this bill, introduced by a lifelong Republican and pending in the Foreign Affairs Committee since the 27th day of last May? Oh, dear Irish friends, do not be deceived. They want your votes. To kill this bill would disillusion you. Do not you see, dear friends? Nothing can be done now. Oh, dear American public, do not you see that they want your votes also? They need your votes also. Can not you see that they can do nothing now? Wait. Wait only a little while. To kill this bill as they should would disillusion you. Now, both dear friends, can not you see why it is necessary to wink and smile and hint and nod and shrug and hoodwink both of you? [Laughter.]

So far as I am concerned, I repudiate and denounce appeals to class and faction in our land. Are we Americans legislating here for America or are we mere traffickers in votes, afraid to act upon a measure of this kind for fear it might offend some element of our citizenship or afraid that it might not be politically expedient?

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman repudiate and renounce the slogan, "He kept us out of war," which his party put forward in 1916 to catch the German vote?

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman wants to know if we renounce the slogan of 1916 that "He kept us out of war," and he says that was done to catch the German vote. No; I will tell you who renounced that. In the fall of 1918, in the congressional election, the Republican Party, of which the gentleman from Minnesota is the whip on that side of the House, renounced that doctrine and appealed to our citizenship, to every element that was dissatisfied with the declaration of war and with the conduct of the war—silently, perhaps, so far as the public was concerned, but nevertheless effectively—and in 1918 the gentleman's party received the advantage of the vote of every voter in this country who was dissatisfied with the declaration of war and with its conduct to which appeal could be made, and you capitalized it. Then, having learned to capitalize such elements of our citizenship, you are seeking to repeat that performance at this time. [Applause.]

If this Republic shall ever perish—and in the Providence of God may it always survive—it will probably fall through class strife, through the conflict of the classes, industrial or social or racial classes, or groups who view the whole question of the life or the death, of the survival or the dissolution of our system from the narrow and selfish horizon of their own supposed welfare, those whose views are so contracted by class or race as to preclude that broader vision of the welfare of the whole Nation.

As Representatives we do not possess the right to vote away the treasure and the lives of our countrymen as caprice or fancy or political expediency may dictate. There must exist some cause sufficient in law and morals to justify such a course. You and I are trustees for those vast powers, and for their keeping we are solely responsible. I can not view with patience an attempt to place my country in the attitude which the passage of this bill would inevitably create. I shall not needlessly affront our ally and cobelligerent. We shall neither fawn nor be afraid in her presence, but we can not withhold respect for her wonderful people and her vast contribution to civilization. While I should not surrender the least of our rights or compromise in the slightest degree our dignity to meet any demand on her part, I should not deny to her the same respectful treatment which I expect to always demand that she accord my own country. Still less am I constrained to do that which might be construed as an unfriendly and impertinent act that, if performed by her toward us, would rouse all the latent defiance of outraged pride.

Our country for more than 140 years has inspired and quickened throughout the world aspirations for liberty and self-government. She has not wrought that great result by meddling and interfering in the affairs of other nations, but by the example which she has set of justifying the claim to self-government, by vindicating the power of the people to govern themselves.

Her influence has reacted upon even the archaic monarchies of Europe and has brought to the peoples of England and France and Italy, of Spain, and at last of Germany and Austria, a large portion of liberty and a greater share in their governments. May that policy be pursued in the years to come, except where treaty obligations or clear and unmistakable national interests of our own make another course necessary or advisable.

Though we have just stepped from the stage of a frightful struggle with the world acclaim of victory still ringing in our ears, and while all about us the earth heaps its gratitude that our strength turned defeat into triumph and the night into glorious day; while the whole world, yet suffering from the agonies of that terrible conflict and her festering wounds, still feverish and inflamed, vividly recall the anguish and wretchedness which she has so lately suffered, earnestly longs for a peace that shall last; as we stand peering into the vast no man's land before us, we can not push our listening posts nor can we scatter our patrols far enough to discover all of the dangers that await us or all of the abysses of woe into which the passions of men or military or racial ambitions of nations may seek to plunge our country. While I trust that the pathway that lies ahead may never be crossed by a hostile power—that never again may America be summoned to lead her manhood and youth out upon the martial fields to meet the shock of an enemy—if such a time ever does come—whether it be to test our strength with the unnumbered millions of the Far East or whether it be to repel the rising tide of anarchy and chaos set in motion by the disordered and maddened masses of Russia in an effort to engulf us in its pitiless and bottomless depths, I should entertain greater assurance of my country's safety in such a time of terrible trial had I the knowledge that she would enjoy the friendship even, if not the active assistance, of that great people whom I am unwilling to offend by the passage of this bill. Let no one in blindness or zeal for Irish freedom lessen the influence or impair the prestige of America, the one great Nation in whom is found the noblest champion of liberty on the globe.

Mr. PORTER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to address myself to a bill that has been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee known as the Graham bill, which I believe is one of the most important bills before the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, I am a firm believer in freedom of speech and of the press and free assemblage. Free speech and freedom of the press are essential to democracy. Without these three great safeguards representative government would be impossible. I am opposed to the Graham bill, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, and whose advocates are now asking for a special rule to bring it before Congress, because I believe it to be an unjustifiable assault upon the rights and integrity of the press and the American people. Freedom of speech and of the press was realized after years of valiant fighting. In England King James denied the right of freedom of speech even in the Parliament. The American Colonies were denied freedom of speech, which was one of their greatest grievances against the English Government.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY AND FREEDOM OF SPEECH GUARANTEED.

The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed at the first meeting of the first Congress, on March 4, 1789, reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble.

The makers of the Constitution regarded freedom of speech and of the press as of such great importance to a free people in the maintenance of their freedom that they placed the right of freedom of speech and of the press beside the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience.

SUFFICIENT LAWS ON THE SUBJECT.

My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that the existing sedition laws, which were placed on the statute books during the Civil War, are sufficient to meet present-day conditions. If they are not, they can be easily amended without repealing them and without endangering the sacred rights guaranteed us by the Constitution. It should also be remembered that each State has laws upon this subject to meet their own conditions.

The overwhelming majority of the American people believe in our institutions that have withstood the attacks of agitators for over a century. The United States has grown and prospered as no other nation ever has without the drastic censorship proposed by the Graham bill. Our institutions have grown stronger and, in my opinion, there has never been a time when the enthusiastic love of country was as general and spontaneous among the people as it is to-day. This was shown by the acquiescence to all laws, orders, and even suggestions promulgated during the war, and in the willingness of the people to aid in the various war activities.

DRASTIC SEDITION LAWS FAIL.

The only other time that freedom of speech or of the press or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble has been seriously questioned in the United States was by the passage of the alien and sedition laws in 1798. This legislation was quickly repealed, and the old Federalist Party, through whose efforts the law was passed, was swept from power forever by an indignant people.

The United States laws on the subject of sedition are taken from the Federal Penal Code of 1910, under Crimes, chapter 1, page 6.

Section 4, inciting, and so forth, rebellion or insurrection:

Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authorities of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years or fined not more than $10,000, or both; and shall, moreover, be incapacitated from holding any office under the United States.

Page 7, section 6, seditious conspiracy:

If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

The States all have statutes on the subject applicable to their conditions. Under our existing laws the anarchists, the communists, and the dangerous radicals have made very little headway in the last 50 years. In fact, the dangerous radical has made fewer converts in the United States than in any other country in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a newspaper or a public speaker advocates the overthrow of this Government by force and violence, does the gentleman hold that that is a proper exercise of a constitutional prerogative?

Mr. BROWNE. I think that would be a violation of law, and I think it would come properly under our existing sedition laws.

Mr. BLANTON. The Attorney General says that he needs further law to meet the present emergency.

Mr. BROWNE. I read the statement of the Attorney General.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know that copies of such publications as this one entitled Freedom, a journal of constructive anarchy, which preaches anarchy, and the violent overthrow of this Government, are to-day and have been for months circulated through our mails, in the very face of the law of our country, and that under the present law our Government is powerless to stop it? Is the gentleman willing to have such a condition exist in this Government, where the Attorney General and the other law-enforcing officials of the Government have to be guarded to prevent their assassination in their home country of the United States? Is the gentleman willing to let that go on?

Mr. BROWNE. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say that I am giving the law as it exists now in the United States and in the several States, and that I think those laws, if they are enforced as they should be, will cover such cases. Now, I understand the Attorney General himself is quoted in the papers as not favoring this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But he does favor a sedition law.

Mr. BROWNE. I am not speaking against sedition laws. We have got to take up and discuss them as they are reported by the committee. There is too much general talk on both sides. I hold that when we pass a sedition law here we should weigh each word carefully, and not simply do as they used to do on the frontier, set a gun in the front yard to keep out robbers, and shoot friends and robbers alike. We want to protect ourselves against anarchists, but we want also to protect our own people in a free and fair discussion and criticism of our Government. [Applause.] That is the position I take.

Our existing laws have been interpreted by our courts; the meaning of every word has been determined by the decisions of our highest courts. To change these laws and place in their stead new criminal statutes with the death penalty attached to their violation would have a tendency to bully and intimidate the American people, so that they would not dare to enter upon a fair discussion of our Constitution, the laws on our statute books, and the acts of an administration in power.

DEATH PENALTY.

Notwithstanding a very considerable number of the States have abolished capital punishment, this section of the law provides for the death penalty for its violation. It further provides that anyone is guilty of the violation of the law who sets on foot or assists in the use of force or violence. Under section 6, a person might not be guilty of using force himself, but by means of propaganda or speech might be said to set on foot or assist. Such persons would be subject to the death penalty if convicted of violating this section.

Section 2 is subject to the same criticism.

Section 3 provides that no person shall orally or by writing, printing, or the use of any sign, symbol, picture, caricature, or otherwise teach, incite, advocate, propose, or advise, or aid, abet, or encourage forcible resistance to the Government of the United States, its Constitution, laws, and authority, or the government of the several States, all or any of them, or the existence of constituted governments generally or defend * * * the injury or destruction of public or private property as a means of changing the Constitution, laws, or Government of the United States or defeating the authority thereof.

The above section is very broad and quite ambiguous. It contemplates that a person might by sign, symbol, picture, caricature abet or encourage forcible resistance to the Government of the United States and its authority or the existence of constituted government generally.

Under this statute a jury would have the right to pass upon the question of whether a picture or cartoon did not abet or encourage forcible resistance to the Government of the United States or the authority of the United States, or the existence of constituted governments generally. I do not know what is meant by the existence of constituted government generally the way it is intended in this statute. It can not mean the Government of the United States, because that has already been designated. It must therefore mean municipal, township government, or it might even mean a foreign Government.

I want in that connection to read an extract from May's Constitutional History of England, volume 2, page 2001:

Let us now examine the general results of the long contest which had been maintained between the ill-regulated, mischievous, and often criminal struggles of the people for freedom, on the one hand, and the harsh policy of repression maintained by the Government, on the other. The last 28 years of the reign of George III formed a period of perilous transition for liberty of opinion. While the right of free discussion had been discredited by factious license, by wild and dangerous theories, by turbulence and sedition, the government and legislature in guarding against these excesses had discountenanced and repressed legitimate agitation. * * * Authority was placed in constant antagonism to large masses of people who had no voice in the Government of their country. Mutual distrust and alienation grew up between them. The people lost confidence in rulers, whom they knew only by oppressive taxes and harsh laws severely administered. The Government, harassed by suspicions of disaffection, detected conspiracy and treason in every murmur of popular discontent.

That is the situation practically to-day in the United States.

I wish now to direct my attention to another section of the Graham bill, and many of these sedition bills are practically the same in regard to a few of these principal features.

Section 3 further provides that no person shall orally or by the use of pictures, caricature, or otherwise, defend the injury or destruction of public and private property. If public property or private property should be destroyed or injured as the result of a labor strike, every person who aided or encouraged the strike or who in any way defended the strikers might be held by a jury to be guilty under section 3 and be subject to a penalty of 20 years' imprisonment.

POSTMASTER GENERAL CENSOR.

Section 6 provides that the Postmaster General shall pass upon every book, magazine, newspaper, sign, symbol, or communication, writing, pictorial, printed matter, and so forth. If the Postmaster General or one of his authorized clerks determine that any letter, paper, magazine, or any other writing that passes through the mail violates this law or makes an appeal to racial prejudices, the intended and probable result of which appeal is to cause rioting or the resort to force and violence within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, he can declare the same nonmailable.

In discussing the powers conferred on the Postmaster General there is nothing personal intended. My remarks are directed against the giving of any person the right to determine without even a hearing what is seditious.

Section 7 of the law provides that any letter, book, magazine, newspaper, document, and so forth, which has been declared nonmailable by the Postmaster General or his clerk shall not be transportable in any other way, by express or by public or private conveyance. This section of the law gives the Postmaster General the right to censor or say what 110,000,000 people shall read. It provides for no trial and no appeal.

This provision of the proposed law is very much more drastic than the espionage law, which was a war measure and was passed with the proviso that it should expire when the war ended. Under the provision of the proposed law any writing which had been passed upon adversely by the Postmaster General could not be circulated in any way. It could not be handed to a person. If the Postmaster General should pass upon a speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD adversely, any person would violate this law who handed the RECORD to a member of his family, or even exhibited it to his attorney to obtain an opinion.

Under the less drastic espionage law the Postmaster General replied to a suit in the Federal court by declaring that "he acted in his uncontrolled discretion and under the law was not accountable to anyone for the justice or effect of his official act."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not the Postmaster General or the Attorney General when Czolgocz got in his work.

Mr. BROWNE. I hold that these people who want to support anarchists and read literature that emanates from cellars and underground places we will have with us always. We have had those people ever since the world existed, just as we have had robbers and murderers, and the law that it is proposed to enact will not eliminate them, for you will have just as many afterwards, and if you read the history of this country you will find that the assassination of our public men has been less than it has been in any other country. Where you find the anarchists thrive the most is in your autocratic government, where your censorship laws are the most drastic.

Mr. BLANTON. But the soviet ambassador of Lenin and Trotski does not occupy the cellars. He occupies one of the most fashionable apartment houses in the city of Washington.

Mr. BROWNE. Then that is the fault of your administration, the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not my fault; it is the fault over here.

Mr. BROWNE. The soviet government of Lenin and Trotski has a censorship on the press, for they are afraid of a revolution. They have a drastic censorship, and the censorship is used by the radicals Lenin and Trotski just as much as it is by the other autocratic governments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BROWNE. I will ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. PORTER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I can furnish the gentleman with a quotation from Abraham Lincoln's first inaugural address and one from an address made by Thomas Jefferson, if he wants it, and I am sure that Attorney General Palmer, with the Graham law in force, could take Jefferson by the nape of the neck and put him in jail if he were on earth to-day. But I understand that he states the Graham law is no child of his department.

Mr. BROWNE. I know that parts of the Declaration of Independence have been considered absolutely unmailable.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman say that he knows that some portions of the Declaration of Independence are unmailable under this law?

Mr. BROWNE. I think that some parts would be under the proposed Graham bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I would like to have the gentleman, in his time, put in those extracts from the Declaration of Independence that, in his judgment, would be unmailable under this law, or any statement of Thomas Jefferson or of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. BAER. I will furnish the gentleman with an editorial from a New York World, wherein it says that Mr. Pulitzer had printed a part of the Declaration of Independence in his yearbook every year, and Mr. Cobb says the World would be absolutely unmailable under the provisions of this law if enacted, and several jurists have told me the same thing.

Mr. BROWNE. Take the part of the Declaration of Independence where it states that whenever any form of government is destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it. Also that clause in the Declaration of Independence states when long abuses and usurpations evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government. I think under the provisions of the Graham bill it would be doubtful whether you could mail the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have not read the Graham bill.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I commend it to the gentleman for his reading before he tries to defend it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am not defending it.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me, in this connection, call your attention to a newspaper extract which I have here stating that a minister of the gospel up in Canada, where they have rather severe censorship laws, but no more drastic than the Graham bill, has been placed in jail for quoting a passage from the Bible.

Canada seems to be afraid of its people and has just passed a drastic censorship law. The other day the Canadian Government had one of its ministers, the Rev. J. S. Woodsworth, indicted for quoting the passages from the Bible:

That is literally true. The indictment upon which Rev. J. S. Woodsworth is being tried reads:

"That J. S. Woodsworth, in or about the month of June, A. D. 1919, at the city of Winnipeg, in the Province of Manitoba, unlawfully and seditiously published libels in the words and figures following:

"'Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievances which they have prescribed; to turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless.' (Isaiah.)

"'And they shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat; for the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.' (Isaiah.)"

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I read a statement some two or three months ago to the effect that if a sedition bill was passed, using the term generally, portions of the Constitution could not be mailed under such a law.

Mr. BROWNE. In whose address was that?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I say that I read it in a New York paper devoted to the cause of the rights of women. The paper went on to state that some New York judge had put a man in prison because he had quoted and circulated in a pamphlet an extract from the Constitution. I wrote to the paper and asked the editors for the proof, and when they were asked for a showdown they could not give anything.

Mr. BROWNE. What paper was that?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not remember the name of the paper, but I think it was the Woman Citizen or something of that kind.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Was it not a part of the Declaration of Independence that was quoted?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; the Bill of Rights.

HARMFUL EFFECTS OF DRASTIC LAWS.

Mr. BROWNE. People have sometimes felt justified in remote, out-of-way places, where robbers were very much more numerous than officers of the law, to set a gun at nightfall in the front yard. Of course, this practice was soon discountenanced. Even conceding that the proposed law would get some anarchists if it is broad and far-reaching enough to convict people who are honestly advocating changes in our laws and criticizing the way our Government is being administered, if it deters the small papers of the country or honest citizens from absolute freedom in the discussion of public questions or in criticizing public officials or the Government, the law would do manifestly more harm than good. The anarchist, or so-called "red," will go down in a cellar and plot against the Government as much after this bill becomes a law as before. These enemies of all government have existed since the establishment of the first government. They exist just the same as robbers and crooks that prey on society. They are criminals, and should be dealt with as such. We should not, in dealing with them, pass laws that will oppress others and maybe drive many honest radicals into their ranks.

It is a significant fact that the more autocratic your Government, the more you censor your press and gag freedom of speech and prevent people peaceably to assemble, the more anarchists you make. The milder class of radicals that are prohibited by drastic laws from speaking through the press or in public places, and who is an enemy of the red anarchist and would not be seen in his company, is driven from his public meeting place to the cellar. Here he meets the anarchist; and, with the feeling that the Government has wronged him, he is a much more easy convert than he would have been if allowed freedom in discussing his views.

I hold no brief for the socialists. I do not believe in their theories, but I do believe that their arguments should be met by arguments and reason and not by police officers and United States marshals. I am not afraid that the American people are going to be carried away by Bolshevism when discussed from the platform. I am not afraid that the American people are going to adopt the theories of the I. W. W. or any organization of its kind.

DANGERS IN REACTION.

There is danger in reaction as well as in radicalism. There can be no more prolific breeder of revolution than the suppression of the people's fundamental liberties.

AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS SECURE.

Our American institutions are secure because the great majority of the people believe in them, and not because Attorney General Palmer and the Department of Justice are attempting to maintain them by force. Free government must forever be the resultant of all the forces that are brought to bear upon it—radical and reactionary, liberal and conservative, revolutionary and bourbon, socialistic and individualistic. When any of these forces is compelled to resort to secrecy the equilibrium is destroyed and the way is open to disaster.

Jefferson said:

Error should be free to be heard as long as reason is left free to combat it.

INTOLERANT SPIRIT ALL OVER THE WORLD.

Our Government, after entering the war to make the world safe for democracy, seems to be joining with Europe in an effort to centralize power and stamp out democracy. Every country that was engaged in the war seems reluctant to give up any of the powers that were given it in the war. Drasti censorship laws are being enacted, the same as they have been after all wars and after autocratic war powers have been exercised by those in authority.

England, although she promised after the war to repeal conscription and her press censorship, still maintains them. England has even suspended the right of trial by jury in Ireland. She allows the arbitrary search of private premises, the suppression of newspapers, forbidding even monthly fairs and farmers' meetings in Ireland. Of course, it takes force to carry out such autocratic policies, and England has over 100,000 British troops in Ireland in attempting to maintain its government by force. Who would believe that this was the Government of which Pitt said:

The poorest man in his cottage may bid defiance to all the force of the crown; it may be frail, its roof may shake, the winds may blow through it, the storms may enter, the rain may enter, but the King of England can not enter; all his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

The inherent sovereignty of the citizen over government was thus pictured by Pitt in words that for over a century and a half have been part of the political heritage of the English-speaking peoples.

SOVIET CENSORS THE PRESS.

In the soviet government Lenin and Trotski, of Russia, censor the press and prohibit freedom of speech to protect the people from what they call revolutionary propaganda.

FREEDOM OF ASSEMBLAGE.

During the steel and coal strikes in Allegheny County, Pa., the authorities forbade two or more men to assemble in the streets. The authorities in many cities have prohibited socialists, nonpartisan league speakers, and others from speaking, and have even driven them out of their cities.

In keeping with the spirit of intolerance, the five socialists elected by a majority of the voters from their respective districts in the State of New York, with their certificates of election signed by the proper authorities, are summarily denied their seats because they hold different political opinions from the majority party of that assembly.

These unjustifiable acts of intolerance cause distrust and shake the people's faith in our Government and make more socialists and radicals than years of propaganda would make.

Democratic platform during the Civil War, adopted in Chicago, Ill., August 29, 1864:

Extracts from the platform adopted by the national Democratic convention in Chicago August 29, 1864.

Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that after four years of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down, and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired—justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to the ultimate convention of the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that, at the earliest practical moment, peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal union of the States.

Resolved, That the direct interference of the military authorities of the United States in the recent elections held in Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and Delaware was a shameful violation of the Constitution, and a repetition of such acts in the approaching election will be held as revolutionary and resisted with all the means and power at our command.

Resolved, That the aim and object of the Democratic Party is to preserve the Federal Union and the rights of the States unimpaired, and that they hereby declare that they consider that the administrative usurpation of extraordinary and dangerous powers not granted by the Constitution—the subversion of the civil by military law in States not in insurrection; the arbitrary military arrest and imprisonment, trial and sentence of American citizens in States where civil law exists in full force; the suppression of freedom of speech and of the press; the denial of the right of asylum; the open and avowed disregard of State rights; the employment of unusual test oaths; and the interference with and denial of the right of the people to bear arms in their defense—is calculated to prevent the restoration of the Union and the perpetuation of a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed.

Resolved, That the shameful disregard of the administration to its duty and respect to our fellow citizens who are now and long have been prisoners of war and in a suffering condition deserve the severest reprobation on the score alike of public policy and common humanity.

Under the proposed law these delegates voting for the Democratic platform of 1864 and whosoever helped circulate it could be convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for 20 years.

HISTORY CONDEMNS CENSORSHIP.

At the time of the French Revolution, when agitators and anarchists were seeking not only to destroy the French Government but every other Government in the world, all the nations of Europe passed drastic sedition laws. Free speech, free press, and the right to peaceably assemble were prohibited. Free speech was prohibited in many legislative bodies by the most drastic censorship laws.

WHAT SOME GREAT AMERICANS SAY ABOUT DRASTIC CENSORSHIP LAWS.

Thomas Jefferson, in 1804, said:

The firmness with which the people have withstood the late abuse of the press and the discernment they have manifested between truth and falsehood shows that they may safely be trusted to hear anything true and false and form a correct judgment between them. Our first object should therefore be to leave open to the people all avenues to truth. The most effectual hitherto found is the freedom of the press.

William E. Channing, of Massachusetts, one of the ablest pulpit orators of his time, stated:

Freedom of opinion, of speech, and of the press is our most valuable privilege, the very soul of republican institutions, the safeguard of all other rights. We may learn its value if we reflect that there is nothing which tyrants so much dread. They anxiously fetter the press; they scatter spies through society, that the murmurs, anguish, and indignation of their oppressed subjects may be smothered in their own breasts; that no generous sentiment may be nourished by sympathy and mutual confidence. Nothing awakens and improves man so much as free communication of thoughts and feelings. Nothing can give public sentiment that correctness which is essential to the prosperity of a Commonwealth but the free circulation of truth from the lips and pens of the wise and good. If such men abandon the right of free discussion; if, awed by threats, they suppress their convictions; if rules succeed in silencing every voice but that which approves them; if nothing reaches the people but what will lend support to men in power, farewell to liberty. The form of a free government may remain, but the life, the soul, the substance is fled. * * *

John Quincy Adams, a champion of freedom of speech, in a speech in 1837 said:

Freedom of speech is the only safety valve which, under high pressure, can preserve your political boiler from a fearful and fatal explosion.

Joseph Story said:

Here shall the press and the people's right maintain,
Unawed by influence and unbribed by gain;
Here patriot truths her glorious precepts draw,
Pledged to religion, liberty, and law.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BROWNE was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

By unanimous consent, Mr. HUDDLESTON was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fate of my friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE], with respect to interruptions during his remarks, I beg that I may not be interrupted. I want to speak upon the same subject to which he addressed himself, the sedition bill.

This is the second time within a few days that I have risen to this subject, and I trust the House will forgive me. I do not want to weary the House, but I am deeply concerned about the matter. I fear that something wrong is about to be done. I love my country too much to be willing to see that any of the things that we regard as fundamental Americanism shall be tampered with.

I try not to be an extremist, but I can not forget why our ancestors fought at Lexington and at Cowpens and at Yorktown. I can not forget the early history of my country; I can not forget the Declaration of Independence and the American Bill of Rights. There seems to be so little attention being paid to this bill by Members of the House, and it has such momentous possibilities and is of such tremendous importance that I am distressed at its imminence.

Speaking upon the passport-control bill in the House on May 4, 1918, at page 6063 of the RECORD, I said:

Democracies find it hard to wage efficient war. When war comes we find that the principles that democracies have long cherished and have bled for are given up one by one, little by little, piece by piece, until at last, if those who concern themselves merely with carrying on the war have their complete will, there will be left no democracy, no liberty, but only autocracy, because autocracy can wage the most efficient war.

I realize that we who love liberty must give up many things that we have cherished, and I am willing to give up mine. I give them up gladly, but I give them up with an awful and sickening fear in my soul that perhaps some of them may never come back to me and to my people.

We gave up many American privileges to win the war. We passed the passport-control bill which forbade an American citizen either to leave his own country, or once away from it to come back, without the permission of the President, under power which might be delegated to some subordinate. We gave up the right to speak our minds freely and say what we thought about the war and matters connected with it. We gave up the right to say whether we would go to war as volunteers or stay at home. There are other rights which we gave up.

While I did not agree to giving up some of these things even temporarily, my judgment was that of the minority, and I cheerfully acquiesced in what was regarded as the emergency of the hour. One reason why I did not agree was because I knew what I said on that day was true—that once you give up a liberty there is danger that you will never get it back again. That has been verified and is being constantly verified.

That same passport-control bill came before my committee again after the war had closed, and a strong effort was made to get it reenacted for peace times without any limit upon the period during which it should be in force. I honor the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it stood against that effort and insisted that a limit should be put upon it, but we were able only after a hard fight to compromise with the other body to put a limit at the time fixed, six months as I recall it, after peace had been finally declared. That law is still in force, though we have had no war for over a year.

The explosives act, which we passed, as anyone who really understands the subject will admit, invaded the police powers of the States, yet a determined and persistent effort was made—and I feel I am not exaggerating when I say that that effort was to a large extent surreptitious—to reenact that law and make it of permanent application. Only the courage of the House defeated that purpose.

We are now having, as is known to every Member of the House, a most determined and powerful effort made to make as a permanent American institution the odious system of conscription of soldiers—conscription for peace, not for war. There is an influential element in this country that wants to carry on in time of peace and as a permanent thing a system of dragging boys by force away from their firesides and putting them in the ranks in time of peace.

In this sedition bill we have an effort to perpetuate in still more distasteful terms, with still more drastic provisions, the harsh terms of the espionage act.

I hope the House will not surrender to these proposals. I hope the House will not allow its sense of true Americanism to be overcome by the temporary hysteria of reaction which is an aftermath of the war. I hope we will stand firm.

NOT A LABOR ISSUE.

There is a disposition upon the part of some to look upon this measure as having peculiar labor aspects, as being a labor issue. That is a very grave mistake. Labor has no particular concern in this bill. Do not be misled, gentlemen, by the coincidence that it happens that the big employers are all for this sedition bill and that labor is all against it. Mr. Gompers has no more concern about this legislation than should be held by any patriotic citizen.

There is nothing about a man being a workingman, or a unionist, for that matter, that has any particular relation to this bill.

It just so happens that one of the planks of the American Federation of Labor is in behalf of free speech. It has had that principle in its platform during its entire existence; it is in there along with some other splendid democratic and humanitarian planks; and I recommend that some Members of the House, who do not seem to understand what the American Federation of Labor stands for, read them some time. There is reason why the American Federation of Labor should stand for democratic principles. Somebody has got to speak for the common man and defend his interest, else he is lost. The common man is the one who is really concerned in democracy; he is the one that needs his liberty defended. The great and powerful always have all the liberty they want. They can take care of themselves. It is the poor and ignortant and obscure who need freedom of speech and the right to think their thoughts and try to make something of themselves. They are the people who should be encouraged. They are the ones who should have the greatest liberty, to strive and to look onward and upward into a higher and better life. The rich and powerful can work out their own destinies. Governments courtesy to them, even as "customs courtesy to kings." This is so because they dominate government by reason of their wealth, intelligence, and education and social and political prestige. Governmental activity is but the manifestation of their will. This is inevitable, whether in oligarchy or democracy.

But this is not a labor question, gentlemen. It is an American question. It has nothing to do with unionism. It has to do with what our ancestors fought for upon the battle fields of the Revolution. Free speech is an essential part of the spirit of Americanism which broods over our country and guides its destiny. Let us not forget it in a moment of hysteria.

WHAT IS THE WORST TREASON?

Too many gentlemen of the House, and this is true also of the public, are inclined to take a mere legalistic view of this and of other similar measures. Many Members are in the same situation as the gentleman who a few moments ago expressed himself with considerable assurance upon the proposition, saying at the same time he had never read the bill. So it was that a gentleman who made a speech the other day saying that he was against sedition; he was against treason. Well, are we not all against sedition? Are we not all against treason? Commonplaces, oratory, protestations, and swelling the bosom over how patriotic we are are of small worth. Let us read the bill and understand it.

What is treason? Ah, the worst treason I know of, my friends, is treason to the principles of Americanism [applause], treason which would betray what our ancestors accomplished by the shedding of their blood. If there be worse treason, I do not know what it is. Of course, we are against sedition and we are against treason. Gentlemen who talk such commonplaces, in their innocence—I will not say ignorance—do not seem to know that we already have laws to punish treason; that we already have laws to punish sedition. We need nothing new for those purposes, and this bill does not give anything new.

Nobody who knows this subject or has studied it will for a moment insist that we have not laws which make it a crime either to actively resist the Government of the United States, its authority, or its laws, or to conspire with anybody else toward that end. If a man undertake to use force against the Government of the United States or its laws or its authority—and that is very broad, gentlemen—there is a law that fits his case exactly. If any two men agree between themselves to do any act of that kind, although that act be not accomplished, we have laws that fit their case exactly. We need nothing more for such cases. And I refer gentlemen who want to look into the subject to sections 5334 and 5336 of the Revised Statutes.

The only thing that this proposed measure acomplishes or is intended to accomplish is to keep a man from saying what he may want to say. It is to prevent speech, either printed or oral. That is the only field for the operation of this statute whatsoever, to keep men from advising others to oppose by force either the Government, the authority of the Government, or any law of the United States.

HOW LAW WOULD OPERATE.

For illustration, if a man should get up on the street corner and say to the bystanders, "An unjust law has been passed by Congress. I advise you to resist it by force, if need be," this statute operates on him and him alone. It is applicable only to cases of that kind, and its sole purpose is to prevent such speeches and other similar acts.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will excuse me, please. I asked at the beginning not to be interrupted, because I really did not have time to say what I want to say.

It operates on him and him alone. Then comes back at me a legalistic gentleman and says, "Are you not opposed to a man saying that?" Now, there are several propositions involved in that question. Of course, I am opposed to him saying that, but it does not follow by any means that I want to put him in the penitentiary for it, or that I would favor passing a law that would do so. I want to be perfectly frank with this House. I would not suppress that man. I would let him say what he wants to say. Nobody need misunderstand me on that point. But that is not the question.

The propriety of passing a law to suppress free speech is not to be decided solely upon the issue of whether a law is needed to forbid some man from doing a thing which he ought not to do. That is not the sole consideration at all. There are other aspects of the matter much more important. One is the expediency of such a law. Should we start out on a program aimed at the freedom of speech? That is the first problem you have got to settle for yourselves. Should we imprison men for saying what they please when and although no consequences whatever result therefrom? Then, if you answer in the affirmative, ask yourself this question, "Is this an opportune time to embark upon that kind of legislation?" The country is at peace, yet we have grave unrest in the country. The unrest at present is almost wholly industrial. There is not one man in 10,000 in the Uuited States who wants to overthrow the Government or has any thought of such, or who wants to change the things that constitute Americanism. And yet, as I said in a speech which I made in the House on December 9 last, industrial unrest may be converted into political unrest by political measures. And when I said that I had in mind just such measures as this, efforts by Government to deal with industrial unrest, not by answering it, not by explaining it away, not by remedying the evils that have caused the unrest, not by doctoring the disease, but by throttling the patient's cries.

WILL AGGRAVATE DISCONTENT.

If there be anybody so simple as to believe that to forbid the expression of discontent is a cure for discontent, then to him I can offer no argument. There is industrial unrest. I deplore it. But it exists and it has its causes. It will in due course pass away, just as such things have in the past. We will forget it. However, if we pass such a law as this, I hope we will not be allowed to forget our action.

Existing popular unrest will pass in due course unless we deal with it in a stupid, blundering way; unless we undertake to suppress it by the iron hand of the Government; unless we change and divert the dissatisfaction which the man feels with his wage, or with his employer, or with the conditions under which he works, or with the profiteer, or with one thing and another that has excited unrest; unless we divert that dissatisfaction from its legitimate object, the employer or the profiteer, and so on, who may be abusing the privileges and opportunities of this country—divert it from him to the Government. By suppressing an expression of that discontent we will take upon the shoulders of our Government the burden of this discontent that is caused in chief by industrial and economic conditions. [Applause.]

Now, if we are going to pass this kind of law, if somebody is so legalistic and abstract that because his attention is called to a field for the operation of an antiforce law, to a gap in the law that ought to be stopped some time, he feels compelled to fill it, I hope he may have balance of judgment enough to wait until a time when it is more opportune, until the industrial and economic pain from which the people are suffering has either run its course or has been remedied in some way. I do not want our Government to take upon its shoulders the burden of the hatred and distrust of everybody who has got a just ground of complaint and dissatisfaction now. Is there anyone who does? I would ask him to consider it most carefully.

ABUSES IN ENFORCING LAW INEVITABLE.

But another thing, gentlemen, that we have got to consider, having passed upon the two preceding points, is, What is going to be the result of this law? How is it going to be enforced? Well, we have had some experience with the enforcement of the espionage act. We have had many convictions under that law. We have had a great many more arrests. The Attorney General's report shows that more than two people were unjustly and wrongfully charged with violating that act to every one who was found guilty under it. For every man who was found guilty more than two were haled into court, put to the expense of trial, and humiliated and made ashamed.

But what about the thousands who did not get into court? What about the terror that was spread over the country? What about the spies? What about honest men and patriotic citizens being made afraid? They did not know their rights; they are not lawyers—they did not know what they could say nor what they could not say. Members of Congress even could not say that. There were in this country thousands and hundreds of thousands of good Americans who suppressed their thoughts, and who were made afraid, and who were spied upon and humiliated and embarrassed because we had this law. The country was filled with busybodies and volunteer spies, who considered themselves patriotic in evesdropping their neighbors and informing upon any who spoke indiscreetly.

What occurred then will occur again. These men who were convicted—who were they? Were they German spies? My information, gentlemen, is that under that espionage act there has not been a single conviction of an enemy agent or a spy or of anybody who tried, either at the instigation of an enemy government or otherwise, to get information for enemy uses. No; it was Americans who were punished. There were only a few people who undertook to do disloyal acts, a very few who undertook such things, scarcely one out of a hundred of those convicted. Nearly all of those convicted were Americans, Americans in spirit and Americans in interest. They were unwise; they had bad taste; they were wrong; they were impolitic. They said things against the Government or against the administration. What they did was wrong. It was also unlawful—and they were put in jail. The sad thing to tell is that many of them are still there, languishing in prison, with the war over and the troops gone home—Americans born and bred, loving our country and its institutions, perhaps willing to die for it—fanatic and misguided—they languish yet in jail.

CASE OF ROSE PASTOR STOKES.

Rose Pastor Stokes about two years ago wrote a letter to a newspaper in which she said, "I am for the people; the Government is for the profiteers." For the use of those words she was indicted under the espionage act for obstructing recruiting for the Army, and so forth, haled before the court, and tried. Her past utterances were investigated. Everything that she had ever said or done which indicated opposition to the war or dissatisfaction or disagreement with governmental action was placed before the jury in its most prejudicial light. She was not permitted to prove that she had done this or said that or the other thing tending to sustain American institutions and showing her love of country, but everything she had ever said or done that could be twisted or distorted into an unfavorable aspect was quoted against her. The jury was human and naturally the woman was convicted. She was given a 10 years' sentence in the penitentiary. Public sentiment was inflamed and most intolerant; she was wrong; she spoke ill of our Government; the jury thought her words might have had some harmful effect; of course, she was convicted.

That, gentlemen, is a typical case. Are you going to leave the door open to prosecutions under another act, and this in time of peace, that will leave it open to juries to say, "Your intent was bad, and therefore we convict you and send you to the penitentiary"?

Read this bill, gentlemen; read it carefully. If it merely provided that a man who advised in explicit terms the use of force against the Government, if that were all, it would not be so bad. But that is not all. In it are used many equivocal expressions, such as "advises," "teaches," "suggests," "tends to," "incites," and "calculated to," and so on down the gamut of words expressing the means by which one man may affect the conduct of another, words of loose and uncertain meaning.

Every jury that is called upon to try a man under such a statute will be required to pass upon his intentions. It is inevitable that the accused will be found guilty or innocent as the jury may approve or disapprove his motives. And how are they going to find his intent? Just as they did under the espionage act. [Applause.] The result of such a trial is bound to be determined by existing public opinion and the standing and influence of the accused. This bill, if it passes, will put it in the power of any jury, if they should be so stupid, prejudiced, or uninformed, to convict an accused, no matter how high his loyalty or unselfish his patriotism.

NO GENERAL DEMAND FOR SEDITION LAW.

There is no general demand for legislation aimed at sedition. Such demand as there is is merely a class demand. It comes merely from the big business and propertied interests and those who, having little sympathy with democracy, conceive the need that the plain citizen should have his thinking and his talking done for him. Big finance and big business and their organs and parasites demand the legislation. By them it is intended to suppress agitation for the economic and industrial changes which they oppose. They fear that their control over our resources and their opportunity for exploiting labor and the masses in various ways are threatened. Certain newspapers which speak for the big interests are advocating repressive measures, but there is no demand for such measures from our farming population or from labor or from the masses generally.

I come from a great industrial district. The three dailies published in my home city each advocated antisedition legislation editorially and have carried the propaganda in favor of it. One of these papers, the News, the most influential of the three, published a copy of the so-called Davey bill, and urged editorially that my constituents should write me advocating the passage of that measure. In response to this urging and to the editorials and so forth in the two other dailies I have received exactly one letter in behalf of the Davey bill. I have received numerous letters from my constituents against it. No doubt my district is typical.

Mr. Glass, editor of the Birmingham News, to which I refer, is also president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. He is reported in the press to have called upon the newspapers, members of his association, to oppose section 6 of the Graham bill. That is the section which would affect the freedom of the newspapers to publish what they wish. After advocating in the News the passage of the Davey bill, Mr. Glass becomes suddenly aroused when a measure which would affect the privileges of newspapers is presented. It would seem that he cares nothing for the right of the people to speak but is deeply concerned when his own rights and those of his fellow editors are trenched upon.

THE AGE OF PROPAGANDA.

This is the age of propaganda. The printing press, long a blessing to mankind, is now, it seems, about to prove a curse. The press seems almost wholly devoted to teaching class doctrines and furthering interests of the small upper class. Journalism is a dying art. Newspapers print little unadulterated news. Nearly everything is set up in line with the owner's policy and to teach the things he would have his readers believe. I do not make this statement solely upon my own responsibility. We have the opinion of Frank I. Cobb, the New York editor, upon the subject. In an address which Mr. Cobb delivered in the city of New York on December 11, 1919, he discussed the methods of propaganda and the necessity for the reestablishing of free opinion and speech with great force and understanding. I take leave to quote a few passages from Mr. Cobb's speech:

For five years there has been no free play of public opinion in the world.

Confronted by the inexorable necessities of war, Governments conscripted public opinion as they conscripted men and money and materials.

Having conscripted it, they dealt with it as they dealt with other raw recruits. They mobilized it. They put it in charge of drill sergeants. They goose-stepped it. They taught it to stand at attention and salute.

This governmental control over public opinion was exerted through two different channels—one the censorship and the other propaganda.

* * * * * * *

As the war progressed the censorship became less and less a factor and propaganda increased in importance. * * * Governments relied on propaganda to equip and sustain their armies, to raise money, to furnish food and munitions, and to perform all those services without which armies would be vain and helpless. The organized manipulation of public opinion was as inevitable a development of modern warfare as airplanes, tanks, and barbed-wire entanglements.

There were two kinds of propaganda, one that represented the appeal to reason.

* * * * * * *

The other kind of propaganda resembled in a general way the activities of the cheer leaders at a football game. It was noisy and demonstrative and emotional and spectacular, and as such it often served a highly useful purpose. Sometimes it was frankly mendacious, for mendacity plays no insignificant rôle in the drama of war. When government lies, it does not lie sneakingly and furtively but proudly and ostentatiously.

When the armistice was signed and demobilization began, public opinion was demobilized, too. Bands of propagandists are wandering around terrorizing public opinion and trying to frighten it into submission to theories of government that are strange to American institutions.

* * * * * * *

What the United States needs more than anything else to-day is the restoration of the free play of public opinion. That requires, first, the reestablishment of the freedom of discussion, for without freedom of discussion there is no public opinion that deserves the name.

* * * * * * *

The policy of repression that has been generally adopted by governors, mayors, and police officials—in some cases by Federal authority—to meet this propaganda of radicalism is fatal. Two thousand years of history bear witness to its folly. Nobody ever succeeded in bettering the weather by putting the thermometer in jail, and nobody will ever remove the causes of unrest and discontent by trying to suppress their manifestations.

BE NOT AFRAID.

The trouble with the advocates of repressive measures of legislation seems to be a case of fear—I almost said "shell shock," the recoil of war. They do not trust the people. Their faith in American institutions is shaken. They are perhaps unconsciously showing themselves willing to abandon the principles of Americanism to which we have so long held. I reassure them. The people of the United States are yet capable of self-government, notwithstanding the doubts of these gentlemen. It will take something more than a few "soap-box spellbinders" to overthrow the Government of the United States.

I would bid the fearful ones to trust to the sound sense of the people and to their ability to winnow out the chaff of false political doctrine. Undoubtedly, after 140 years of development and experience with free institutions, the American people can be trusted to adhere to them. They are more competent for self-government to-day than ever.

The greatest threat to American self-government is the efforts of propagandists who poison public opinion with their falsehoods and crystallize men's views along warped lines. We have some rich men in America who don't know what to do with their riches. They want to interfere with and control other people's lives. They want to do other people's thinking. They conceive, because they have made millions, that they know all about political and social problems. The truth is that the average captain of industry and financier has less real understanding of such questions than the average citizen. Let him get back to his money box, let him clip his coupons, let him go on heaping up his millions. That he understands and can do. He can not rule the people. No man who is burdened with accumulated wealth or whose past is tainted by having devoted his heart and soul to the accumulation of wealth is fit to lead the people along lines of high morals or thinking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of discussing the sedition act, which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has just condemned in such unmeasured terms. I happened to be the chairman of the subcommittee that drafted the act. [Applause.]

But I desire to say that I am and have always been absolutely opposed to sections 1 and 2, the sections which contain the conspiracy clauses. I do not believe that any man in the United States should be convicted of a political offense unless he have a separate trial, and those sections provide for group trials. I also am opposed to the death penalty carried in those sections, because I believe it is not necessary there. There is ample statutory authority in every State to deal with cases of murder or cases of violence which cause death.

But with the eliminations of sections 1 and 2 this bill is not at all what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and other gentlemen, who have apparently examined it not at all closely, have said that it is. It is confined absolutely to the prohibiting and punishment of advocacy of force and violence, in overthrowing either the Government of the United States, its laws, or the authority of its laws; and I would like to hear some gentleman rise upon this floor and say that the Government of the United States, through its administrative officials, should not be possessed of adequate authority to deal with a man who either on the public platform or in the meeting room advises the overthrow of this Government by the use of the bomb, the torch, dynamite, or any other violent means. [Applause.]

This bill does not interfere in the slightest degree with any man who advocates any change in our Government, however fundamental that change may be. He can advocate the soviet form of government; he can advocate socialism; he can advocate communism, if he wants to, so long as he confines himself to peaceful means. But when he stands up on the public platform or in the meeting room and advises the establishment of soviet government here by force and violence, by murder, by burning, and by the destruction of property, then this bill reaches him, and reaches him most effectively. [Applause.] I believe that the people of the United States, all patriotic red-blooded Americans, want the Government of the United States to be in a position to adequately protect itself against that kind of doctrine. Section 3 of the bill provides—

That no person shall orally or by writing, printing, or the use of any sign, symbol, picture, caricature, or otherwise teach, incite, advocate, propose, or advise, or aid, abet, or encourage forcible resistance to or forcible destruction of the Government of the United States, its Constitution, laws, and authority, or the governments of the several States, all or any of them, or the existence of constituted government generally.

Is there anybody who can object to that? Also—

Or orally or by writing, printing, or the use of any sign, symbol, picture, caricature, or otherwise teach, incite, advocate, propose, or advise, aid, abet, encourage or defend the destruction of human life or the injury of any human being or the injury or destruction of public or private property as a means of changing the Constitution, laws, or Government of the United States or defeating the authority thereof.

Now, it has been said that this bill would interfere with labor organizations who propose to strike. If you take out sections 1 and 2, it does not do anything of the kind. It would not interfere with any labor organization that wanted to strike for any purpose so long as that organization did not advocate the use of force and violence as a means of overthrowing our Government, our Constitution, our laws, or their authority. And I do not believe that any patriotic labor organization man, whatever labor organization he may belong to, would object to any of the provisions of this bill after sections 1 and 2 are stricken out, if he understood what they are.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. What effect would sections 1 and 2 have if they should remain in the bill?

Mr. HUSTED. I think they would confer upon the law officers of our Government the power of efficient threat, if they saw fit to exercise it. I think they could say to a labor organization about to start a strike, "We think you are taking the first, the initial, step in an attempt to overthrow the Government, and we want to warn you that if anybody is killed as a result of this strike, we are going to hold you all for murder, and we have not got to give you individual trials. We will give you a group trial. We have only got to give one man an individual trial."

Now, I am absolutely opposed to that sort of thing, and I believe the people of the country are opposed to it; but if you take sections 1 and 2 out of the bill, then there will be no provisions in it that any patriotic American should have any objection to.

Mr. BROWNE. Does the gentleman believe in the section that gives the Postmaster General the right to censor all handbills, letters, and materials that pass through the mails, without any appeal or any hearing?

Mr. HUSTED. That is not the intention of the committee.

Mr. BROWNE. Section 6 gives that power.

Mr. HUSTED. A committee amendment will be proposed that will give the right of appeal from the decision of the Postmaster General to the district courts, so that that appeal will be heard immediately and a decision made de novo.

Mr. BROWNE. The bill does not do that now.

Mr. HUSTED. The committee adopted such a provision, and it should be in the bill. If it has been inadvertently omitted, a committee amendment to that effect will be offered.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Does the gentleman know that there was a similar bill presented in Pennsylvania, and all those objectionable clauses and features were taken out, and it was stripped down to a simple sedition law, but under that law they denied the members of organized labor the right to meet in a hall, two or three of them together, although those men were just as good American citizens as you or I and made just as great sacrifices as you or I?

Mr. HUSTED. I am not familiar with the statute to which the gentleman refers, but I know that if you take sections 1 and 2 out of this bill, no officer under its authority could interfere with organized labor in any respect whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

AMERICANISM OR EUROPEANISM—WHICH?

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for a period of 12 years, beginning with 1903 and ending with 1914, when the European war started, the number of aliens admitted into the United States ranged between 750,000 and 1,300,000 annually, never falling as low as 750,000 in any one year, six times rising above 1,000,000, and twice above 1,200,000.

The number coming during each of these years is shown by the following figures:

1903	756,046
1904	812,870
1905	1,026,499
1906	1,100,735
1907	1,285,349
1908	782,870
1909	751,786
1910	1,041,570
1911	878,587
1912	838,172
1913	1,197,892
1914	1,218,480

Enough immigrants came during these years to make two or three of the smaller States. During the earlier years of the Republic New England objected to the creation and admission of Western States, because she feared that they would turn the scale of power to the injury of interests which she cherished. Later, all thinking men saw that the character of the new States would control the Nation and its attitude toward vital questions. Therefore there was a hard fight, a series of political battles, a series of campaigns, a protracted political war over the Missouri Compromise, the admission of Texas, and the Kansas-Nebraska bill. The question was, Who should be in the Union and in position to participate in control of the Nation? The sequel proved that the leaders and the people were not making "much ado about nothing," but that the issue on slavery and a certain construction of the Constitution depended on the admission or exclusion of States whose people would favor certain policies.

The even greater question now is whether Americanism shall dominate or be destroyed, whether the people and spirit of this country shall be American or European or oriental in character. The result will certainly and vitally affect the character of the Nation and the fate of its people.

The continents of Europe, Africa, and Asia have been and are the homes of hundreds of millions of pitiful human creatures who have labored and had a hard existence. Famine in China and Ireland, and bitter poverty everywhere; serfdom in Russia and kindred curses in all the Old World; Jewish pogroms, Armenian massacres, Spanish inquisitions, French revolutions. Russian exiles and Russian chaos, wars without number, and almost without end, all mere waves on the wretched human sea which has covered the other three continents for ages.

Sometimes suffering has caused frantic uprisings and revolutions, but stillness, silence, and endurance have in the main pervaded this pitiful human mass. Sometimes their wails have shrieked in the words of Hebrew poets and prophets. At other times an Irish bard has told of "ages of bondage." A Tolstoi has made his life and words an index finger pointing to it. Because of it a peasant poet has concluded that "Man was made to mourn."

Europeanism and Orientalism are synonyms of poverty and slavery, but Americanism has meant other things. I do not use the word in a political clap-trap sense. When not coming from the mouths of demagogues Americanism means plenty, opportunity, and freedom. Here has developed a race whose attitude toward life is different from that of men in countries where such a mess has been made of human society. This attitude toward life also is Americanism. Europeanism and Orientalism have starved, belittled, and deformed men. Thus we have in the Old and New Worlds opposites of conditions and character. Such opposites create conflicts. Slavery desires to break into freedom; famine wants to feed on plenty. Thus America presents what the world wants—a meal to satisfy its hunger, an antidote for its woes. The question is not whether we shall help them, but whether Europeanism shall envelop America to its destruction as the home of Americans.

The contests between races rising out of such conditions constitute one main development of history. America was Europeanized as against the original American—the Indian. Europeans are rapidly converting Africa into a home for themselves as against the African. The character and status of India with its 250,000,000 of people is rapidly being changed. Every country has been changed by an obtruding, incoming people from without. China, Korea, and Manchuria are passing through the process now. Australia, France, ancient Rome, ancient and modern Egypt, England in its conflicts with the ancient Britons and later with Normans are examples of such changes. No country has been permanently exempt from this peril. Such struggles are certain; they have waxed and waned eternally. In some instances the process is war; in others it is less noisy and exciting, but no less destructive of the existing national life.

The destruction of the spirit, institutions, and government of a people may be by quick violence like Germany used toward Belgium and France, by infection like that which Germany put into Russia to destroy it, or by both dilution and infection such as would take place in America should the new and un-Americanized element become so numerous that their sentiments would prevail over the views of Americans who understand and cherish the traditions and spirit of their country, or should the poison of radicalism and disorder from that source imperil our institutions?

The size and character of this throng, measured by tens of millions, make it look ominous to one who wants America to live forever—not as Europe and Asia have existed, but in the full possession of its own American soul, the spirit and atmosphere of a home for Americans, which is a heaven as compared with Europe and Asia, lying forever under the curse of poverty and oppression.

The number coming during the 12 years mentioned and ending with the check caused by the war is shown by the figures already presented, in addition to which I remind you that there are 13 States now having more than one-half of their population foreign born, and the children—not grandchildren—of foreign-born father or mother, or both. They are: New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Utah. Many of these are big States, like Illinois, with 25 Representatives in Congress and 27 presidential electors, and New York, with 43 Representatives in Congress and 45 presidential electors. Some of them have as much as 70 per cent of their population so constituted; Minnesota, North Dakota, and Rhode Island have. Several have more than 60 per cent of such population; New York, Connecticut, and Massachusetts have. Then there are 13 other States having more than 35 per cent of such population, and many others having a heavy percentage of such population. (See pp. 85 to 89, Abstract 13th Census.)

Every student of this question knows that these people are collecting in dangerous hundreds of thousands in the large cities.

President Roosevelt said in his message to the Fifty-ninth Congress:

> As much as possible should be done to distribute the immigrants upon the land and keep them away from the congested tenement-house districts of the great cities. (P. 101 RECORD, 59th Cong., spec. sess.)

The Immigration Commission's report, from which I quote freely because of its authenticity, says:

> In making the large cities and industrial centers their place of residence, aliens composing the new immigration movement have continued to follow a tendency which originated with the advent of such immigrants in considerable numbers. (1 I. C. R., 40.)

And again:

> The increase in foreign-born is an increase in city population entirely, and mostly in large city population. (1 I. C. R., 142.)

In 1910 Greater New York had a population of 4,766,883, of whom 19.3 per cent were native-born whites of native parentage, 40.4 per cent were foreign-born white, 38.2 per cent were the children—not grandchildren—of foreign-born fathers or mothers, and 1.9 per cent were negroes.

Chicago had in 1910 a population of 2,185,284, of whom 20.4 per cent were native-born whites of native-born parents, 35.7 per cent were foreign-born whites, 41.8 per cent were the children of foreign fathers or mothers, and 2 per cent were negroes.

Pittsburgh in 1910 had a population of 533,905, of whom 33 per cent were native-born whites of native-born parentage, 26.3 per cent were foreign-born whites, 35.9 per cent were children of foreign-born father or mother, and 4.8 per cent were negroes.

Milwaukee had in 1910 a population of 373,867, of whom 21.1 per cent were native-born whites of native parentage, 29.8 per cent were foreign-born whites, 48.8 per cent were children of foreign-born father or mother, and 9.3 per cent were negroes.

Boston in 1910 had a population of 670,585, of whom 23.5 per cent were native-born whites of native parentage, 35.9 per cent were foreign-born whites, 38.3 per cent were children of foreign-born father or mother, and 2 per cent were negroes.

Fall River, Mass., had in 1910 a population of 119,295, of whom 13.3 per cent were native-born whites, 42.6 per cent were foreign-born whites, 43.7 per cent were children of foreign-born father or mother, and 3 per cent were negroes.

Worcester, Mass., had in 1910 145,986 people, of whom 28.4 per cent were native-born whites, 33.2 per cent were foreign-born whites, 37.5 per cent were children of foreign-born father or mother, and 9 per cent were negroes.

On page 95 of the Abstract of the Thirteenth Census will be found the authority for these figures. Many more such cases could be cited, but these are typical, and sufficient to show how these people are congesting in the cities.

The worst of this element tends to align itself with the enemies of government. Like children they stand in the midst of good things provided by others, without any thought of their cost, or of the necessity of preserving them.

Europe and the Old World have made their society and government so often and so long the instruments of oppression that men have come to look upon government as an evil and the enemy of man—especially of lowly man.

These millions of recent arrivals consisting of Slovanians, Turks, Bulgarians, Russians, and other long oppressed, and largely lawless, men, bring infection with them and provide dangerous breeding ground for infection from their own poison and from poison already here. They furnish a very dangerous kind and quantity of material on which the vicious madness of communism, anarchy, and chaos may and does feed. The fact that we have a big, bad element of our own, instead of reducing the danger, increases it. If all Americans were good ones, the danger would be much less, but our bad class is large enough to be dangerous within itself, and is much more to be dreaded when it has millions of un-Americanized men of a class specially subject to its influences and suitable as its instruments.

Mr. James Bryce, in his "American Commonwealth," a friendly, learned, and impartial work on America, says over and over again that the vast immigrant population of the cities is ignorant and unpatriotic, and that it is a pity that they have been given civil power. (Vol. —, p. 299; vol. 2, pp. 97–98.)

I recently collected figures showing 2,428 red conspirators against the Government, whose arrests were reported in one recent issue of a daily paper. Of this 2,428, 2,088 were arrested in 13 States having more than one-half of their population foreign born or their first-generation children; 235 came from States having 15 to 50 per cent of their population foreign born and their first-generation children; and 5 came from States having 5 to 10 per cent of their population foreign born or their immediate children. None came from States having less than 5 per cent of their population so constituted.

Who shot President Roosevelt? John Shrank, born in Germany.

Who killed the loved and lamented McKinley? Try to pronounce his name, and you will know the rest.

As indicating the source from which the thousands of anarchists now in this country came, I give you below the names of the defendants recited in one brief by their attorney in a legal proceeding against them as alien anarchists:

Mike Bratko, Thomas P. Buhkanow, Nikolai Besarow, Ignatz Bogdonoff, John Banuff, Abe Brook, Michael Abrossimoff, Misha Antonoff, Roman Andrieuk, Banjamin Apanasech, Fred Antonchuk, Aaron Shalow, Maxim Schinejko, George Cyzyk (alias Paul Gigalko), John Coslick, John Duboff, Tony Federaco, Thomas Furs, Andrew Hostilla, Alfons Hajduk, Boris Keretchuk, Demian Kravchuk, Tony Korscheikoff, Joe Koza, Teodosi Kotovich, Steve Kaminsky, Piotr Kozloff, Samuel Kanonowich, Alex Kornen, Michael Koropotko, Michael Kravchuk, Dora Lipkin, Arthur Lesiga, Andrew Lazarewitz, Anton Lipsky, Mike Lavrenuk, Gregory Meinikoff, John Newar, Andrew Nazaruk, Peter Novick, Ivan Novikoff, Nikolai Oehrimuk, Dimitrie Panko, Joseph Poludeck (alias Balluck), Mathew Podlipsky, Theodore Proshkovich, Human Perkus, Daniel Rice (alias Daniel Risch), Louis Ristick, Ilia (Eli) Shinkewich, Alexandar Schatz, Boris Shatz, Maximilian Stocky, Tony Smollok (alias Smollakow), Mike Seegan (alias Michael Seegunoff), Michael Sawicki, August Schmidt (alias William Lauwa), Harry Skochuk, Tom (Foma) or Tommie Turka, Peter Urgel, Stephen Uschenna (Stephen Uschenia), John Veremenuk, Demian Vlasoff or John Vlasloff, Nikolai Vizeroff, Nicholas Wasilieff, Harry Wardner, Peter Voronenko (J. Waschenko), John Yarmola, Nikita Safronieff (Necita Zafronia), Peter Zorin, Vincent Martzin, Alexander Derkacl.

My information is that most of the citizens of the United States charged with plotting the overthrow of the Government are of this class.

Here let me make it plain that my remarks do not apply to the worthy people of nearly all European races who came among us and became Americans and have contributed much to American life. I am not talking about such men any more than about other good Americans.

America could do no wiser thing than to stop immigration, for the present at least; but it will not be easily stopped. The talk of stopping all immigration has been heard for a hundred years, but the number increases at a quickening rate.

In the 10-year period from 1820 to 1830 foreign immigrants numbered 151,824, which was 1 immigrant during that 10-year period for every 84 persons within the United States at the end of that period.

The next 10 years brought 599,125, 1 immigrant to every 23 people in the country at the end of that 10-year period.

Jumping 30 years to the period extending from 1870 to 1880, we find 2,812,191 immigrants, which was 1 immigrant to every 17 persons in the Nation at the end of that period.

Jumping again to the 10 years between 1900 and 1910, we see 8,795,386 aliens coming, which was 1 to every 11 persons in the country at the end of that period.

These figures do not mean that there was only 1 immigrant to 11 persons in the country in 1910, but 1 in every 11 had come during the preceding 10 years—many new millions added to many millions already here. There were fluctuations in the tide, but the rate of their coming increased by leaps, absolutely, and in proportion to the population.

Enough people want to come to America now to overwhelm us. Europe could easily double our population in a decade, making it much less than one-half American. The Old World Continents could easily empty on us a flood which would drown the life of America in a generation. They threaten to do it, and conditions favor it. It is stated that we are much closer to the Old World than we were a few years ago, which is true for purposes of knowledge, communication, travel, and immigration. The narrowing of the Atlantic for acquaintance and travel and business also makes these attractive shores better known and nearer to the millions who are trying to escape the wretchedness on the other side. Where thousands crossed in one year 90 years ago millions crossed annually 10 years ago, and the rate threatens to quicken still more.

The sense of self-preservation, the intuition of the American people has prompted them with more or less urgency for many years to protect themselves from this danger. During the past 25 years this alarm has quickened, and if America had had its will it would have protected itself.

Our Presidents have not usually been in sympathy with the views of the people on this subject, and have repeatedly used the veto power to prevent them from giving expression to what they have repeatedly tried to say for themselves and their posterity. In 1879 President Hays vetoed the first Chinese exclusion act. (2 I. C. R., 580.) In 1882 President Arthur vetoed an act suspending Chinese immigration for a period of 20 years. (2 I. C. R., 581.) On March 3, 1897, President Cleveland vetoed an immigration act excluding illiterates. (2 I. C. R., 573.) President Taft vetoed an immigration bill in 1913 containing a restriction against the admission of illiterates. (P. 101, RECORD, special session, 59th Cong.) In 1917 President Wilson vetoed an act excluding illiterates, but Congress passed it over his veto.

The difficulty of getting restrictive measures enacted is only a part of the trouble. It has been hard to get our immigration and naturalization laws enforced. Separate States first encountered the opposition in their efforts to protect themselves. After many years of struggle with European-owned shipping interests the States were defeated in the courts and gave up the struggle. In 1824 New York enacted a self-protective, restrictive measure, which alien shipowners disregarded and resisted in the courts. A divided court, for the time being, upheld the law. (50 Pet., 102.) In 1837 Massachusetts enacted two kindred measures, which were bitterly contested by foreign shipping interests and the laws nullified. (7 How., 283; U. S. Sup.) California, Louisiana, and several other States enacted similar laws, but European shipping interests disregarded them and fought them in the courts until the United States Supreme Court, in Ninety-second United States, page 259, held them unconstitutional and left Congress as the only power to deal with this all-important subject.

The history of the dealings of Congress with immigration is the record of difficulties caused by shipowners, contract-labor importers, and other obstructions embarrassing all efforts to protect the country against incoming criminals, prostitutes, paupers, and anarchists.

Before 1820 no record was kept of immigration and no regulation of any kind was attempted. During the first 50 years after 1819 the Nation did nothing toward restriction, but did attempt to prohibit shipowners from crowding poor wretches together like hogs or cattle in the insanitary, inhuman manner practiced by them, which caused degradation, disease, and thousands of deaths among them.

I read from volume 2 of the report of the United States Immigration Commission, page 589, which I cite as "I. C. R.":

Prior to the year 1819 there were no United States laws governing or regulating ocean passenger traffic. * * * As a result abuses were permitted and practiced on transporting vessels that caused distress, disease, and death, especially among immigrants bound for America. (2 I. C. R., 589.)

Further, the fact that the protection given by the law—

* * * was inadequate, is shown by the gruesome records of the steerage experiences in those days. (2 I. C. R., 591.)

From the beginning of the movement of population from Europe to the New World suffering and death were common on immigrant ships. Among the earlier instances recorded was that of 3,000 Palatines forwarded * * * by England to New York, 470 of whom died on the voyage and 250 soon after their arrival of ship fever. There is also a gruesome account * * * of experiences on a ship which sailed in 1731 for America from Rotterdam with 156 immigrants. She was bound for Philadelphia via Falmouth. When she had been at sea eight weeks the passengers were put on short allowance, and during the last five weeks of their journey were unable to obtain bread. Finally they were paying 18 pence for a rat and 6 pence for a mouse. (2 I. C. R., 589.)

Upon the increased demand for transportation to the United States following the close of the second war with England, many vessels which had originally been constructed solely for the purpose of transporting freight were hurriedly transposed into emigrant ships, that they might enjoy some of the profits of a business that had become lucrative. This, with the fact that excessive overcrowding had been practiced on all vessels, rendered the condition of emigrants at sea almost unbearable. (2 I. C. R., 590.)

The potato famine in Ireland occurred in 1847, and in consequence there was a great increase in emigration from that country. (2 I. C. R., 591.)

Famine-stricken Ireland was also fever-ridden; * * * the disease was carried aboard ship, where in the overcrowded and poorly ventilated steerage quarters thousands died of ship fever and thousands more survived the voyage, only to die after landing.

Thousands of Irish and other British emigrants died during the voyage to Canada, and at Grasse Island, near Quebec, where the Canadian quarantine station was located, as many as 7,000 emigrants perished from ship fever and cholera in 1847 alone. (2 I. C. R., 592.)

In 1819, 1847, and 1855 laws were passed by Congress to limit crowding and prevent the starving of immigrants, but these were opposed, avoided, and disregarded by the shipping concerns. The Immigration Commission says:

It may well be questioned whether the condition surrounding the transportation of emigrant passengers had been improved by any of these laws. (2 I. C. R., 593.)

Slave ships, moved by human greed, brought wretched humans from Africa to sell into slavery in America, where they embroiled the country in years of strife, caused an awful war, and yet present a dangerous race problem. Immigrant ships, for gain, have all along been the chief offenders against America and against humanity. Many of them have been German, many have been British, and some have been American. Their desire for profits is now an embarrassment to the enactment of proper legislation and the enforcement of such as we have.

The greed of steamship companies, the greed of cities, the greed of men in America who want to make money off of immigrants, and the greed of those who want cheap labor is at the root of most of the difficulty in enacting and properly enforcing immigration laws. Each class of employers wants cheap labor. Some want tailors; others want railroad hands; many want factory hands; others, though comparatively few, want them for farm help. Some want Italians; some want Russians for mine work; some want Mexicans, mainly for railroad work. All these say, "Keep out undesirables," by which most of them mean the kind the other people want to work—not the kind they want to work.

The acts of 1882 and 1885 excluded criminals, idiots, lunatics, persons liable to become a public charge, and contract laborers. In 1888 this House passed a resolution reciting that the law prohibiting the admission of contract laborers, paupers, and convicts was being extensively evaded, and authorized the appointment of a committee to investigate the subject. (2 I. C. R., 569.) The committee found that thousands were unlawfully admitted every year, and that serious danger resulted. (2 I. C. R., 570.) In 1890 a joint committee of the House and Senate found that the contract-labor law was "generally evaded." (2 I. C. R., 571.) In 1893 another joint committee of the House and Senate found that undesirable aliens not entitled to admission were being admitted, and that the so-called examination of immigrants at ports of entry "appeared to be more of a farce than a reality." (2 I. C. R., 572.) In 1907 the National Immigration Commission was created, which consisted of nine members, three appointed by the Republican President, three by the Republican President of the Senate, and three by the Republican Speaker of this House. Among its members were Senators LODGE and DILLINGHAM, Hon. John Burnett, long an honored Member of this House, and men of like character. It was overwhelmingly Republican, and is subject to no charge of unfairness against the Republican Party. The commission made the most exhaustive study of the industrial features of immigration in America, conditions in Europe causing immigration, and the enforcement of our immigration laws. Its work covered a period of more than three years, and is reported in some 40 volumes, its conclusion being largely covered in volumes 1 and 2 and its hearings in the remainder. I am citing these reports as Immigration Commission Reports, preceded by the number of the volume and followed by the page. This commission found that at that time feeble-minded, insane, and diseased persons were being fairly well excluded, but says:

No adequate means have been adopted for preventing the immigration of criminals, prostitutes, and other morally undesirable aliens. * * * In spite of the stringent law, criminals or moral defectives of any class, provided they pass the medical examination, can usually embark at European ports and enter the United States without much danger of detection. (1 I. C. R., 27.)

The report further says that, because of the rigidity of the law, few actual contract laborers are admitted, but—

There are annually admitted a very large number who come in response to indirect assurance that employment awaits them. In the main, these assurances are contained in letters from persons already in this country, who advise their relatives or friends at home that if they will come to the United States they will find work awaiting them. On the other hand, it is clear that there is a large induced immigration, due to labor agents in this country, who, independently or in cooperation with agents in Europe, operate practically without restriction. (1 I. C. R., 29.)

In the same report, volume 1, page 25, it is said:

Comparatively few immigrants come without some reasonably definite assurance that employment awaits them, and it is probable that as a rule they know the nature of that employment and the rate of wages. A large number of immigrants are induced to come by quasi labor agents in this country, who combine the business of supplying laborers to large employers and contractors with the so-called immigrant banking business and the selling of steamship tickets. (1 I. C. R., 25.)

In the records of this House and reports of committees and joint committees and commissions created by both Houses I have not found one statement that these laws were generally and effectually enforced. Again and again in the record of a period of more than 40 years is found complaint of the violations or evasions of contract-labor laws.

Gentlemen, the evidence taken upon hearings of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and an actual inspection of the work of admitting immigrants at Ellis Island in New York Harbor, have fully convinced me that your restrictions against the admission of undesirable immigration are not now being properly enforced.

The Bureau of Immigration is not, in my judgment, chargeable with the failure. The whole system is inadequate to a proper enforcement of the law. The force, arrangement, and system do not evidence an understanding of the problem or a purpose on the part of Congress and the United States Government to deal effectively with it. The land boundaries are not properly guarded.

As a member of a subcommittee, I saw thousands of aliens marching past a few inspectors while the ship moved toward the pier in New York port, through which three-fourths of our immigrants come. Any observer who will visit Ellis Island and one or two immigrant ships will see that a real and effective enforcement of the regulations provided by law is not being accomplished. The acting superintendent at New York admitted to the committee, in answer to questions propounded by me, that the so-called inspection is a farce. At a future time I hope to present this phase of the question more explicitly and fully.

The number coming is, during these days, increasing. Conditions in Europe favor it. I noticed recently that 8,000 were admitted in one day in New York, and the shiploads come daily.

It is very fitting that the big employers who want immigrants for their cheap labor, and steamship companies who want their passage money, should be represented by common agents in inducing immigration.

But who are the "large employers" whose demand for cheap labor is supplied by the "labor agents" mentioned? You can not tell so well by looking at the immigrants when they are starting or when they arrive at New York or Boston. But keep your eye on the immigrant until he goes to work, bearing in mind that he usually knew the nature of his employment and the prospective wages before he left Europe. You can tell then who is the "large employer" whose demand is being supplied by the men who are joint labor and steamship-ticket agents.

On page 38 of volume 1 of its report this Republican immigration commission says:

The aliens come from countries where low economic conditions prevail and where conditions of labor are very bad. They were content to accept wages and conditions which the native American and immigrants of the older class had come to regard as unsatisfactory. They were not, as a rule, engaged at lower wages than had been paid to the older workmen for the same class of labor, but their presence in constantly increasing numbers prevented progress among the older wage-earning class, and as a result that class of employees was gradually displaced. (1 I. C. R., 38.)

Again, on page 540 of volume 1 of the same report:

It is hardly open to doubt, however, that the availability of the large supply of recent immigrant labor prevented the increase in wages which otherwise would have resulted during recent years from increased demand for labor. The low standard of the southern and eastern European, his acceptance of a low wage and existing working conditions, his lack of permanent interest in the occupations and community in which he has been employed, his attitude toward labor organizations, his slow assimilation, and his willingness, seemingly, to accept indifferently, without protest, certain wages and conditions of employment have rendered it extremely difficult for the older classes of employees to secure improvements in conditions or advancement in wages since the arrival in considerable numbers of southern and eastern European wage earners. (1 I. C. R., 540–541.)

On page 406 of volume 1 of this report, in explaining a table showing the earnings of the heads of families, it is said:

It is evident from a comparison of the totals in the foregoing tables that the native-born heads of families have a higher range of annual earnings than those of foreign birth. The greater proportion of the former earned yearly between $400 and $800, while the greater proportion of the latter earned between $300 and $600. (1 I. C. R., 406.)

It was also found that the foreign-born laborer received the lowest wages; that the native-born children of foreign fathers received somewhat better wages; and that the native-born laborers of native parentage received the best. Of the wages of 26,616 wage earners of all races and classes the report says:

It is seen that the average annual earnings of 22,938 foreign-born wage earners * * * were only * * * $455, as contrasted with average yearly earnings of $566 for the 2,059 * * * of native birth of foreign father, and of $666 for 1,454 native-born white wage earners of native fathers. (1 I. C. R., 408.)

In an effort to learn who are the large employers for whom labor agents induce immigrants of the class mentioned to come in millions, let us study the large industries:

A large proportion of the southern and eastern European immigration of the past 25 years have entered the manufacturing and mining industries of the Eastern and Middle Western States. (1 I. C. R., 37.)

IRON AND STEEL MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees in the industry, 57.7 per cent were found to be of foreign birth. * * * Of the total number of iron and steel workers, 28.9 per cent were native born of native father, and 13.4 per cent were of native birth of foreign father. (1 I. C. R., 297.)

SLAUGHTERING AND MEAT PACKING.

It was found that 60.7 per cent of the total number of wage earners in the industry were of foreign birth. * * * Of all employees, 24.8 per cent were of native birth and of native father, and 14.5 were native born of foreign afther. (1 I. C. R., 298.)

BITUMINOUS COAL MINING.

Of the total number of employees, 61.9 per cent were of foreign birth; 9.5 per cent were of native birth, but of foreign father; and 28.5 per cent were native-born persons of native father. (1 I. C. R., 300.)

GLASS MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees, 39.3 per cent were of foreign birth, 18.4 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father. (1 I. C. R., 301.)

WOOLEN AND WORSTED MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees, 61.9 per cent were of foreign birth, 24.4 per cent were of native birth of foreign father. (1 I. C. R., 302.)

COTTON GOODS MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees, 67.7 per cent were of foreign birth, 21.8 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father, and 9.4 per cent were of native birth of native father. (1 I. C. R., 304.)

The first employees of the New England cotton mills were secured almost exclusively from the farm and village population immediately adjacent to the early cotton goods manufacturing centers. (1 I. C. R., 507.)

Since the year 1885, and especially during the past 15 years, the operatives of the cotton mills have been mainly recruited from the races of southern and eastern Europe and from the Orient. (1 I. C. R., 511.)

The Americans, who formerly composed the bulk of the cotton-mill operatives in the North Atlantic States, at the present time form only about one-tenth of the total number of employees in the cotton mills. * * * If persons native born of foreign father be added to this pure American stock, or those native born of native father, the total number of native-born operatives amounts to about three-tenths of the operating forces of the North Atlantic mills. The remaining part of the operatives, or about seven-tenths, is composed of employees of foreign birth. (1 I. C. R., 511.)

CLOTHING MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees in the industry, 72.2 per cent were of foreign birth, 22.4 per cent were * * * native born of foreign father, and only 5.3 per cent were native born of native father. (1 I. C. R., 305.)

FURNITURE MANUFACTURING.

Of the total number of employees, 59.1 per cent were of foreign birth, while 19.6 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father, and 21.2 per cent were native born of native father. (1 I. C. R., 307.)

LEATHER TANNING, CURING, AND FINISHING.

Of the total number of employees, 67 per cent were of foreign birth, 15.9 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father, and 11.4 per cent were native born of native father. (1 I. C. R., 309.)

OIL REFINING.

Of the total number of employees, 66.7 per cent were of foreign birth, 21.5 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father, and only 11.8 per cent were native born of native father. (1 I. C. R., 311.)

SUGAR REFINING.

Of the total number of employees, 85.3 per cent were of foreign birth, while 8.4 per cent were of native birth but of foreign father, and 6.3 per cent were native born of native father. (1 I. C. R., 312.)

In 1913 President Taft vetoed a bill passed by Congress to restrict and reduce immigration, and said in his veto message that he did so for the reason given in the accompanying letter of his Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Among the reasons given by his Secretary, Mr. Nagle, in the attached letter is the following:

We need labor in this country, and the natives are unwilling to do the work which the aliens come to do. (RECORD, Feb. 14, 1913, 63d Cong., 3d sess., p. 3156; Senate Doc. 1087.)

I have just shown what kind of work aliens come to do. I have also shown who are the "large employers" whose labor demands are being supplied by labor agents and steamship companies.

I call your especial attention to the fact that all immigrants gradually crowd out native Americans, and that new immigrants crowd out old immigrants.

On these undisputed facts, I base the following suggestions:

First. The big employers whom the labor agents are supplying with labor are the big protected industries, such as the cotton, worsted, clothing, steel, and coal producers.

Second. While these big concerns have sent our Republican friends to the people to talk of protection for American labor, in order to raise the prices of their goods, they have sent their labor brokers to get the lowest type of cheap European labor to hold down wages and living conditions and drive American labor out of the great protected industries.

Third. If the labor people vote for such a program as this, they will create in the minds of their fellow Americans a deep fear that labor does not know enough or has not vigor enough to take care of its own legitimate interests.

It will be noted that the highest figures for incoming immigrants were for the years beginning in 1903, when Republican tariff laws were in force, and continued until 1914, soon after the Underwood Act took effect, and that the Democrats, with some patriotic Republican help, were the first to enact a law restricting immigration by the exclusion of illiterates.

Another interesting and highly important consideration is the attitude of organized labor toward this incoming throng. First, the report of the Immigration Commission, volume 1, page 38, shows that 10 years ago these newcomers did not merge into the labor organizations easily, nor cooperate with them, but competed for their employment on terms unsatisfactory to American labor. I am informed that American labor organizations of the most pronounced American type did not at first take favorably to having this ignorant and somewhat degraded mass drawn into their organizations, and at first excluded them; that later, when they saw these new millions of incoming foreigners ready to take their places in the mines and factories; that when they talked to their employers of better pay and better conditions they saw the foreign throng waiting for their work, and were thereby forced to take them into their organizations; that after being forced to take them in or be completely displaced, they now find them gaining the ascendency in numbers, and often giving an irresponsible and radical character to the organizations which they are capturing, while their American brothers find it necessary to cooperate with them, or acquiesce in their radical tendencies, rather than lose all touch with them and be crowded out of the industries of the country. From this bad part of the foreign element comes much that causes American labor brotherhoods to be accused of contract breaking and radicalism.

What are Americans in the unions to do? Work with them as best they can, and hold on to their own jobs, or give up the unions and the work to them and try to meet their foreign millions in unequal competition for a place to toil? If the unions are surrendered to them, they will go to worse excess. Americans of the laboring classes in the sections where these men have come have been placed in a perilous position by their coming. Their fellow Americans should recognize it and give them such hearing and recognition as will enable them to get what is right and increase the hold of Americans upon American labor. Laboring people should oppose radicalism, help arrest immigration, and take less seriously the Republican talk about protecting American wages.

Yet another suggestion arises from these facts for your consideration. Just now your committee is besieged with appeals from industrial employers not to close the door against incoming labor. This fact, considered with the other facts, should advise American labor that these people are still to be brought here to take their places. The interests of labor require that it be protected from the importation of an endless supply of European pauper labor.

The public, the millions of Americans, are entitled to have their country protected from Europeanization by the importation of this un-Americanized European mass.

What are employers thinking? Do they realize that the worst, most radical element is now found in the bad portions of the foreign element? Will they replace each relay of employees with another still less American, still more infected with the virus of socialism, radicalism, and anarchy; still less subject to the appeal of order and Americanism? At this rate how long will any property be protected, any order maintained, any cherished American institution be perpetuated?

Industry may pile its present profits higher by such a course, but it is surely making provision for the destruction of the very property which industry would accumulate.

Labor, the general American public, and employers themselves, if moved by enlightened self-interest, will join in building barriers against that which will injure and eventually ruin all.

That vast masses of them are not becoming good Americans is known to everyone who has observed them or the effect of their presence. They are having the rights of citizenship bestowed upon them as they move in herds through the court rooms. As members of a subcommittee of two, assigned to that, I and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] sat through an entire daily session with one of the New York City judges while sitting as a court of naturalization. First, let me say that the judge seemed conscientious and capable; I have no criticism to make of any clerk, inspector, or officer of the Government whose work I observed. We entered the room a few minutes before the judge and occupied seats at his desk. The room was then jammed full of aliens, not one of whom I heard at any time pronounce his name so that I could understand it. The room was so full of them and their witnesses that no effort was made to seat them all. I was told that there was another room full waiting to enter as soon as there was space for them. When the judge entered, the procession was formed and moved under the direction of policemen in much the same manner as an officer controls traffic at a busy street crossing. Each alien waiting to be made a citizen, with few exceptions, was accompanied by two witnesses. As that procession started past the judge, I soon decided that the applicant was being examined as to the legal requirements, and his two witnesses heard, and the oath administered to him at the rate of one case a minute or faster—not one witness a minute, but the applicant and the two witnesses heard and the oath of allegiance administered in one minute. Looking at my watch, I carefully counted the number of cases disposed of in five minutes and found the number to be 10. Doubting the accuracy of that count, I kept my watch before me and made a score mark as each case was disposed of. During that five minutes eight cases were heard and disposed of. In 90 minutes 125 cases were heard, which included the examination of 125 aliens and substantially 250 witnesses. In 90 minutes 375 people had given testimony, interspersed with a few remarks by the judge and officers, and many such expressions as, "That's all!" "Step this way!" "Step lively!" from policemen, as they rushed the herd by the court. An average of less than one-quarter of a minute—15 seconds—was consumed in examining each applicant and witness. An officer read the oath of allegiance in a hurried, muffled whisper while the witnesses were marching past the judge. Such is the manner of making United States citizens of people whose efforts to speak English few Americans or none could understand, and whose answers about America and its Government would shame an average 6-year-old American child.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. There is no question but that the requirements of the Government were complied with in these instances, is there?

Mr. BOX. No very serious contention could be made that they were doing it.

Mr. DONOVAN. That they were or were not trying to do it.

Mr. BOX. Understand, I appreciate the environment and difficulty up there, and I will join with my committee in doing anything I can to help remove the obstacles; and I want to make plain, as I tried to do a moment ago, that I am not reflecting on any man.

Mr. DONOVAN. The point I was making was this. I came from a New England city, as a member of the New England bar, to the New York bar. My first impression when I went into a New York court was that the procedure was so unusual to what I was accustomed to in New England I doubted its efficiency, but after I became a resident of New York and saw the great volume of business and the great dispatch that had to be employed and learned that real results were obtained just as good as in New England, I then wondered why it was not just as good as the New England practice.

Mr. BOX. I will say this: The dispatch was there. [Laughter and applause.] They had policemen there and their main words were "Step lively," "Step quick," "Come this way." They heard a man's testimony and did not ask 1 in 10 whether he was an anarchist; they heard his witnesses and swore him to allegiance to that flag, in a muffled whisper, while his witnesses marched past the court.

In the same farcical manner are examinations made of shiploads of aliens on the ships in the harbor when about to be admitted to America. Of course the acting superintendent had to admit to one who saw it that it was a farce, as he did to me.

This claptrap talk about Americanism amounts to nothing. The question is whether a man really wants America to be preserved for Americans. If he is the right kind of an American, he is generous and brave, but at the same time he believes in providing for his own household. I have not very much respect for the man whose patriotism is so thin or whose allegiance is so divided that he has to look two ways—try to please two masters—when he considers questions affecting the welfare of his country. [Applause.]

The American people should look into the question of the number being admitted, the question of their distribution, and the manner in which they are being made American citizens. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, this problem needs the thoughtful, practical attention of Congress and the country. I am making this statement to bring this serious situation before you and the people. When I became a Member of this body I resolved to do something more than talk about this momentous question, with its bearing upon us and our children who are to succeed us. I sought and obtained a place on the committee which has this subject in charge and have attended every meeting of the committee. As a member of the subcommittee I spent several days in New York, the port through which most of these immigrants enter the country, studying the problem there, and seeking to provide a remedy for it. I shall continue to give my best thought, attention, and labor to it, and urge upon the committee, upon Congress, and upon the country such measures as will save our country from threatened ruin, by the changing of America from a home for Americans to a Babylon of strange voices, strange faces, strange un-American ways, a place from which the spirit of America has taken its departure—another Europe, another Orient. May the God of Nations save us and our children from such a calamity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, as the only Member of either branch of this Congress who has ever been employed in the Diplomatic Service of his country, I always take an active interest in this Diplomatic and Consular bill. In view of the part our Government is taking in the affairs of the world the four hours granted for general debate on this bill could be well employed in discussing the bill. When Cleveland assimilated Hawaii, 25 years ago, Cherif Pasha, first secretary of foreign affairs for Egypt, said to me, "Your country is going into politics." He meant world politics. Since we have embarked in the world's affairs on a big scale, this Congress should give more serious care to this bill. The State Department does not give much thought to it.

Glancing at the bill, on page 2 I see something that is worthy of a moment's consideration from the committee. We send these ministers to foreign countries, and occasionally we find a little country where we can not afford to send a minister, and we appoint a man to represent two countries. Heretofore, last year and before, I have had occasion to call attention to some of the idiosyncrasies of the service, and said to the committee and the State Department what might be remedied. My suggestions got no consideration in the House, but when this foreign bill came here for conference they were remedied. The Senate had fixed most of them, and I found them in the bill after it came back from conference. I want to throw out one or two suggestions now in the hope that the Senate will get at them or perhaps the committee will make the needed changes here.

We have an ambassador to Belgium and a minister to the Netherlands, and in this bill the little State of Luxemburg is tacked onto the jurisdiction of the Netherlands minister. The territory of Belgium lies between Luxemburg and the Netherlands. If Luxemburg has to be attached to some minister's duties, it should be attached to the duties of the fellow that goes to Belgium. His domicile is immediately adjacent to Luxemburg. The minister to Holland can not go directly to Luxemburg except by passing through Belgium. The Belgian minister gets $17,500 a year, and the Netherlands man gets only $12,000, and if there is not to be any extra man, let the $17,500 man do the extra work. Luxemburg should go with Belgium.

I find the minister to Greece carries the burden of Montenegro. That country immediately adjoins Serbia, and the people speak the same tongue. There is an intervening country between Greece and Montenegro, a great mountain country, difficult to pass through, and a long distance away. If you are going to attach Montenegro to the duties of another minister, as I suggested two years ago, you ought to give it to the minister to Serbia, the one immediately adjacent. Those two countries are entirely alike, and the work is the same in both. My idea is you ought to apply the rule of common sense to the matter, just as everybody would except a diplomat. I throw out these two suggestions now in the hope the change will be made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware, of course, that the Paris conference is disposing of these people according to its own sweet will?

Mr. LITTLE. I can speak of it, can I not, even if that is true?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. LITTLE. For a moment I am going to take the diplomat's attitude, and I take it from the State Department's view, that is a sensible one.

I read here:

Agent and consul general at Cairo, $6,500.

This man is not agent and consul general at Cairo. He is the minister to Egypt. His dominion and power extend all over Egypt, 2,000 miles up the Nile, and across the Red Sea to Jedda, the seaport of Mecca. He holds a place of considerable responsibility. On one occasion I was addressing the Sultan, on an official occasion, and I spoke of the agent at Cairo. Those diplomats are very jealous of their prerogatives. The wife of one of my colleagues said to me, "I notice that you are appointed at Cairo, not to the rest of the country." I was a little embarrassed. The American representative there should be as well accredited as his colleagues. You would assist the man who has that job and make it a little easier and nicer for him if instead of saying "agent and consul general to Cairo" you would say "agent and consul general to Egypt." It would not cost a cent, and it would put his office in a position of being more highly respected there. Cromer, my colleague in 1892 and 1893, was agent and consul general, too, but his country gave him the rank in their service of minister resident though he was agent to Egypt.

Now, I would be glad if some member of the committee would tell us how some of these countries got in here in this bill, although it is all right with me. I see here Czechoslovakia and Poland have ministers. I suggested two years ago that they ought to be put in here, and the committee told me that the State Department had informed them that it could not be done because there was no treaty with them, though they had Austria-Hungary, with whom we were at war, in the bill——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It was done on the gentleman's suggestion. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. I thank you. It seems I am a greater power than I thought I was. [Laughter.]

Mr. PORTER. I will say to the gentleman that the independence of Poland and Czechoslovakia was recognized in January of last year.

Mr. LITTLE. Who recognized them?

Mr. PORTER. The President of the United States.

Mr. LITTLE. Who runs this Government, anyway? Is it the Congress of the United States who make the laws, or is it the President?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I would suggest that it is the steering committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, that is doing very well, so far. I hope it will keep it up. I am glad its ability is recognized by the gentleman. [Laughter.]

These gentlemen down at the State Department, it appears, have now recognized Poland and Czechoslovakia. I am glad of it, but really there ought to be a treaty. Things should not run loosely this way. Congress should take care of such things instead of letting the State Department run wild. But I suggest that we should go a step further. Why do we not recognize some of these other countries, as, for instance, Armenia and Georgia? There are two Christian peoples who stepped of their own accord into this war and declined all offers from the enemy and fought on our side. One hundred and sixty thousand Armenians were engaged in this war on our side. When they were pouring back from the Russian front with the rest of the Russian Army the Armenians came by train to Baku, from Russia, and could get no farther, and found themselves surrounded by a horde of Moslem Tartars. The Armenian Bagratouni, who had been Kerensky's chief of staff, organized them and took possession of Baku. They fought for several weeks and conquered the Turks and the Tartars there, and held Baku for months and months. We did not know—nobody knew—what had happened at the time. A great victory had been won for the Allies. Central Asia had been taken for the Allies.

The leader in that movement, Gen. Bagratouni, has been here for weeks and no hand extended to welcome him. This one-legged hero of the Caspian should have recognition here, and his nation should have recognition. How does it happen that Armenia and Georgia are not recognized as well as Poland and the Czecks? We have cheered in our galleries several splendid soldiers of European nations, none of them more worthy of our applause than the Armenian. He is as much entitled to recognition as any other hero of the war. There is Gen. Andranik, the mountain chieftain, who fought the Turks to a standstill and actually won Armenia's independence on the field of battle. It was agreed that Armenia's existence should be recognized by the Turks themselves. Why does not our Government recognize it?

Andranik has a record not surpassed by any in all the stories of forlorn hopes for freedom. There is a splendid chance now to send a minister to Armenia without it costing us a cent. There is no minister or ambassador to Turkey provided for or mentioned here. That is a very funny feature in this bill. But I turn over the pages and I see that there is $26,200 to be expended on the Turkish Embassy for secretaries and assistants and clerks and students—$26,200 appropriated here, and no minister or ambassador. Let some one explain that if he can. If you have not an ambassador, how are you going to have an embassy? There should not be any minister to Turkey unless there is one to Armenia. We owe recognition to them more than we do to the Turks. What I suggest ought to be done is to amend this bill so that you will have a minister to Armenia, Georgia, and Turkey. Why $26,200 for clerks and students in Constantinople?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very desirable places for deserving Democrats.

Mr. LITTLE. But their time is so short. Establish a minister at Tiflis, to Armenia, Georgia, and Turkey. You can take this $26,200 and put them all in, and it will not cost you a cent. Neither will the advice I am giving you, I will say to the committee. [Laughter.]

If the State Department or the President could recognize Poland and Czechoslovakia, as I understand it can and has, let it also recognize Armenia and Georgia. They have at Tiflis almost as splendid a city as this is, with beautiful palaces and noble buildings. They have big newspapers, almost as big as those here. They have a great city to send a minister to. That is my suggestion. Send a minister to Armenia and Georgia and Turkey; put them in the bill. When Allenby beat the Turks below Damascus 8,000 Armenian veterans were with him and 100,000 Turks were away fighting Armenians toward Erzerum, where Andranik had become one of the Orient's resplendent and chivalric figures, a nation's hero. Let us welcome him and Bagratouni by according Armenia recognition and a minister. Is this a Christian Nation? Then let us recognize in this bill the oldest Christian people, over whom the star of Bethlehem swung sixteen hundred years ago. If the President can recognize one nation, we can appropriate the money for another. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in answer to the remark of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], that "if sections 1 and 2 were taken out of the sedition bill no man with red blood in his veins would dare vote against the bill."

As a member of organized labor, I want to say that the four railroad brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor denounce anti-Americanism and anarchy and are as loyal to this American Government as any Member of Congress. I want to declare myself, first, as an American citizen who still believes in and reveres the Constitution of the United States; and, second, as an American citizen who believes in the wisdom and the justice and the divine inspiration of those greatest of all Americans, the fathers of our country, the creators of American liberty, when they wrote into that covenant of liberty, the Constitution of the United States, these words:

> Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Such bills as these are an insult to the intelligence and loyalty of the American people. There is and there can be no question that the masses of the American people are for their country first, last, and all the time; [applause] that they would willingly and generously shed their lifeblood in defense of that country. [Applause.] This has been demonstrated beyond all shadow of doubt in the World War just ended, when the noblest youth of America crossed the ocean to bear arms in defense of American principles of truth, liberty, and justice; when American families gave up their loved ones with a spirit of patriotism bordering on the divine.

In every village, city, and State of the Union there are broken hearts and saddened homes on account of the ravages of the war, and it is from these homes and the hearts of these people that the strongest cry comes for the survival of democracy in this land.

We hear talk of discontent existing in the country, and we actually know there is discontent and unrest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Would the gentleman let me have a few minutes more?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BURKE. But laws such as this will only add fuel to the flames, for I want to say right here that the discontent existing is a natural discontent brought about by the proposal of laws and the enactment of laws which encroached upon the constitutional rights of the people of America. If there is one thing the people of this country love, it is their sense of American freedom; if there is one thing they guard with jealousy, it is their constitutional rights, and the American people are not going to tamely submit to the taking away of those rights.

Burdened down with the high cost of living until the wage earner to-day can not make ends meet, realizing that an unscrupulous system of profiteering is prevalent in the country, and that nothing is being done to bring the profiteers to justice or to lower the cost of living, the people naturally and rightfully voice their discontent and disapproval.

According to the press report of the country, during the period of war 17,000 millionaires were created, which means $17,000,000,000 more of private wealth garnered out of a Nation's woe and a people's misery. If Congress would turn its guns upon these newly made millionaires and endeavor to find out just how they made the millions, and let the common people of the Nation alone for a little while, I think some of the unrest would disappear, for the people would think that possibly there was some hope of them getting a "square deal."

I am opposed to the sedition bill because it is vicious in character, subtle in meaning, and is one of the most damnable schemes ever perpetrated against a free and liberty-loving people. It is a blot upon the Nation. In my opinion, its sole purpose, its one intent, is to hold in subjection the working people, to crush labor, to deny the common people the right of public speech, the right of public assembly, the right to offer protest against any intolerable political or industrial conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, from time to time something has been said of the power exerted over this Congress and over legislation by a party steering committee. I wish my party had a strong steering committee. I am beginning to believe in steering committees to a certain extent; because when I can see the leader of a steering committee crack the whip, and in 15 minutes fill these seats here with 160 Republicans and keep them on the floor for hours to pass a bill in accordance with a prearranged understanding, as was done yesterday afternoon, I begin to believe in that sort of business. And it might not be so bad after all, because the steering committee is composed of Representatives in Congress who are supposed to represent the people of the land. But I am going to tell you of a power that makes the power of the Republican steering committee look like 30 cents. I am going to tell you who is the real dictator of this Congress and of legislation in this land; not the Republican steering committee, if you please, but it is the president of the American Federation of Labor who comes to this Capitol from time to time and who gives orders and who has his orders obeyed.

On last Saturday I called attention on the floor of the House to the fact that the New York papers that morning had told the country that Mr. Gompers had stopped the bringing in of a rule making in order the Graham sedition bill, which had the approval of the Republican steering committee, yet, regardless of such approval, was held up by order of Samuel Gompers. A futile attempt was made to intimate that something else had stopped it. But in the next morning's paper the facts were made plain to the people of this country, because the statement was then made and sent broadcast over the land by Mr. Samuel Gompers that he opposed this bill and that same must not be passed. Then the public became aware of the fact that it really was Samuel Gompers who was setting aside the action of the Committee on the Judiciary and the Republican steering committee and was holding back this legislation.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry I can not. I have not the time.

Mr. BROWNE. I want to ask a brief question, whether Attorney General Palmer——

Mr. BLANTON. I refuse to be interrupted, and I ask the Chair not to take this out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to be interrupted.

Mr. BLANTON. Because I want to tell the gentleman something that possibly he knows but does not publicly admit. Who appeared before the Rules Committee yesterday morning in opposition to this bill? Why, Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers was the chief figure there, backed up by his attorney and his cohorts, and he said he did not want that bill passed. And what did he do? He came with a threat, as usual; a threat to whom? Not to the Congress, because he has already threatened Congress, but to the Republican Party, which controls the passage of legislation here. He told the chairman of the Rules Committee almost in the first breath what the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] told you awhile ago, that in 1798, when the last peace-time sedition bill was passed in this country, he said the old Whig Party passing it was defeated, destroyed, and went out of memory because through punishment it was put out of power by the people of the country, intimating to the Republican Party that if they let this bill go through they would suffer defeat at the hands of 5,000,000 organized members of unions in the country. Did it have any effect? Such orders as he gave could have but one effect. Why, the Washington Times came out immediately and said the sedition bill was buried; that it was dead; and my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the chairman of this great committee, came out afterwards and said, "Oh, it is because the newspapers of the country do not want the bill." And he intimated that there were some newspapers from my State which did not want it. I will state to the gentleman [Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas] that he can not name a bona fide, loyal newspaper in Texas that objects to a reasonable, proper antisedition law. I challenge him to do it. The Houston Post, the Dallas News, the Star-Telegram, the Fort Worth Record, the San Antonio Express, the Waco Times-Herald, the Austin papers, the El Paso papers, I challenge him to show that any of such papers as that object to a proper sedition law to stamp out anarchy in our beloved Republic.

Are the Attorney General and the law-enforcing peace officers of this land going to be forced by your action and mine to have bodyguards follow them day after day and night after night to keep them from being assassinated? Why, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], says what Mr. Gompers said, that this bill sought to shackle labor. When Mr. Gompers said that the chairman of the committee said, "Mr. Gompers, please turn to the provision in that bill that you claim seeks to shackle labor," and he could not do it. He had to turn to his attorney and let his attorney point out the supposed paragraph. Then he said that it sought to shackle them because it prevented them from using moral force to change the Constitution. Thereupon the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee arose and explained that moral force was not involved in the bill, and that it did not in any way restrain any newspaper, any public speaker, or any individual, unless they advocated the overthrow of this Government by physical force and violence. Does this bill seek to restrain the use of moral force? No. Does it interfere in any way with the constitutional right of free speech and free press? No; it does not. You can not find a loyal newspaper in the land that will ever be hampered or restrained in any way by the provisions of this bill. But should an anarchist paper like Freedom preach anarchy, or preach the overthrow of this Government by physical force and violence, it will reach them, and it ought to reach them, and it ought to hang their editors as high as Haman. And when a public speaker gets upon the rostrum is there anything in this bill that will prevent free speech? Is there anything that will prevent his advocating a change in the Constitution by lawful means? Why, no; unless in the attempt to exercise his constitutional prerogative he seeks to advise the people of the country to use physical force and violence to throw aside their Constitution and to overthrow their Government. Then it does touch them and reaches them. And the dirty scoundrels ought to be reached by law and properly punished. Are you surprised that the anarchists of the country do not want a law against anarchy? Why, law interferes with their business. Are you surprised that murderers do not like a law against murder? Law and punishment interfere with their murdering. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] frankly says that he is against sedition laws, and intimates that all other union men are against sedition laws, because same might incite trouble with anarchists. Let me ask him, Is he likewise against the law to punish murder? Seditious acts culminate in murder, and no murderer likes the law that punishes the crime of murder. Is he likewise against the law to punish burglary because burglars do not like it? No burglar likes either law or punishment. Is he against the law to punish rape because rapists do not like that law? Is he afraid that such laws may incite murderers, burglars, and rapists to commit crime?

Mr. BURKE. I should like to answer that question.

Mr. BLANTON. I will let you answer it later, but I must use my own time.

Mr. BURKE. All right. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I would gladly yield to the gentleman, had I the time. Do not take this out of my time. Do you know that it is no longer the money power of the country that elects men to Congress now and men to the legislature and men to the governor's chair? Why, the money power is past. That autocracy is gone and forgotten. The biggest autocracy that exists in this Nation to-day is the autocracy that stopped this sedition bill. Samuel Gompers is the presiding autocrat. There is the autocracy. His is the power that fills public office and makes and unmakes laws just now, because the people have not yet fully awaked. Are you men going to be big enough to vote your sentiments? And with the exception of about five men who hold union-labor cards in this House, your real heart sentiments are the same as my sentiments, and you know it. You have got the same feelings on this matter that I have got. You know that the people of the United States are dominated by an organized class and are not getting a square deal. Are you not brave enough in your representative capacity, in behalf of all the people, to get up here and pass a proper sedition law, and let Mr. Gompers go where I once told him to go when he was sending me orders, which instead of obeying I told him to go to hell.

Mr. BURKE. He did not go, though, did he?

Mr. BLANTON. No; and I do not want him to go there. I hope he does not, but he has no business telling me or any other Congressman what we shall or shall not do, or to threaten us so often. He has no right to make a threat against the Republican Party and make your leaders shake in their shoes. He has no right to come in here and stop legislation needed for the country.

There is a proper mode of changing the Constitution. This bill does not take away from my brother union member of my good friend from Pennsylvania any right to change the Constitution lawfully in accordance with its terms.

The political spokesman on the floor of the House for the Republican Party, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], can not camouflage the issue by asserting that the Attorney General has "cold feet." Gen. Palmer personally advised Chairman CAMPBELL that—

A criminal element exists in this country which can not be reached except through a sedition law such as was proposed by him.

The members of the Rules Committee know full well that the bill introduced by Congressman DAVEY was specially prepared by the Attorney General as the legislation needed. With his letter sent to the Rules Committee and read at the hearing yesterday the Attorney General sent a copy of the sedition bill he wanted passed, and urged its prompt passage, and reiterated that he needed it passed to stop anarchy in this country. The people are going to wake up soon and resume mastery. They can not be fooled. They know that it was Samuel Gompers's orders which has stopped this bill, and the people are going to resume electing Congressmen and all other officers before long.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in his remarks put a pointed question to me. I should like to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be heard without getting time from one of the gentlemen in control of the time.

Mr. BURKE. I hope the chairman will give me time to answer the question. It will not take long.

The CHAIRMAN. This is out of order.

Mr. PORTER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, when I was home during the holiday vacation I had a letter handed to me in Cleveland by Mr. Charles W. Toland, which I should like to insert in the RECORD. I have always believed that our diplomatic corps and the Navy should be used as much as possible within reason to advance the commerce of this country, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting this letter.

Mr. WALSH. What is the letter about? Is it about what the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, January 5, 1920.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to call your attention to the difficulties which our Mr. F. B. Anderson recently experienced in endeavoring to make a business trip to South America. The facts are as follows:

The principal product of our factory is machinery used for pressing oil from cocoanuts, peanuts, and other oil-bearing seeds. At the present time we have a large foreign trade in the Orient.

It seems that the Central and South American countries are producers of large quantities of oil-bearing seeds from which valuable edible oils can be obtained.

Prior to the war the Germans largely controlled this business. However, the present is the opportune time for the manufacturers in the United States to obtain this South American trade.

With this in view our Mr. F. B. Anderson planned a six months' trip to South America and provided himself with credentials, passports, and other papers. In fact, he visited the Agricultural Department at Washington, with whom we have had extensive relations in the way of running experiments for them at various times on oil-bearing seeds.

Mr. Anderson left New York on November 24 on the steamer Brazos and arrived at San Juan, P. R., November 24. Inasmuch as there are no steamers from Porto Rico to South America, it was necessary for him to reach the island of St. Thomas, at which point the lines of steamers for South America touch.

While both Porto Rico and St. Thomas are now United States possessions, it seems, however, that there are no connections between the two islands. While Mr. Anderson was at San Juan the United States gunboat Vixen, which, by the way, is a converted yacht, arrived December 2 from St. Thomas, bringing the admiral and his family for Christmas shopping. Mr. Anderson called on Capt. White, of the Vixen, and asked that he and Mrs. Anderson be transported to St. Thomas, and agreed to ride on deck or in any other way they might wish. However, Capt. White absolutely refused to take him, stating that it would be impossible unless he were a Government employee. The Vixen returned to St. Thomas in a day or two and came back again with a party of people who wished to be at San Juan while Secretary Baker was there.

Mr. Anderson again asked Capt. White for passage and was again refused. During the conversation he showed his credentials to Capt. White and also explained that he was not on a pleasure trip, and was frankly told by Capt. White that the Navy did not think much of the business man.

The upshot of the matter was that Mr. Anderson was finally obliged to return to New York and is now in Cleveland, and possibly may not be able to get away this season, inasmuch as all the ships going to South America are booked up.

This seems to us to be a very poor policy on the part of the United States Government in not allowing Government vessels to carry people in an emergency of this kind, particularly as the Vixen was used as a ferry, and, furthermore, as it took only about six hours to go from San Juan to St. Thomas. The Vixen on her trips only carried people who Capt. White claimed were either Government employees or their relatives.

The British consul of San Juan stated that if a British warship came in, he would gladly take Mr. Anderson over to St. Thomas, and further stated that their navy made it a point to assist their people in every way possible, and that they would gladly extend our people the same courtesy.

A Dutch warship came into the harbor while Mr. Anderson was there and offered to take him to the island to which they were destined, but, unfortunately, there was no means of Mr. Anderson getting away from this island for at least 60 days.

We feel, in view of the fact that the Government is urging the people in this country to get foreign trade, that this matter is worthy of investigation, and that Capt. White or his superior officer should be called to account for their attitude, which was certainly unbusinesslike. It has certainly come to a great pass if boats which are paid for by the people and for which the people are taxed can not be used except for carrying naval and Government employees on pleasure expeditions.

Yours, respectfully,

THE V. D. ANDERSON CO.,
A. D. ANDERSON, Secretary.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11960, the Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'CONNELL, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. STOLL (at the request of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina), on account of sickness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—RECLAMATION FUND.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement made by the president of the Pecos Water Users' Association, Carlsbad, N. Mex., before the Committee on Ways and Means. It is very interesting, and I think it would be illuminating to some of us.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. How long an article is it? It is costing a good deal of money to print the RECORD these days.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It is not very long. There are some very interesting statistics in it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

BEFORE THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1920.

STATEMENT IN BEHALF OF $250,000,000 LOAN TO THE RECLAMATION FUND MADE BY FRANCIS C. TRACY, PRESIDENT PECOS WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION, CARLSBAD, N. MEX.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we appreciate that the gravest possible responsibility rests upon you, in that you largely control the expenditures and direct the financial policies of the Nation at this most critical period. The spirit of unrest and discontent threatens civilization itself. At a time when increased production alone can sustain the financial structure through the delicate and difficult readjustment period and repair waste and when such increase is absolutely needed to feed and clothe the world, there is a universal slacking up in labor which is leading toward disaster. Patriotism requires us to speed up. Strict economy is necessary, but economy alone will not pay debts or sustain life. It must be subordinated to the higher law of nature—produce and reproduce or perish.

The agricultural program offers such a procedure—a concrete, safe, and sane road toward a gradual reduction of the high cost of living by a steady increase in the production of the necessities of life and a corresponding increase in the population and wealth of the Nation, thus immediately alleviating the unavoidable burdens of taxation in two directions at one time.

Senator WADSWORTH, of New York, recently put the problem briefly and eloquently when he wrote, "The relative decrease in the farming population has become a menace to the Nation. It is as certain that this Government will be forced to take some definite action regarding the settlement of land as it is that the British people will no longer tolerate the ownership of the land of England for shooting preserves. Home hunger is a primal thing. It is the desire to own homes which has brought millions of immigrants to the United States. Home owners are the backbone of a self-governing nation, because necessarily they are self-governing individuals." A constructive national land-settlement program offers a direct cure for Bolshevism, which is the greatest political problem of the day. This problem is acute and demands immediate solution. All those who have home hunger in their hearts must be searched out and those who are competent must be helped upon the land, whether soldiers, sailors, or long-neglected and undigested foreign immigrants. This must be done by private endeavor under Government guidance. This program will lead to solve the agricultural labor problem in every State. If begun immediately it will offer opportunity for labor in self-sustaining, self-feeding effort should any slacking up occur in industry.

The program must be big enough and broad enough to get big results and to interest and focus the best minds of the Nation and thus stimulate private effort upon the same lines. Therefore Congress must initiate and sustain this new enterprise upon the proper scale and scope to arouse and to direct the patriotic effort of the whole Nation toward increased production and active labor along those lines which first laid in the thirteen original States the foundation of this magnificent, wealthy, and powerful Nation. The superstructure has outgrown this foundation, and it is for us here and now to remedy this condition.

It is interesting and suggestive that although a call was made to more States, the 13 most westerly alone were represented in Salt Lake City in November, and their representatives were the first to formulate a plan for the part of the extreme West in this nation-wide land-settlement program, which to them unanimously appears to be the one best adapted to their local conditions. It is necessarily based upon the national reclamation act, adopted in 1902. This plan has to-day been presented to you and affects the 17 so-called reclamation States.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that these States are very large producers of cattle, sheep, wool, alfalfa, cotton, and sugar—all items directly affecting the cost of living in every household in the United States—and they comprise the only large area where the production of all these products can be rapidly and greatly increased. These products, you will note, complement rather than compete with the products of the rain belt, even our cotton being of special long-staple varieties grown only under irrigation. These products even reduce the cost of living to every farmer's family.

We ask for very little present outlay in comparison to the immediate productive results to be obtained by the completion of works long since begun by the Reclamation Service, but discontinued during the war for lack of funds, labor, and material.

A total loan to the reclamation fund (not a direct appropriation) of $250,000,000 to be pledged at once because of the need of a comprehensive and continuous constructive program, and to avoid all risk of another period of shutdown, waste, and loss, such loan to be made in installments as needed and to be appropriated for yearly expenditure at the discretion of Congress in such amounts as will be most efficient, probably never more than $20,000,000 in any one year.

The yearly appropriation actually required may even probably be reduced by receipts from the sale of public lands and from coal, oil, and gas leases, so as to materially extend the relief period, but it must be held available for time of need.

If desired in the future still further to reduce the annual loan installments from the Treasury, this can be done by establishing a policy of grazing leases or licenses upon the public domain within these States, proceeds of which in part could go to the reclamation fund, or those grazing lands themselves might be turned over to the States to be administered as they see fit, certain proceeds therefrom to go to that fund.

Some such policy of range control and range improvement must soon be established if meat production is to be sustained and increased in the great live-stock breeding area of the Southwest, which now furnishes and must continue to furnish the larger portion of the feeders for the corn belt and the grass lands of the Central States and the North. Three successive years of drought having sadly depreciated the range as well as decreased the herds strongly emphasize this feature, as well as the need for increased alfalfa production. The price of alfalfa in the Southwest has advanced from $8 to $35 and $40 per ton f. o. b. cars under the present conditions.

Should this policy be inaugurated it may well be that this union of the 13 States of the far West and their leadership will result in a new birth of national consciousness, a renewal of national energy, and a new era of national growth second only to that inaugurated by the 13 Eastern States in 1776. Gentlemen, we ask your assistance and your cooperation, as we believe, upon a thoroughly sound basis.

In behalf of New Mexico I append some statistics to support our argument and also to sustain the position that because we have been now working nearly 20 years under a definite Federal reclamation program, which has largely influenced our State irrigation laws and practice, the resulting legal, financial, and practical agricultural and irrigation ramifications are such that all of our greater irrigation problems, and many of the smaller, are so interdependent with Federal interests that we absolutely can not move alone.

New Mexico irrigation statistics.

Total area of New Mexico—acres	78,485,760
Irrigated area (three-fourths of 1 per cent)—do	637,215
Population of the State	450,000
Population of irrigated area (66⅔ per cent)	300,000
Annual production irrigated area	$25,488,600
Total bank deposits in irrigated area	$30,494,000
Total assessed valuation in State	$375,000,000
Assessed valuation of irrigated area	$38,500,000
Area under existing canals to be made available by increased storage chiefly by reclamation funds—acres	150,000
Increase available by completion of Rio Grande and Carlsbad projects and canals at Taos and Fort Sumner—acres	150,000
Total possible increase in irrigated area—do	1,045,000

To illustrate the present interdependence of irrigation, present and future, in the State of New Mexico, both legal and practical, with the reclamation program of the United States, and the present acute situation which is bringing serious financial loss both to the settlers and the United States by delay, it is proper to say that the two reclamation projects in the State—the Rio Grande project, with a net investment cost June 30, 1919, of $2,295,964.75, and the Carlsbad project, net investment $1,204,577.35—are each, respectively, situated at the lower end of the watershed of the two great north and south drainage areas traversing the entire State, and under the State irrigation law hold an appropriation right for storage which completely dominates these drainage areas.

On June 30, 1919, Carlsbad project construction charges had accrued to the amount of $221,963.30, all but $14,406.51 having been collected, while under the Rio Grande no construction charges had been made or collected because of bad drainage conditions and deferred construction now practically at a standstill for lack of funds. Meanwhile, many of the settlers' improved farms have gone back and more are being threatened by the lack of drainage facilities.

Estimated acreage damaged by seepage June 30, 1919	80,700
Estimated acreage protected by drains to June 30, 1919	57,000
Estimated acreage to be protected by drains	147,000
Cost of drainage to June 30, 1919	$930,535.95

(See p. 263 of 18th Ann. Rept. of the Reclamation Service.)

Crop report for the Carlsbad project for the year 1919 is appended hereto to show the character of crops grown and the annual return therefrom on the southern projects in Arizona and New Mexico.

Crop yield report of Carlsbad project for the year of 1919.

Crop.	Area.	Unit of yield.	Yields.				Values.
			Total.	Per acre.			Per unit of yield.	Total.	Per acre.
				Average.	Maximum.	Minimum.
Irrigated for production of this crop:	Acres.
Alfalfa hay	7,031	Ton	21,306	3.03	6	0.5	$20.18	$429,974.00	$61.15
Alfalfa seed	912	Pound	123,041	135	400	25	.245	30,199.00	33.11
Barley	66	Bushel	1,396	21.15	22	20	1.73	2,420.00	36.66
Cane	379	Ton	721	1.90	6	.4	14.61	10,538.00	27.80
Corn fodder	429	do	556	1.30	4	.2	15.73	8,746.00	20.38
Corn, Indian	541	Bushel	11,797	21.80	45	10	1.57	17,773.00	32.85
Corn, sorghum	279	Hundredweight.	2,725	9.75	25	8	2.76	7,528.00	27.00
Cotton	8,713	Bale	5,051	.58	2.75
		Pound	2,525,805	290	1,375	50	.50	1,262,902.00	144.96
Cotton seed	8,713	Ton	2,399	.275	2,610	150	70.00	167,930.00	19.27
Garden	34							2,750.00	80.87
Oats	119	Bushel	1,995	16.76	22	10	.56	1,111.00	9.33
Pasture	1,080	Acre						23,535.00	21.79
Peaches	53	Pound	134,753	2,542	8,000	330	.044	5,998.00	113.17
Pears	7	do	13,500	1,929	3,000	500	.043	585.00	83.57
Potatoes, sweet	21	Pound	181,620	8,649	16,000	1,200	.033	6,056.00	288.38
Wheat	301	Bushel	5,727	19.02	.33	8	1.83	10,501.00	34.88
Total and average	28,678							1,988,546.00	106.01
Less duplicated areas	9,925
Total cropped	18,753
Irrigated for other purposes:
Fall alfalfa seeding	388
Fall oats seeding	157
Irrigated without crop	1,065
Less duplicated areas	1,610
Total other purposes	1,610
Grand total irrigated	20,333

Areas.	Acres.	Farms.	Per cent of project.
Total irrigable area farms reported	24,990.6	565	100
Total irrigated area farms reported	20,363	565	18
Under water right applications	24,990.6	565	100
Under rental contracts	None.
Total cropped area farms reported	18,753	565	75

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 411. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 24, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill relative to promotion by selection in the Navy (H. Doc. No. 628); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report required by the act approved June 25, 1910, covering the period of December 1, 1918, to November 30, 1919, inclusive, together with copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office (H. Doc. No. 629); to the Committee on the Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an alternate estimate of appropriation required for salaries, Metropolitan police, District of Columbia, fiscal year 1921, to comply with provisions of the act of December 5, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 630); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Federal Board for Vocational Education for vocation rehabilitation for the current fiscal year (H. Doc. No. 631); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting alternate estimate of appropriation required by the Federal Farm Loan Board for the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 632); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7629) to amend the penal laws of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 580), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. COLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 806) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 581), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ROSE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7567) for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 583), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 12010) for the erection of a public building at Covington, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VENABLE: A bill (H. R. 12011) to provide for the copyright of educational games; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12012) concerning the administration of the pension laws in claims for pensions of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and by the widows of such persons; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 12013) for the reclamation of lands in the Imperial and Coachella Valleys, Calif., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. RHODES: A bill (H. R. 12014) to provide a tariff and to obtain revenue in connection with cobalt, oxide of, and repealing existing laws fixing the rate of duty on such commodity; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 12015) for the relief of the Leavenworth Bridge Co., of Leavenworth, Kans.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 12016) granting an increase of pension to William F. Dines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 12017) to reimburse William H. Flagg and E. B. Flagg for property destroyed by mail aeroplane No. 73, operated by the Post Office Department; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GANLY: A bill (H. R. 12018) granting an increase of pension to William Riley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERSEY: A bill (H. R. 12019) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah G. Mayo; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 12020) granting a pension to Charles L. Kent; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12021) granting a pension to Ida McCoy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12022) granting a pension to George W. Murphy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12023) granting a pension to Louise M. McArthur; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 12024) granting a pension to Sophia Schram; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROWE: A bill (H. R. 12025) granting an increase of pension to Margaret L. Burns; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 12026) granting an increase of pension to Robert W. McFarland; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 12027) granting a pension to Sarah C. Bragg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 12028) to remove the charge of desertion against William H. Mounce; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 12029) granting a pension to John T. Burris; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12030) granting a pension to James C. Overbee; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1075. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, of New York City, relative to certain legislation now pending; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1076. Also (by request), petition of First National Labor Party, Bellville, Ill., regarding the treatment of the mine workers by the Department of Justice during the recent strike; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1077. By Mr. BROWNING: Petition of the Gloucester County Pomona Grange, No. 8, of New Jersey, against universal military training and a large standing Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1078. Also, petition of the Gloucester County Pomona Grange, No. 8, of New Jersey, protesting against renewal of the daylight-saving plan; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1079. By Mr. CARSS: Petition of sundry citizens of the eighth district of Minnesota relative to certain railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1080. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Philadelphia, Pa., relative to the Mason bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1081. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of the Cliveden Improvement Association, of Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., urging daylight saving legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1082. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, against the Sterling-Graham sedition bills; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1083. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the United Mine Workers of America, at Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against Senate bill 3317 and House bill 11430; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1084. Also, petition of A. M. Farrier, of the Easton Car & Construction Co., of New York City, protesting against Senate bill 3317 and House bill 11430; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1085. Also, petition of the National Conservation Association of Washington, D. C., against certain provisions in House bill 3184; to the Committee on Water Power.

1086. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of Gifford Pinchot, president of the National Conservation Association, regarding the water-power bill (H. R. 3184); to the Committee on Water Power.

1087. Also, petition of Aloysius D. Mabry, first lieutenant, United States Army, Cohoes, N. Y., regarding the protracted hospital treatment for military personnel in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1088. Also, petition of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, protesting against the sedition bills now pending; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1089. By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of Frank P. Rogers, commissioner of highways of Michigan, favoring the Kahn bill (H. R. 9412); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1920.

(Legislative day of Friday, January 23, 1920.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 11892. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11927. An act to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increase of compensation.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] as modified.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum, will he wait a moment? The roll call may serve two purposes. I should like to inquire of Senators if a unanimous-consent agreement can not be obtained to vote on the bill? I would suggest that we vote this afternoon, but, if not, say Monday by 3 o'clock. Such an agreement would necessitate a call for a quorum, and if it is had now the call may accomplish two purposes. Is there any objection so far as Senators present are concerned?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What hour on Monday does the Senator suggest?

Mr. KENYON. I suggest 3 o'clock on Monday, but 4 o'clock would be satisfactory.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not able to speak for those on this side who are absent, but as far as those here are concerned we would not have any objection to making it late in the afternoon on Monday.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. It has been suggested to me by one of the Senators to make it not later than 5 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. KENYON. From our experience yesterday it will be difficult to get a quorum after half past 4. The Senate does not seem to be functioning very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will make it not later than half past 4, the vote might come earlier.

Mr. KENYON. The only thing I am thinking about is that late in the afternoon there will be difficulty in getting a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. To make it not later than 4 o'clock, I think, would be all right.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Iowa ask unanimous consent now? Then his request will require the calling of the roll.

Mr. KENYON. If it is not arranged now, we would have to have another quorum call; and I will make my request now.

Mr. SMOOT. I so understood; and I was not going to suggest the absence of a quorum for that reason. Let the Senator make his request now, and then the roll can be called for a quorum.

Mr. KENYON. There is no use making the request if Senators here are going to object. I can wait until later and see how we get along. It may be that we will reach a vote this afternoon. If not, I will submit the request later in the afternoon. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	Moses	Poindexter
Beckham	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sheppard
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sherman
Dial	Kenyon	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Edge	Kirby	Nugent	Smoot
Elkins	Lodge	Page	Sterling
Fernald	McCormick	Phelan	Trammell
Hale	McCumber	Phipps	Wadsworth
Harris	McNary	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. REED, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. COLT, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. WALSH of Montana, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. NEW, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GERRY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KENYON. I submit the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, January 26, 1920, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill S. 3315, a bill to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and in the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator change 10 minutes to 15 minutes?

Mr. KENYON. On the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; on the bill, for one Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I have no objection to that. I ask leave to change the 10-minute limit to 15 minutes, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire what effect that has on Calendar Monday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement does not provide that the bill shall remain exclusively before the Senate until disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. I think it should do that. It was my intention to move a recess and that would put an end to Calendar Monday. Let the Secretary insert that the bill shall remain before the Senate exclusive of other business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That does away with Calendar Monday, which raises some objection. Is it possible to have the calendar continue until 2 o'clock on Monday?

Mr. KENYON. I would have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to rule that if it does not go in, Calendar Monday is Calendar Monday.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that it go in. Will the Senator from Nebraska agree to that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest to the Senator that I should like to have some opportunity to proceed with the calendar until 2 o'clock.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry. If the proposed unanimous-consent agreement is adopted, the calendar would be before the Senate on Monday until 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Until 2 o'clock, according to the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. Then the unfinished business would come on, speeches would be limited to 15 minutes on the bill, and the vote would commence at 4 o'clock. I have no objection to that if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] does not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair would rule.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement it is proposed to add, "Provided, That nothing in this agreement shall interfere with the morning hour on Calendar Monday."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest it should read that nothing shall interfere with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII on Monday up to 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where Rule VIII takes it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes no further than that.

Mr. KENYON. One o'clock should be changed to two o'clock.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to change the request for unanimous consent as originally made so that it will read:

That after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on said calendar day, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, let there be no misunderstanding about this. Of course, there will be no Calendar Monday should the Senate take a recess to-day.

Mr. KENYON. I did not understand the statement of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair stated that there should be no mistake about this unanimous-consent agreement, if entered into. If a recess is taken from to-day until Monday, there will, of course, be no Calendar Monday.

Mr. KENYON. The understanding is that if it desired to have a Calendar Monday I shall not move a recess, but shall move to adjourn. I made the suggestion a while ago that I would move a recess, thinking that would eliminate Calendar Monday, but I understand the Chair to hold that it would not do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hold any such thing.

Mr. KENYON. If Senators want Calendar Monday, instead of moving a recess, I shall move to adjourn. If they do not, I shall move a recess.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LODGE. I should merely like to hear the terms of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement read, if the Secretary will be kind enough to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, January 26, 1920, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill S. 3315, a bill to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and in the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto: Provided, That nothing in this agreement shall interfere with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII during the morning hour of the said calendar day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

LAND FOR WALTER REED HOSPITAL.

Mr. SPENCER. On yesterday I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a joint resolution to correct a mistake in a bill which we passed in July, 1919, with regard to Walter Reed Hospital. In July, 1919, we authorized the purchase of some land in connection with Walter Reed Hospital in this city. The comptroller has ruled that because in that bill there was a general prohibition against the purchase of land our specific appropriation for Walter Reed Hospital was not available, and the War Department has sent down to us a corrective amendment, which is now Senate joint resolution No. 107, to relieve that situation.

It is important at this time that this legislation pass, because the real estate department has a contract with regard to the purchase of a large portion of the land which is so extremely advantageous that they are anxious at once to close the transaction for fear that they will lose it, as the time runs out in a few days. I therefore ask, if there is no objection, that the joint resolution be now taken up for consideration. It is very brief, and it corrects the situation to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like, first, to have the joint resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That no provisions contained in the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919 (Public, No. 7, 66th Cong.), shall be deemed or construed to prohibit the expenditure of the appropriation of $350,000 made therein for the purchase of land contiguous to the Walter Reed General Hospital, 26.9 acres more or less, and the acquisition of so much of said acreage for the amount appropriated as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may deem to be in the public interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if the price of the land referred to in the joint resolution has been agreed upon?

Mr. SPENCER. There is a definite contract for 94 out of the 195 lots, and the War Department is of the opinion, in which I concur from my own examination, that if these 94 lots are acquired for $82,000, which is the contract price, the remainder of the appropriation of $350,000 will be amply sufficient to complete the entire purchase.

As I have stated, the comptroller made the ruling that our specific appropriation of $350,000 was not available because of a general prohibition in the same bill. As a matter of law, I do not agree with the ruling, but the purpose of this joint resolution is merely to correct the legal status of our appropriation so that it may be available. Otherwise the joint resolution does not change the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that there were 26 acres of land involved?

Mr. SPENCER. That is my information.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, it would cost about $14,000 an acre.

Mr. SPENCER. There are some improvements upon some of the lots; some of them have houses upon them. The land which is now under contract covers 94 lots, at a price of 17 cents a square foot, which is less than one-half of what those lots could be purchased for in the open market.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me that under the unanimous-consent agreement the unfinished business is before the Senate to the exclusion of other business, and I must object to other business being taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objection of the Senator is well taken.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from South Dakota as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no other amendments——

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has some amendments which he desires to offer, and I see he is now in the Chamber.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if it would be advisable in his substitute for paragraph (e) of section 5 to insert after the word "require" the words "as far as practicable," or "as far as possible and practicable," so as to make it conform to the phraseology of paragraph (f), which was disposed of on yesterday.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I would not like to agree to an amendment of that kind in subdivision (e). We have stricken out the words "under penalty" in subdivision (e). I should like to have it still regarded as compulsory, and with the word "require" it will be. It is something with which I think each State can comply. I would not like to have words put in there that would so modify the remainder of the language as to leave it optional with the State, and I am afraid that that is the way it might be construed. I do not think I can agree to an amendment of that kind.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the substitute which has been adopted by the Senate subject to amendment at this time, or must it be reserved for amendment in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not subject to amendment without a reconsideration of the vote whereby it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to urge upon the Senator from South Dakota and upon the Senate to modify the subdivision in the respect to which I have just referred. The Senate must understand that otherwise it would undoubtedly work a very great hardship. It must be apparent to all that there would be a disposition for the legislatures not to attempt a compliance with that provision of this bill. It would be impossible for the legislatures, or, at any rate, impracticable for the legislatures, to require, under penalty, all residents who are citizens of the United States to attend a school for the length of time required by that provision. It makes no exception in the case of sickness; it makes no provision for any exception whatever.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, it does expressly make provision for that class of persons. The words "who are not physically or mentally disqualified" make the exception. If they are physically or mentally disqualified, of course, they do not come under the provisions of subdivision (e).

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I only have before me the original draft of the bill. I have not the Senator's substitute, and doubtless the Senator is right about it and I was wrong. The original bill did not make any exception whatever.

Mr. STERLING. That is true, I will say to the Senator, and I had in mind in framing this substitute the fact that there should be that exception.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, I desire to call the Senator's attention to another situation. Take it in my own State: That is a State about 350 miles wide and 400 miles long, and contains a population of only about 450,000 people. Those people are distributed pretty well all over the State, but there are vast distances where there are but very few people; and I should like to know of the Senator if he has in mind now any way of taking care of that kind of a situation without making some special provision for it? Those people are scattered all over that expanse of country, about 123,000 square miles, engaged in various occupations. A good many of them are sheep herders, and engaged in occupations away from any settlement. Would the Senator require them to give up their business, if there are only a few of them in one section of the country, in order to get to some center where provision might be made for this instruction; or would the Senator want to go to the extent of providing such instruction over such a sparsely settled country? Ought not that to be left to the determination, along practical lines, of the people who know and must deal with the situation? If it is made to read "as far as practicable," it seems to me that ought to be sufficiently drastic.

I am perfectly willing to go to any length that is practicable to carry out the purposes of this bill, and I am in hearty sympathy with it. I do not know of any piece of legislation which to my mind is of greater importance than this bill; but I do want to have it so framed that it will not bring about an impossible situation.

Mr. STERLING. I supposed, Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from New Mexico, that school facilities would be provided for the children of all the States; and if in the Senator's State such school facilities are not provided for the children of the State I think his State must be a rare exception. Wherever a State can provide school facilities for the children I think it can meet the requirements of this subdivision and provide for the education of those between 16 and 21 years of age.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. School facilities are provided for the children who are not above 14 years of age, but no provision is made for the compulsory education of children above 14 years of age in that State, and this relates to those who are above 16 years of age. It would include the young men who are out with the flocks and the herds, long distances from any present school facilities. The Senator lives in a sparsely settled section of the country, but I doubt if it is quite so sparsely settled as some other sections.

Mr. STERLING. I appreciate what the Senator says. There may be those impossible cases, and I do not believe that under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of the Interior will require the impossible to be done, and if there are young men far removed from school facilities or from places where they can be furnished with school facilities I do not believe the State will be held, leaving the language of this subdivision as it is, to provide those facilities.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire of the Senator whether his substitute makes any exception whatever except for the physical disability which he mentioned a while ago?

Mr. STERLING. No physical or mental disqualification.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then would there be any discretion left in the legislature, in providing for the enforcement of this measure, to make any exception?

Mr. STERLING. If I could make an exception to fit the case proposed by the Senator from New Mexico, I should have no objection to doing it. I would suggest to the Senator that he see if he can not frame some amendment that would reach the kind of a case he proposes. I suppose it would hardly be admissible here, but after the bill comes to the Senate it could be offered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Inasmuch as we have agreed upon the language of subdivision (f) it seems to me that a strong case can be made in favor of duplicating that language here, because if you expect the one to accomplish its purpose it would accomplish the same purpose in the other provision.

Mr. STERLING. There is this about subdivision (e): I think the education should be compulsory between the ages of 16 and 21. Subdivision (f) covers the ages between 21 and 45, and there is that reason for the distinction. I do not believe we ought to make it any less than compulsory generally; and if there are exceptions, let those exceptions appear by way of amendment, rather than some general language that will allow any State to ignore the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I fear that the legislatures will not pass any such drastic legislation as would be required by this section as it now reads. I do not believe they will do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if the legislature would be required to have compulsory education generally, or just for illiterates; or would it be a general law?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, simply for illiterates.

Mr. OVERMAN. A general law?

Mr. STERLING. For these illiterates.

Mr. OVERMAN. The compulsion would apply only to illiterates?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly; and, besides, I should say, to any who can not speak, read, or write the English language.

Mr. OVERMAN. And it would not be a general compulsory law from 16 to 21?

Mr. STERLING. Not at all. It would apply only to all illiterates; and to those who, under the language of the bill, can not speak, read, or write the English language.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not know whether the substitute of the Senator from South Dakota was adopted upon a roll call or not. If I have the right, I should like to move at this time to reconsider the vote by which the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota was adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico a question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is the Senator opposed to the limitation of 16 to 21 for illiterates?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all. It is not a question of the age or any other provision regarding it; but the way the paragraph now reads, it provides that they shall require under penalty all these residents to do this, and the only exception to it is the one of physical disability, which has been put in here. What I am insisting upon is that there may be other conditions which would become apparent to the legislature of a State at the time it was passing legislation upon this subject which would make it impracticable. Therefore I seek to put in here, in connection with this requirement, a proviso that they shall require as far as practicable, under penalty, these things; and it will undoubtedly develop in various States that there are local situations, or situations of one kind or another, which would make it impossible or impracticable or inadvisable for the legislature to pass an act making it a penal offense not to educate the people under circumstances which would be contrary to all sense of justice. What I am seeking to do is to put in there the words "require as far as practicable." I am willing to add to that, "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will allow me to make a suggestion, it is that, instead of reconsidering the vote by which this substitute was adopted, the Senator consider the question of an amendment to be offered, and I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I will do the same thing, and I will confer with him and see if we can not agree upon an amendment to meet some such situation as he suggests. Let me say further, in answer to the Senator, that the words "under penalty" have been stricken out by amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I shall be very glad to act upon the suggestion of the Senator and withdraw my motion at the present time, and I shall be glad to confer with the Senator from South Dakota with regard to it.

Mr. STERLING. We will not dispose of it now before Monday, and there will be ample opportunity, I think.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well. I shall be very glad to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move as a substitute for section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That of the amount appropriated by section 2 above, $336,100 may be deducted and used for the following purposes:
Administrative officers, specialists, and field officers in Washington, D. C.—1 at $5,000, 4 at $4,000 each, 3 at $3,500 each, 5 at $3,000 each, 4 at $2,750 each, 5 at $2,500 each; total, $70,000;
Clerks, stenographers, and messengers in Washington, D. C.—1 at $2,000, 3 at $1,800 each, 6 at $1,600 each, 10 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,200 each; total, $37,000;
Regional officers—4 at $3,500 each, 8 at $3,000 each; total, $38,000;
Clerks and stenographers in regional offices—4 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; total, $10,400;
For printing, stationery, illustrative material, $75,000;
For traveling and subsistence, $30,000;
Rent of regional offices, $5,000;
Part-time expert help in preparing material for teaching, $50,000;
Ten short-course training schools for supervisors and directors and those who will train teachers, $20,000; and Incidental and contingencies, $7,000.

Or a total, in all, of $336,100.

I simply want to say that instead of a lump sum of $500,000, this amendment provides the number of administrative officers, specialists, and field officers in Washington, the number of clerks and stenographers and messengers, the number of regional officers, the number of clerks and stenographers in regional offices, and then the general expenses for the administration of the act itself.

Mr. KENYON. I want to make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah. That cuts, as I understand it, the number of officers desired by the Department of the Interior for this work, and it cuts the appropriation about $170,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it cuts the number of clerks and officers, not only in Washington but the regional officers and clerks as well, and it also deducts from the itemized statement made by Mr. Claxton, the commissioner, for the expenses in the administration of the law.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to offer no objection to the amendment. I believe that payment out of lump sums is bad policy. While the amendment does not give them as much help as they think they ought to have, they can undoubtedly get along with it. I am willing that the amendment shall be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest that, on page 2, line 13, the word "periodicals" should be stricken out. Possibly that has already been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The whole section in the text is out now.

Mr. KENYON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to a number of matters. We have had a good deal of discussion on the floor as to the power of the Secretary of the Interior in the regulation of this work. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that in section 7, page 6, in line 6, after the word "being," there be inserted the word "properly." I move as an amendment, in line 6, page 6, section 7, that the word "properly" be inserted.

I shall follow that with other amendments to section 10 to make it clear that if the money under this act is not used by the States fairly and properly to carry out the purposes of the act it will be within the power of the Secretary of the Interior, under section 10, to stop payment after the first three months. That is to meet the question that has been in people's minds and has made some trouble about the bill. I do not think there is anyone who wants to have the money used unfairly as between races or anybody else, and it does give the Secretary that power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 6, after the word "being" and before the word "applied," insert the word "properly."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator also stated that it is his purpose to move to strike out subdivision (g), on page 4, section 11.

Mr. KENYON. When we complete these amendments, if the Senator from Georgia will move to strike out subdivision (g), as far as I am concerned I shall offer no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 7, section 10, I move these amendments: In line 2, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," I move to strike out the words "shall pay" and insert the word "made"; and, after the word "year," in line 4, to insert the words "shall pay." Then, in line 6, after the word "act," I move to insert the words "for the ensuing quarter."

Let us understand that thoroughly. It means that the certifications shall be made quarterly, so that if under section 7 the Secretary of the Interior should reach a determination that the money was not being properly applied to carry out the purposes of the act he could stop any further payment for that year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, his first amendment was, in line 2, to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may"?

Mr. KENYON. To substitute "made" for "shall pay." Then, the words "shall pay" come in after the word "year," in line 4, so that it would read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior made on the 15th day of August, November, February, and May of each year, shall pay to the custodian of such sums in each State the money to which it is entitled under the provisions of this act for the ensuing quarter.

Under section 7 the Secretary of the Interior could not, if the work was not being properly done, as the bill now stands, stop payment until the year had expired. Under this amendment he could stop payment quarterly if the work was not being carried out. There ought to be no question about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the amendment will reach the situation that the Senator suggests.

Mr. KENYON. I feel fortified by hearing the Senator's approval.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 5, line 22, the words "Territories, or possessions" should be stricken out. I move that as an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to strike out, on page 4, subdivision (g), and I will follow that with a motion to strike out section 11, on page 7.

Mr. KENYON. As the question is thoroughly covered by the amendments I have suggested, and which have been adopted, as far as I am concerned, I shall offer no objection to the Senator's motion to strike out subdivision (g).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, strike out subdivision (g), beginning in line 13, in the following words:

(g) Require the preparation and submission to the Secretary of the Interior, annually, of rules and regulations designed to enforce the provisions of such State law and the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I now move to strike out section 11, page 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out section 11, page 7, in the following words:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government and request such agencies to cooperate with him and with the several States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of section 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 3 has already been stricken out and a substitute agreed to.

Mr. REED. I asked for a copy of the bill this morning as amended to date, but apparently this is not such a copy.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that I offered a substitute for section 3 subsequent to the statement I made to the Senator that no change had been made in it.

Mr. REED. The Senator showed me that substitute. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Would it be in order at this time, before the bill gets into the Senate, to move to strike out the substitute? That would have to be done in the Senate, would it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote would have to be reconsidered.

Mr. REED. I was engaged when the Senator offered his substitute, and did not know that it was being voted upon. It went through on a viva voce vote. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah to move a reconsideration in order that I may make my objection to that section. I shall be very brief about what I have to say.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the substitute for section 3 of the bill was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Utah was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. REED. As I understand the situation now, the Senator's substitute is the same as section 3, except that it provides specifically the sums of money which shall be spent in the manner and form set forth in the tabulation he has given me.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. In other words, the appropriation is cut from $500,000 to $336,100; but the items the Senator will find in the tabulation I have just handed him.

Mr. REED. Those tabulations which I have before me provide for clerks and stenographers in the regional offices and for printing. Does the Senator understand that there is no part of this appropriation left to be employed for the printing of periodicals devoted to Americanization problems?

Mr. SMOOT. There is $75,000 provided. The estimate from Dr. Claxton, I will say to the Senator, was $100,000, and by this amendment it is cut to $75,000.

Mr. REED. In a parliamentary sense, the substitute is now before the Senate, and I very much favor the substitute over the original. What I desired to do was to move to strike out the entire item.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the easiest way for the Senator to do would be to reserve the right for a separate vote in the Senate, or he can ask the Senate now to disagree to the amendment and then move to strike out the original section 3 of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator to what extent his motion goes? He proposes to strike out the amount to be used for printing?

Mr. REED. I want to strike out any part of this bill which provides for the publication of periodicals.

Mr. KENYON. That is the extent to which the Senator's motion goes?

Mr. REED. That is the extent to which it goes.

Mr. SMOOT. It is in order at the present time, then, for the Senator to move to amend the substitute by striking out the item for printing, amounting to $75,000.

Mr. REED. I feel like apologizing for not knowing myself what I ought to do, but while the bill has been under consideration I have been held elsewhere.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is perfectly plain. What the Senator from Missouri wants to do is to strike out section 3 entirely. So, if he can accomplish his purpose, he can accomplish it by having the pending amendment disagreed to and then move to strike out section 3.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I suggested.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not want to strike out all of section 3, but only that part as to the publication of periodicals. I suggest that the proper course to follow would be to vote to strike out the item for $75,000.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out from the substitute the item which reads as follows:

For printing, stationery, illustrative material, $75,000.

Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on my proposed amendment to the amendment. I very much doubt the propriety of the Federal Government entering the field of education. There is no one who more than myself believes that every man, woman, and child in the United States ought to be given a liberal education. I go to the extent of saying that I am in favor of compulsory education for the rising generation whether the individuals are born in this country or elsewhere.

But, Mr. President, there are some duties that ought to be performed by the States. If the State governments are incapable of doing anything, they should be abolished. If we are in fact to centralize all power in Washington, we might as well do so boldly and at once. Nobody yet proposes that, although, taking into account the recent drift of affairs, it may soon come.

In my opinion the chief trouble with all our legislation nowadays is this: We find that some particular condition existing in a community or State does not suit us, whereupon we assume that if we take jurisdiction of that question we will conduct it in infallible wisdom. We confidently assert that whatever we undertake to do will be done right; that all the mistakes that the States may have made will be avoided; that whereas the States have only mortals for the administration of their affairs, we will create something supermortal to administer affairs here at Washington. Accordingly we presume that if a State has had an educational system which has in some manner become involved in politics, and we transfer the venue to Washington, we will have a pure and exalted atmosphere in which the wickedness of politics never enters. If a State has done anything which seems to us to be in dereliction of duty, we assume the superior right to judge that State. We forget that the officers and citizens of a State probably know their own business a good deal better than the bureaucrats of the Capital.

So we are undertaking to regulate everything here at Washington. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that there is not a State in the Union which does not run its business better than the Federal Government runs its business. It manages its business better because its agencies are closer to the business and because those agencies are held to a more direct and immediate reponsibility by their constituencies. The further you remove the agencies of government from the people the greater likelihood of error, inefficiency, and rascality. At the same time there is an inevitable increase of ignorance regarding the wants of the people. If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] were an officer of the State of North Carolina, and had presented to him a question affecting the people of North Carolina, he would at once be able to visualize the situation. He knows the people of his own State, he knows their environments, their wants, their ambitions, and he is dealing with a question with which he is familiar.

But another element enters. If he were an officer of the State of North Carolina dealing with a question immediately affecting the people thereof, if he were to fail in his duty, the people of his State might remove him from office.

Those two elements just discussed do not so directly affect the qualifications of Federal officers. If the Senator will pardon me for carrying the illustration a little further, I will assume that he in his capacity as Senator is required to act upon a proposition which is local to the State of Maine. Beyond all question he can not approach it with the degree of knowledge he possesses and may employ in matters concerning his own State.

Besides, the incentive to do something which pleases the people of his own State because of the rewards which they may grant or the punishments which they may administer through removal from office or through loss of their good will is absent in the case where the Senator is dealing with the question from Maine. The consequence is that every time we transfer to the city of Washington these questions that are properly local we are placing them in the hands of men who do not understand local conditions, and who are not directly and immediately responsible to the constituency affected for their conduct. Accordingly, it almost invariably happens that in Washington we get a class of service that is not the equivalent of the service that can be rendered by a State to its people.

It may be said that sometimes States have failed. Over against that I state the proposition that almost universally the Federal Government has failed. Will somebody tell me what branch of business the Federal Government has ever successfully conducted? If you answer the post office, I reply that the post office is not in any proper sense a business concern. It does not trade or traffic. It merely sells stamps at its own price and permits no rivals in its chosen field. We tried to manage the railroads and we made an inglorious mess of that.

The only real progress I have observed is in a placard stuck up in the front end of every car and printed on the back of every menu in every dining car, which asserts the proposition that when a man gets a job on a railroad he becomes a partner in the company and the railroad is thereafter to be run in his interest.

The language substantially is that the railroad is being run in the interest of the public and of the employees, "whose partnership in the enterprise is cheerfully and ungrudgingly recognized." The proposition is pure, absolute, unqualified, unmitigated socialism or communism, as believed in and advocated by the so-called most advanced Bolshevists of the world.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I inquire of the Senator where he states that language is to be found?

Mr. REED. It is placarded in the front end of every passenger car in the United States, and has been for a year; it is on the back of every menu in every dining car on every railroad, and the Government has paid for the printing of that miserable propaganda. The placard used to bear the distinguished signature of Mr. McAdoo, and it is now adorned with that of Mr. Hines. It either means nothing or it means that when a man gets a job on a railroad, whether he is the peanut boy on the train or the man who puts in the ties, or the engineer, or the conductor, he is a partner in the enterprise—not an employee getting pay and wages, but that he becomes a copartner, and that "the partnership is cheerfully and ungrudgingly recognized." When the Government is teaching that sort of rot, that sort of communistic socialism; when the Government, at the expense of the people who ship over the roads, is sowing the seed of a false doctrine broadcast throughout the country, it is time for me to vote to stop appropriating money which may be employed for propaganda purposes.

I have just as much respect for the men who work on the railroads as I have for any class of citizens in our country, and I have voted for them and with them time and again when the opportunity offered. But if the man who works on a railroad is a joint partner in the enterprise the moment he gets a job, then every man who works for anybody else in any capacity has the same right exactly to claim that he is a partner in the business of his employer. So far as the question I am now discussing is concerned, there is no difference in the rule between the public highway that happens to be run by the Government of the United States while it is owned by private individuals and any other private enterprise.

It is no wonder that we have Plumb bills, for this proposition goes further than the Plumb bill; at least, it lays the groundwork for going further, for if those men who work on the railroads are partners in the railroad enterprise, and are cheerfully and ungrudgingly recognized as such, then they have a right to a division of the profits, that being the undoubted right of every partner in a business.

I did not intend to discuss that question, but if the stockholders of the railroad and the employees of the railroad are to be jointly interested in the enterprise and to own it, I wonder what is going to happen to the public that must travel and ship over the railroad? There ought never to arise between the members of such a partnership as I have discussed any difficulty in fixing rates high enough to enrich both groups of partners. All they have to do is to fix the rates high enough so that wages and profits, however high, may be promptly met from the earnings. That is the Plumb plan, but back of the Plumb plan is the McAdoo plan continued by Mr. Hines. I do not know who is back of them. Whoever he may be, I repudiate the doctrine. I am tired of seeing the Federal Government employ the money of the taxpayers of the country to teach socialism and communism. There has been an enormous amount of money so wasted.

What has become of the old Democratic-Republican doctrine that the individual man must take care of himself except in cases of misfortune or infancy?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was merely wondering if the Senator thought that we would return to our Democratic moorings by nominating Mr. Hoover.

Mr. REED. That depends. If we adopt the League of Nations, he is the logical candidate for all parties indorsing that un-American scheme to nominate. I will tell you why. The League of Nations surrenders the sovereignty of the world to an organization which will be dominated by the British Empire. That has been proven on this floor time and time again. The British Empire will cast 6 votes in the assembly direct; she will cast the vote of Persia, which decadent land she now owns; the vote of India, her conquered slave; the vote of Portugal, for years a British pawn; the vote of Hejaz, whose King is in her pay.

She will dominate Greece as she has in the past. Belgium, dependent upon her for support, may not resist her imperious will; France, proud and great, confesses her dependence upon the Empire's navy and army. Behold her as she stands, her hands outstretched to the Senate, asking that we jointly with Great Britain guarantee her against Germany. When she appeals to us all must realize that her chief reliance is Great Britain, whose mighty navy and army is at her door.

If, therefore, we have a British league of nations, dominated by British votes, why not nominate Mr. Hoover, who all of the years of his adult life has been a denizen and resident of Great Britain; who never yet cast a vote in the United States, unless he has done so since he came here in the capacity of nonofficial food dictator? Possibly, for the purpose of qualifying for office, he has since voted. Why not have him for our President? He will fit admirably into the new order of things. Permit me to further display my candidate's special pro-British qualifications. When Mr. Hoover but crossed over to this country he was written up by a eulogist, who undoubtedly spoke by the card and who probably also spoke for the coin. That eulogist, after he had described Mr. Hoover's beautiful house in London and had told us what great corporations he was connected with, stated that, being asked as to his politics, Mr. Hoover declared that he guessed "he was a liberal." Of course, the Liberal Party is a British party.

Mr. Hoover evidently had not been frequently enough in the United States so that he knew our political parties. Naturally he had to describe his politics by the name of a British political party. The circumstance is a very happy one, for it now eminently qualifies him to run on any platform of any party or on the platforms of all parties, for he owes allegiance to none.

Mr. LODGE. Where did that eulogy of Hr. Hoover appear?

Mr. REED. I put the eulogy into the RECORD when we were first discussing Mr. Hoover. It can easily be found. It was an article written, I think, by Mr. Irwin. It is all copied here and sacredly preserved, covered with the dust of time and laid away in that cemetery of forgotten things, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I call attention in particular to the fact that Mr. Hoover left here when he was 21 or 22 or 23 years of age. When he came back to the United States he was 46 or 47 years old. He had lived in Great Britain or in the British possessions all of that time. In his youth he was taken from America in the employ of a British syndicate which was operating in Australia. At the time he came to this country he was a member of a very large number of syndicates, joint-stock companies, and so forth, that were operating or pretending to operate in many countries of the world, but chiefly in England. There were Romanoffs who were members of some of his Russian corporations, and there were Englishmen galore of various titles and descriptions in others of his syndicates and corporations. Being asked as to his business, his answer was that he was a promoter. I think that is true. Just now he is promoting a boom for President—his own boom.

So, Mr. President, if we are going to have a British League of Nations, by all means let us have a man who has been trained to English life and English politics and English social rules and English business conditions and who has plenty of investments in British companies, so that when he acts in conjunction with Great Britain we will know at least that British money and British capital are being well cared for. If the world is bankrupt and out of the wreckage we are to save nothing but a British League of Nations, by all means let us keep that country solvent. Why not Mr. Hoover? Think of the influence that America, after going into this League of Nations, might be able to exert if it had Mr. Hoover for President. He knows all the English nobility; he has had a lot of them in his companies; there are many of them in his companies yet; therefore he would have the entrée at once, through these financial connections, with the high fiscal authorities of the British Government. He might get many favors for us as we exist as a subordinate State in the League of Nations. If we are going to have a British League of Nations, let us have somebody represent us who can get next to the British Government.

Mr. President, I charge that Mr. Hoover was one of the go-betweens between Mr. House and members high in the British Government during the negotiations that preceded this war. He was so close to the British Government then as to constitute a convenient connecting link. If anybody wants to investigate that statement, let him offer a resolution of investigation.

In further commendation of Mr. Hoover I direct attention to the fact that he absolutely has no American politics. By reason of that circumstance he will be able to do whatever Great Britain desires him to do without running inconveniently into some political pledge of either the Republican or the Democratic Party, for were he an adherent of either he might be suddenly confronted by a platform announcing some real American principle; some of the old doctrines of the fathers. How inconvenient when we are in the league for an American President, nominated and elected on an American platform, to do business in an organization based upon internationalism, which implies that all nationalities are to be dissolved, all flags be merged into one conglomerate banner, all peoples are thrust into a common melting pot, and that in the fires of the new internationalism all the patriotism of the world is to be consumed. The love of country is to become a thing dead and forgotten. It is to be cast away as a barbarism to be abominated. In the "new era" we are to crush affection for native land and love of the old flag because all that is selfish and wicked and small; we are to become citizens of the world, lovers of mankind, brothers of everybody.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is looking at me, may peradventure be our delegate to the new world government. I can behold him entering the great hall at Geneva; the representative of Haiti upon one arm and the representative of Liberia upon the other, thus exemplifying that glorious trinity—brotherhood, charity, and universal love. I could enlarge the picture, but it pains me so, I desist and "return to my muttons." Why not have a man well trained in British affairs to represent us when we take our place in tribunal exactly on a par with a British colony, except in one small particular, namely, we are a permanent member of the council, whereas the colony must be elected from time to time, a thing easily accomplished by the votes controlled by the British Empire. When that has been done the British colony or dependency will be qualified to sit on the council with us, qualified to sit there, although the mother country is a permanent member; qualified to sit there, although there may be three other British colonies there as temporary members. They are qualified to sit on the council because Lloyd-George, Clemenceau, and Woodrow Wilson have certified the fact.

As the procession forms to enter the world capital I observe that at its head marches the representative of the Imperial Government. Immediately back of him come the representatives of four British colonies and the representative of one British slave, India. The slave India wears golden chains, but they are none the less the chains of servitude. Then immediately behind them, in a sort of post of honor, comes the Senator from North Carolina, now the representative of the United States Government, and flanked on either hand, tricked out in the barbaric grandeur of the tropics, the gentleman from Liberia and the gentleman from Haiti, waving fans to keep off the flies. [Laughter.] Coming along immediately behind them is the gentleman from Siam, the representative of a dying race that is to-day a mere pawn for the British Empire. He is being led by a British officer to tell him where to go and how to go. Then comes an individual wearing a turban, with bare legs, bare arms, and a huge spear over his shoulder. He is drawing $150,000 from the British Empire as the King of Hedjaz. He is right alongside of the Senator. He has just the same vote as the Senator. And poor Persia, with her newly forged chains, a British possession to-day—the representative of that country follows along, another British vote. And Portugal and Greece—I shall not name them all.

They number a full round dozen, enough votes so that in any controversy the British Empire may have before the assembly of the League of Nations—and every controversy between nations can be sent there—the Empire can prevent a binding decision being rendered against her. This is so because a decision by the assembly must be rendered by the unanimous vote of the members of the council, who are also members of the assembly, and by a majority of the noncouncil members. As the organization is now constituted, there will be 23 votes in the assembly outside of the nine council members. Great Britain already controls a majority of these noncouncil members, so that no such thing as a decision against Great Britain is ever possible. Such are the conditions existing as we are asked to place our neck under the infamous and treacherous yoke. Great Britain has a decision against her effectively blocked. If we are to enter this British League of Nations, will it not advantage us to have a near-British subject as our representative, so why not all be for Mr. Hoover?

It is said that he made $10,000,000—I saw the statement in a paper; I do not know whether it is true or not—before he was 30 years old.

That, now, is advanced as a reason why he should be elected President of the United States! A get-rich-quick promoter is the kind of man we ought to have for President! The qualification is that he made money and made it quick. We are not to inquire how; that is immaterial, even insolent. But the modern altruist must know that he made it quick.

If that is the supreme qualification and we Democrats nominate Mr. Hoover, then I say to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that the only thing that can save his party from defeat is to nominate J. Rufus Wallingford. [Laughter.] Then we would have a race of two horses bred alike, trained alike—neither of them ought to be handicapped a pound, for each would have a fair and equal chance at the money; and as that would be what each of them apparently has most desired and gained in life, by all means let us sit back in the grandstand and watch the performance, for I am sure they would both run true to form.

I trust that the distinguished Senator from Georgia, who asked the question that has unexpectedly led me into this digression, is prepared to indorse Mr. Hoover this morning, and do it publicly. Why, I understand that he has bought two newspapers already, while he is being ravished into this fight.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator means that Mr. Hoover has bought them, not the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I wish to say that my question did not imply any committal of myself in any sense.

Mr. REED. I am disappointed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hate to disappoint the Senator, but still I must continue to say that my question was intended to obtain information. I wanted to know something from the Senator from Missouri, and I have learned part of what I had expected to hear. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. If the Senator will compose himself, I will contribute some more. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will compose myself if the Senator does not suggest again that I meant to indorse Mr. Hoover as my choice.

Mr. REED. I am really a little disappointed, because I thought I had found some one man who was for Hoover besides himself and his press agent. I confess that the sentence I employed was susceptible of a misconstruction.

I did not mean to say that the Senator from Georgia had bought two newspapers. It is the "gentleman from London" who has acquired the two newspapers. He has bought them to keep the people from nominating him, evidently, because by his own vociferous assertions up to this hour, like a coy, blushing, and virtuous maiden he is fighting valiantly to preserve his honor alike against the seductive wiles and brutal force of politicians who ruthlessly seek to overcome his virgin innocency. Nevertheless the newspapers have been acquired, according to the public press. What part of the $10,000,000 has been thus employed deponent saith not and knows not. To what purpose they have been purchased I venture no suggestion, except that they must be intended to be so employed as to keep the people from nominating Mr. Hoover.

Mr. President, some day, when I have the time, I am going to have some remarks to make about Mr. Hoover. [Laughter.]

I pass the subject at this time with the remark: To what estate has our country come when it can be seriously proposed that a man shall be nominated for President who probably has never voted yet in the United States; whose every interest and inclination kept him in Great Britain for 23 years out of a life of 46 years; who when he returned to America knew so little about our politics that he described himself as a "Liberal," and who to-day is so ignorant of public policies that even now he can not tell whether he is a Democrat, a Republican, a Socialist, or a Populist; he apparently only knows that he wants to be President of the United States, and we are told he has $10,000,000. Whether he intends to invest that in his new scheme of promotion remains to be seen. I do not say he has said he will invest it, but the argument that is being put forward—and it looks to me like propaganda, duly inspired—is that he has made $10,000,000 and that he made it quick. Hence the inference. Why not?

To what estate has a country fallen—men out promoting their own candidacies, running for President, with no other qualification than the fact that they have made money.

About the last qualification in the world for President of the United States is that he has made a lot of money. I commend this philosophy of the Bible—"where a man's treasure is, there will his heart be also." I wonder how many British investments this recent acquisition to American population, Mr. Hoover, has?

I hope that the rule laid down about getting into heaven will be forever applied to the Presidency. That "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God" ought to be the rule as to the Presidency. I have no attack to make upon men who have made money honestly, and have not made it too quickly, but no man ever ought to be President of the United States who has so much money that he made quickly, or which he made by long drudgery, that the weight of the money may pull him away from the interests of the common people of the land.

I know Mr. Hoover will be very popular with the farmers, to whose wheat, contrary to the spirit of the law, by a gross abuse of the letter of the law, he denied a free market. This Mr. Hoover did. Congress passed a law authorizing the licensing of certain dealers and traders. It did it for no other purpose in the world than to stop the cornering of the market, the forestalling of the market. The debates will show the fact. So, in order to put a ready curb upon these practices Congress provided a system of licensing. I repeat, it was to prevent the evil practices I have described. The law did not give to Mr. Hoover or any other man born of woman the right to fix the price of the grain raised by the farmers of this country.

On the contrary, in order to encourage the raising of grain, the planting of enormous crops, a guaranty by law of a minimum price, which would be made good by the Government, was put into the statute. Instead of giving anybody authority to keep down the price and control the price of the farmer's product we undertook to encourage the farmer by guaranteeing him against a possible loss, by paying him generously when the world needed his grain.

In this Government of law, where no man has ever been authorized to employ a statute for the purpose of coercing and compelling others to do something he has not given direct authority to command, Mr. Hoover proceeded as I shall state. I charge in advance that he was guilty of an abuse of power which has no parallel in the history of this country. He started upon a deliberate plan to fix the price of the farmer's wheat. The farmer had, speaking broadly, three possible markets. First, the great market afforded by the grain exchanges of the country. As long as that market was open, the farmer could sell there in competition with all the other farmers of the country; he could at the same time have the benefit of the world bidding for his grain.

Mr. Hoover compelled all grain dealers to take out licenses. He did not say to them, as the law contemplated, "You must not profiteer; you must not corner the market. You must let these grains go on to their ultimate destination as rapidly and uninterruptedly as possible," thus carrying out the principle for which the law was enacted. That is not what Mr. Hoover did at all. Mr. Hoover got some of the biggest grain gamblers there ever were in the United States on his board, and then Mr. Hoover said to the grain men, "If you pay a penny more for wheat than I have fixed, I will forfeit your license and destroy your business and ruin you." I do not mean to say that he told them in so many words he would ruin them; he simply said, "We will forfeit your license," and that spelled ruin. Thus, the farmer, if he sold to the grain dealer, was compelled to take the price that Mr. Hoover fixed, not the price that was fixed in the world market.

One other source of market was the miller. Mr. Hoover licensed the miller, and then said to the miller, "You shall not buy your grain except from the licensed grain dealer, and you must pay him a specified price, which I fix, and if you violate my instructions in the slightest particular your license will be revoked, your mill will be closed." Finally that order was modified to this slight extent, that wheat hauled in wagons to a mill might be bought by the miller, but that probably is not one thousandth part of the wheat of the United States.

So there was, then, only one other place where the American farmer could sell his wheat; that was abroad. But that way was blocked by the organization of the "wheat corporation," which alone had authority to ship abroad.

It was dominated by Mr. Hoover, and the price again was fixed. So the power to license, which was intended by the lawmakers only for the purpose of protecting the country against the men who organized the combinations in restraint of trade, and who sought to hoard provisions and extort prices by hunger, was wrongfully and infamously employed by Mr. Hoover for the purpose of fixing the price of all the grain that was raised on all the farms of the United States. Talk about electing a man of that kind for President! What would a man of that kind do with the great powers of the presidential office, a man who thinks that the right to license a man to sell grain gives him the right to close the market to the American farmer? A man who would give that sort of a construction to the laws of this country, if he were the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, would feel perfectly justified in using all its coercive force to accomplish any end he might have in view.

Mr. President, I want to talk for a minute about the pending bill. I am opposed to placing any fund in the hands of any department of the Government for the purpose of propaganda work. In the first place, the business of looking after the education of the people belongs to the several States. In the second place, I am unqualifiedly opposed to having a board set up here at Washington that proposes to teach the people of the United States what they ought to think. I do not care how well it may run at first, the time is absolutely bound to come when somebody will be in control of that educational bureau who will be educating people according to his notions, and his notions will probably fit in with the political notions of the party that put him in power.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri if we have not some precedents for this kind of legislation, for instance, the agricultural extension bill, passed in 1914; followed by the vocational educational bill, and that followed by the vocational rehabilitation bill, passed in the last Congress, providing for cooperation between the Federal Government and the States with regard to these matters?

Mr. REED. If the Senator's illustrations were pertinent they would do no more than to prove that we had already gone too far in that direction, or that we are now about to go too far. But let me call the Senator's attention to the line of demarcation.

When you undertake to teach a farmer how to improve his wheat or his corn or his hogs you are dealing purely with an economic question. It has nothing to do with government. So with all the other plans that the Senator has spoken of. But here you are proposing to authorize the teaching of ideas to a class of men who come to this country. It is a formative process. It has to do with ideas. It has to do with the issuance of a paper. Mr. President, we have had some experience along that line. Congress refused to set up a press censor, and thereupon the President set up Mr. Creel's bureau, and it furnished a lot of the misinformation this country had during the war.

I am opposed to setting up a governmental directorship of ideas. I do not intend to talk any longer about the bill. It is perfectly plain to me that you can not have a paper of that kind issued without the person who issues it ultimately beginning to use it for the purpose of controlling the ideas of the people. Perhaps with the best intentions, he will nevertheless weave his ideas into the teachings, and if we enter upon such a field there is no one who can tell where we will end.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the item for $75,000 will be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the interesting speech just delivered by the Senator from Missouri, I have been looking forward to a motion from him to strike out the word "Americanization" and substitute in lieu thereof "internationalism."

Mr. REED. I think that would be an office that ought properly to be performed by the Senator who makes the suggestion. I would be very glad to vote for it; that is, if we have the League of Nations.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I find a great deal to commend in the bill now before us. I am going to support the bill for an Americanization program as presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. The chief objection at this time, I think, is its demand upon the Public Treasury, but since the Senator from Iowa has greatly reduced the appropriation required I think we should at least give it a trial. I think one of the reasons for the high cost of living, with which we are all deeply concerned, is the high cost of government.

I wish to present to the Senate a telegram I have just received from the National Wool Growers' Association, which I think is quite illuminating as to a phase of the high cost of living problem that deeply concerns the American people to-day. I ask that the Secretary may read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read, as suggested.

The telegram was read, as follows:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 23, 1920.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

Retail clothing is high, and many people are of the opinion that this high price is due to the price of wool. The National Wool Growers' Association desires that the public shall know exactly what part of the cost of clothing goes to the man who raises the sheep and produces the wool. All-wool three-piece suit of men's clothing is to-day retailing from the stores at $50 to $75 for a man weighing 175 pounds. Three and one-half yards of cloth is required to make a suit. The weight of cloth for men's clothing ranges all the way from 10 ounces to 18 ounces per yard. The average medium-weight winter suit is made of goods weighing 14 ounces per yard. At 3½ yards per suit, then, the cloth in the entire suit weighs 49 ounces, or slightly over 3 pounds. In the manufacture of worsted all-wool cloth it requires 1¼ pounds of scoured wool to produce 1 pound of cloth; therefore, to make all the cloth in this suit would require 61¼ ounces of scoured wool, or, say, 62 ounces. Western wool is selling on the Boston market from 70 cents to $2 per scoured pound, depending on the fineness of the wool. The finer the wool the higher the price. Between the coarsest wool and the finest wool we have a medium grade, known as three-eighths blood. This is a general-purpose wool suitable for the manufacture of men's or women's dress goods. This grade of wool is selling in Boston on this date at from $1.25 to $1.36 per scoured pound. As 62 ounces of scoured wool is required to make the entire suit, then the cost of wool in the suit is $5.27. If the suit happens to be made of the very finest western wool, selling at $2 per scoured pound, instead of the medium grade, then the wool in the entire suit will cost $7.37. Neither of these amounts represents a very large part of the retail price of the suit, but at that the woolgrower did not receive this much for furnishing the wool in the suit, as the wool prices we have used are Boston prices. The woolgrower had to deliver his wool in Boston paying freight, commission, etc., amounting to 8 or 10 cents per scoured pound, which properly should be deducted to find what the grower actually received out of this suit. All we ask is that the public place on the shoulders of our woolgrowers only that portion of responsibility for high-priced clothing that properly belongs to them. We are willing to assume that responsibility.

(Signed) NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this statement is of more than ordinary interest when considered in connection with the latest official report of the national conference board, which brings the startling information that from July 1, 1914, to November, 1919, cost of clothing has increased 135 per cent, though foodstuffs increased only 92 per cent, fuel 48 per cent, rent 38 per cent.

Anxiety concerning the continued advance in prices is reported general in American business circles by the Federal Reserve Board's recent review of business conditions. It may well be. The prevailing high prices are referred to in that report as an "unquestionable menace." This report virtually admits that excessive profit taking is beginning to menace business itself—to kill demand.

Just now the country condemns labor in unsparing terms for its exactions, but the evidence is overwhelming that the cause of the expensive cost of living is not labor wholly, but profits. It is true that labor demands all it can get that it may live, but big business to a great extent, at any rate, keeps on getting and the helpless consumer pays. After the labor is paid profits mount to unheard-of heights.

Can we doubt that the general public is being sandbagged when we know such facts as these:

The net profits of the American Woolen Co., after Federal taxes had been deducted, were $2,778,600 in 1914, $5,160,295 in 1915, $8,210,761 in 1916, $15,664,985 in 1917, and $12,324,084 in 1918. All on an invested capital of twenty-two millions. The earnings on its common stock were $10.80 a share in 1915, $27.05 a share in 1916, $47.62 a share in 1917, and this year, according to best Wall Street information, will exceed $100 a share, or more than the stock's par value. A year ago the watered stock of the American Woolen Co., the chief textile company in the United States, was quoted on the stock exchange at 45. To-day it is close to 150, and in recent weeks has been quoted at 156.

For the wool that goes into a suit of clothes which sells for $100 the wool grower receives $7.37, says the Wool Growers' Association. This makes the finished garment cost the consumer more than twelve times the price of the raw material. The price of clothing has made enormous advances and is still advancing notwithstanding the American Woolen Co. cleaned up net profits of 50 per cent in 1917 and in 1918—or $2,000,000 more than the $20,000,000 total of the company's authorized outstanding stock.

There can be no real shortage of cotton with a crop of 11,000,000 bales added to 3,600,000 bales left over from 1918, but it is a common occurrence, I am told, for the speculators on the cotton exchange to boost the crop's value $50,000,000 in a single day. In one week, during the crop year, they actually increased it one-half billion dollars.

Said the Monroe (N. C.) Journal a few days ago:

Cotton manufacturers are making from 100 per cent up on their investment, and several have not only duplicated their plants in one year but paid a dividend also.

Raw material and manufacturing bring the cost of yarn at about 80 cents, selling at $2, or at a profit of 150 per cent.

The value of a single load of cotton advanced $131.25 at Phoenix, Ariz., a recent week while the load was being weighed. To this enormous speculative margin the mills and jobbers add a margin of profit more than ample to meet all contingencies. Therefore is it any wonder that sheeting now costs nearly as much a yard as silk used to?

A 50 per cent increase in the price of shoes by next summer is predicted by the president of the National Shoe Travelers. The day this prediction appeared another extra dividend was declared by the Central Leather Co. The common stock of this company was rated at 58 a year ago. It is now quoted around 105 and a large issue of new stock has recently been added. While the people contemplate going barefoot the Leather Trust walks on "velvet" made thicker. A year ago it was the war demand for leather that made shoes high. Now it seems to be the peace demand for "velvet."

At a time when shoe manufacturers have issued announcements of still higher prices for shoes, the report of one of the great leather corporations shows profits earned of 52 per cent on the stock. The stock of most of such corporations originally did not represent strictly, dollar for dollar, the money invested, but a good part of the stock represented earning power. A great deal, or most, of the so-called "water" in security issues stands for what the organizers believed the concern could earn at a fair dividend rate. But 52 per cent is not a fair rate of return on such watered capitalization. As long as unrestricted prices of stocks soar in Wall Street we must be prepared to pay robbery prices.

Just now the greatest get-rich-quick game in America is gouging in sugar. It is a mighty sweet and rich business for profit cormorants. The Equalization Board held the refiners down as to price. So in the name of Great Britain and France they bought up the Cuban sugar crop and exported it to those countries at a higher figure than the board would allow these men to sell it in the United States. And this Government let them do it. As a result the increase in the price of sugar will add a billion dollars to the burdens now being borne by the American people. The stock of the Cuba-American Sugar Co. has advanced more than 200 per cent in the last 12 months—probably because of the "sugar shortage." The remarkable rise in its stock quotations indicates it is near a rich mine of easy money.

A year ago the stock of the Crucible Steel Co. was quoted at 52. To-day it is quoted at 209, and has recently been as high as 261. Before this country entered the war the Crucible Steel Co. never earned a dividend on its watered stock. The quotation shows what the best opinion is of its earning power.

Mr. President, while we were sending the boys to France, eating war bread, and conducting all kinds of drives to win the war the United States Steel Corporation made $1,300,000,000 net profit. The price of steel common stock, worthless at the beginning, soars to values of unbelief.

We have 4,000,000 homeless people in the United States as a result of the melon cutting in lumber. There has been and is shameless profiteering in that industry, yet weekly advances of $2 to $5 a thousand are not uncommon.

Relative to profiteering in lumber, a reliable Kansas lumber dealer writes me:

> Ten months ago the wholesale price of the best grade of lath was $5.30. We are selling lath to our trade at $10 a thousand, although by the inclosed new price lists showing lath at wholesale, lath is now quoted to us at $17.25 and $18.25 a thousand f. o. b. this place. I begin to think the only way out is for the public to stop buying. I would much sooner lock up and lay off for six months than continue business under present conditions. So I think it is up to the Government to advise the people to stop buying. The Big Five don't get all the hogs to slaughter.

Here is an increase of nearly 250 per cent in 10 months on the war price of a staple commodity. In shameless and reckless greed the lumber barons now lead the procession.

Mr. President, the market price of the farmer's live stock has declined nearly 50 per cent, bringing many farmers to the verge of bankruptcy. But the high prices the consumer pays for meat are virtually unchanged. This is particularly true of pork, of which we have a surplus of more than one and a half billion pounds, produced last year, besides large quantities in storage.

The Fuel Administration restricted the advance in wages asked for by the striking bituminous-coal miners to 14 per cent, because at that per cent the consumer would not have to be further taxed for his coal. Notwithstanding this estimate, carefully based on facts, Chicago coal dealers, and perhaps others, have since advanced the retail price of coal 60 cents or more a ton. I have a telegram to-day from Leavenworth, Kans., that the public is being compelled to pay the 14 per cent increase. The income-tax returns prove the mine operators get excessive profits. During the recent strike it was shown that miners' wages in the soft-coal field were not excessive. But very little, or no information whatever, was disclosed in regard to the actual profits of the operators, which still are known only to themselves and the bookkeeper.

Mr. President, all the quotations I have referred to conspire to prove that it is profiteering in manufactures, in the great industrial corporations, that has sandbagged the public, rather than by merchants who deal directly with the consumer. It goes behind the retail price. No doubt there is price gouging by some of the retailers, but it is the price of goods when they leave the factory to which the administration's best attention should be first directed. These gigantic corporations have become drunk with unconscionable profits extorted from a too compliant public. The outstanding fact is that there is nowhere the slightest indication of any change in the strategy of the great trusts, combines, and industrial corporations in fattening their profits. A thief has only to steal half as much property these days to commit grand larceny, but it seems a profiteer corporation may take all it can get from the people and then make them pay its war taxes besides.

Prosecution of 179 profiteers in 18 States has been started by the Department of Justice since a penalty was added to the Lever Act. In three cases fines and jail sentences have been imposed. Of these victims of governmental harshness one was fined $100 and given a brief stay behind the bars, another was fined $250 and given three months, and the third had a fine of $5,000 and five months in jail administered to him. These three martyrs were hoarders.

Mr. President, the Department of Justice is to be highly commended for its efforts to stamp out bolshevism. It took the Government Secret Service just a few weeks to round up and put in prison 4,500 reds. And when it comes to profiteers, the reds are in a pitiful minority. I am glad to see it is now proposed to have the Secret Service raid the profiteers, the most potent promoters of anarchy we have. If this raid is prosecuted with vigor and backed up by the imprisonment of profit extortioners it will have a most wholesome and salutary result.

We deport the reds, and I heartily approve the Government's efforts in that direction; but our chief trouble makers, the price gougers, we still let run wild. If we were to put half as many profiteers in jail it seems to me we should be in far less danger of contracting the red flu of bolshevism. Our greatest present menace is anarchistic greed here at home. For three years we have permitted it to do its worst to the devoted people who are the backbone of this Nation and who must be its ever-present help in time of trouble. In that time we have made 18,000 brand-new millionaires. We must stop this thing soon or be prepared to take the consequences, not knowing just what those consequences may be.

We seem to be bartering not only our own peace of mind but all our fine prospects for bettering our condition or serving mankind for this miserable mess of pottage. And probably no other nation ever had so unparalleled an opportunity. I am constantly surprised that so little account is taken of the wrath that is stirring among the people at this continuous and widespread plundering. Washington must soon show it has the nerve to deal with these wreckers or must itself reckon with the people. Our Government must prove to them its adequacy to govern, must prove worthy of its stewardship, or lose their confidence and respect. Mr. President, I would not have you understand that I have no faith in the wisdom and intelligence of the people. It is just because I have this trust in them that I say the time has come for Washington to prove its ability to deal with this destructive evil.

Profiteering, to be sure, is not responsible for all our price inflation, but it plainly is responsible for very much of it, and is so greatly aggravating our strained economic situation that it is becoming the last straw to the people's forbearance. The hard way, the expensive way, the dangerous way to reach our readjustment is to let greed break down business, throw industry out of gear, men out of employment, and bring on hard times, while it continues to play its selfish, shortsighted game of starve-out and freeze-out with the people. The saner way would seem to be to do what is in our power to do, to meet and conquer these dangerous exploiters as an intelligent and forceful people should.

I earnestly urge as a remedy to meet this emergency an active prosecution of profiteers followed by their imprisonment, and a law requiring every manufacturer to attach to every article he produces the exact price he receives for it. I am confident nothing else will so quickly reduce and stabilize prices and restore business and industry to a safe and sane basis. I also urge drastic reduction in Government expenditures, prompt enactment by Congress of the measures for strict regulation of the packing industry, and Federal supervision of cold-storage business. The people can help themselves, too, if they will organize to boycott the profit hogs by refusing to buy goods offered at extortionate prices.

Unless we make a real effort to control this orgy of greed we shall continue to drift toward the rocks and no one can foretell what looked-for or unlooked-for disaster may occur.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I propose to take the time of the Senate for but a very few minutes briefly to discuss the general principles of the pending bill, and shall not attempt to go into its details. Official business takes me from Washington on Monday next, so I shall not have the opportunity of voting for the bill at the hour which by unanimous consent has been set for that purpose. Therefore I take advantage of this opportunity to express my general viewpoint in reference to the bill.

I feel the function of Congress, the function of the Federal Government, is to cooperate with the States, to make, so far as possible, general suggestions which can be carried out by the States, and to use its great power to encourage the States along the lines of social reform and in meeting the various problems of the day and hour.

I thoroughly agree with the observations of some Senators that the Government should not enter business. In my judgment, the function of the Government is not to conduct business but to cooperate with business. When the Government attempts to conduct business it usually makes a failure of it. I do feel, however, that there is a clear distinction between attempting to conduct business and attempting to encourage the various States which make up the Union of the Federal Government to act in consonance with the natural, progressive ideas of the day. Either the Government has no function, if we agree that it should not actually conduct the business of the country, or it must be agreed that it has the responsibility of encouragement and of attempting to stabilize. This bill is along that line.

I disagree with the view that in attempting to extend this encouragement we are interfering with State government. We are not interfering with State government, but, in my opinion, are encouraging State government. We are encouraging the various States of the Union to take advantage of an opportunity involving, to some extent, a subsidy of the Government in so far as the actual appropriations permit, that will enable them to proceed and advance along certain lines. I feel that there is not any function of the Federal Government, generally speaking, unless it be to encourage the States in meeting the obligations that arise and develop from day to day. I feel that the pending bill is absolutely in that direction.

I have stated that I am not going to attempt to discuss the details of the bill. They have been gone over, and some amendments have already been adopted. The idea that the National Government should have nothing to do with those things which the States should do, in my judgment, is illogical. The Government is a Government of all the States; it has a certain general responsibility, concurrently with the States; and certainly its main responsibility would be by the joining of the intellect or the joining of the abilities of the representatives of all the States of the Union in these two bodies, to encourage the States mutually to proceed with it along the lines of advancement. I think that that is the main and first function of the Government.

We do not make money; we spend money. If we attempt to make money, we usually lose money. We have a responsibility to help encourage and to help develop the States along lines that are designed by this bill. So, if I should be here on Monday next the bill would receive my vote on the affirmative side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as amended.

Mr. KENYON. I rise to inquire as to the parliamentary situation. Has the Reed amendment to the Smoot amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment to the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. KENYON. I was out of the Chamber, and I do not know whether or not the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] was here; but I was opposed to that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I was not in the Chamber.

Mr. KENYON. I think the amendment to the amendment may be reserved for action in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that either the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from South Dakota was on the floor when the amendment was submitted.

Mr. STERLING. I do not recall that I was.

Mr. KENYON. When I left the Chamber the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] was discussing Herbert Hoover, and I thought it perfectly safe to go to the lunch room.

Mr. STERLING. I did not know the Senator from Missouri had offered an amendment. I heard him speaking in reference to an amendment that he would like to see made to the bill, but I did not know that he had offered such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. KENYON. There were not many "ayes" on this proposition, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There were three or four ayes and no nays.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Missouri is not present, but I desire to ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Utah was agreed to. Perhaps that could be done in the Senate, or I think I could reserve a vote upon the substitute in the Senate. Would not that give the right to have another vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute has now been reconsidered and is before the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask a parliamentary question. If the substitute is now adopted and goes into the Senate with a vote reserved on the substitute in the Senate, could we, in the Senate, vote on the Reed amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When it gets into the Senate, the question will be upon the adoption of the substitute amendment as agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENYON. So that we could not go into the other question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to send for the Senator from Missouri to come into the Chamber. In the meantime, if no other Senator desires to take the floor, I will have to speak until the Senator from Missouri returns——

Mr. HARRISON rose.

Mr. KENYON. Unless the Senator from Mississippi desires to proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to listen to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. That is the first time any Senator has ever complimented me in that way. Has the Senator from Mississippi any amendment to offer?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I have some amendments to offer when other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. KENYON. Would it not be possible to have the substitute for section 3 go over for a few moments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be passed over temporarily by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENYON. That would enable us to proceed with other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is passed over temporarily.

Mr. KENYON. That will give the Senator from Mississippi an opportunity to offer his amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. I wanted to call up the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], to come in at the end of section 11, I believe. I think the Senate ought to vote on that amendment. The Senator from Tennessee is sick and unable to be present.

Mr. KENYON. Section 11 has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. It is difficult to tell just what is in the bill, so many provisions have been stricken from it.

Mr. KENYON. There might be an advantage in adjourning and having a reprint of the bill and taking these matters up on Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is a very good suggestion. If we can have a reprint of the bill, we can tell just what there is in the bill now.

Mr. KENYON. I think that would be valuable; and if we can first have a reconsideration of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, then we can adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to offer an amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa can lodge his motion now to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. REED entered the Chamber.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has now come in. I had supposed that the Senator from Missouri would take a little more time in his very interesting discussion. I had to leave the Chamber, and that seemed to be the only opportunity to go down to the lunch room and Hooverize. I found that the Senator had finished his address on this interesting subject much before I had expected and his amendment had been adopted. Would the Senator have any objection to having that reconsidered?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I saw that the Senator was out, and I myself would have asked to have the amendment go over, but I did not see any way to do it. Of course I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was adopted will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for section 3 cut the amount of the appropriation, and cut the amount that could be used in any publication. Now, I know that the view of the Senator from Missouri is that no amount should be used at all in the publication of anything by the Bureau of Education or the Department of the Interior. It seems to me, however, that that is an important work. I know it may be abused, as everything else in the Government may be abused. They have been issuing a little bulletin called "Americanization." Some 23,000 copies of it have been going around the country, and it has done good. This appropriation is very small. The whole thing is more or less of an experiment. No serious damage could be done, short of losing the money—which, of course, is some damage—and much good may be accomplished. I know that the Bureau of Education and the Department of the Interior are very anxious that some sum should remain in the bill for that purpose. That is why I feel that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri should be defeated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not desire to go over the ground that I went over before. Seventy-five thousand dollars devoted to the business of teaching men to become American citizens will amount to absolutely nothing. You have got to reach this great multitude of men on very much broader lines than that. About all that it amounts to is to give these gentlemen that much money for press-agency work. I think this Government has spent not less than $10,000,000, and I suspect $100,000,000, in the last four years in paying gentlemen's salaries and for the white paper that they have used in praising their superiors, some of whom are now running for President, and I do not want to see any more of it done. I think we have arrived at a time when we ought to determine whether or not the American people have got any sense themselves, or whether all the brains are concentrated here in Washington. My opinion is that you can take a compass and set it down in any part of the United States and describe a circle that will embrace as many people as there are in Washington, including the Senate, and you will have as much brains and patriotism as you have here in Washington, even if we include in the Washington population the Congress and the White House.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I just want to ask the Senator a question. I have not heard—or, if it was read since the Senator came in, I do not know now—the scope of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. REED. I moved to strike out the paragraph that appropriates $75,000 for publications.

Mr. STERLING. Was that substituted in lieu of the $500,000?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the substitute of the Senator from Utah for section 3—an entirely new section, limiting salaries and limiting the number of employees and reducing to $75,000 the amount for publications—has been adopted. That action has been reconsidered; and the motion of the Senator from Missouri was to strike out the $75,000, leaving nothing for publications.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question, then? This being an Americanization bill, and the education having to be along particular and peculiar lines—the dissemination of information with regard to American institutions, the principles of the American Constitution, and so forth—does not the Senator think that an appropriation of that limited amount, $75,000, could be used and should be used in carrying out the purposes of the bill? I do not like to see every dollar that is to be devoted to that purpose stricken out of this bill.

Mr. REED. But when the Senator speaks of an Americanization bill, he means a bill to teach the principles of the American Republic. Is that what the Senator understands?

Mr. STERLING. Partly, and in one of the provisions of this bill it is so provided. The substitute which I had the honor of offering myself provides for the teaching of the fundamentals of civil government, the principles of the American Constitution, and American history.

Mr. REED. And love of the American Republic?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. REED. Do you not think your bill will be obsolete when you mild reservationists have internationalized this country so that we no longer have a National Government?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, that is aside from the question.

Mr. REED. No; it is not aside from the question.

Mr. STERLING. We are not considering the League of Nations now.

Mr. REED. I think we are obliged to, because at this moment—not in the Congress, but back of the Congress, behind locked doors, with the keyhole stopped—a conference is being held. It is a conference of gentlemen who have hitherto demanded "open covenants, openly arrived at." It is made up, to a large extent, of men who have denounced the secret caucus as dangerous to the Republic.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator that I know nothing about such a conference. I have not been invited to attend one.

Mr. REED. I am giving you some light. They are now getting ready to deliver your vote.

Mr. STERLING. Well, we will see whether they do or not.

Mr. REED. This body of gentlemen is dealing and trafficking secretly. It is not dealing with principles at all, but is endeavoring to find out how it can fix things so that a few wavering votes may be secured. It is either self-appointed or appointed by so-called "leaders" without any authority. Nevertheless these gentlemen are fixing up an international program for the Senator from South Dakota to accept while these leaders are trying to patch up a compromise in order to put over a contract based upon the idea of internationalism, and while they are doing that you propose to appropriate money to teach the old, wicked, selfish doctrine of nationalism!

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I simply want to say to the Senator that I do not think any of this money is to be spent abroad. This money devoted to the purposes of Americanization will all be spent here, and will not be spent internationally.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri how the conference that he speaks of is getting along?

Mr. REED. I do not know. I understand that there has been some trouble.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, perhaps I might suggest to the Senator that there is a saying that "In the kingdom of the blind a one-eyed man is king." It is under that myopic guidance that the conference is proceeding, I think.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator from Missouri think it might be a good idea to spend some of this money on these Americanization bulletins and have them sent to the conference?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that will all depend upon who is selected to write the bulletins. If you gave the task to one class, they would anxiously promulgate the doctrine that we ought to be glad to be recognized as the equal of a British colony, and therefore that true Americanism would consist in the surrender of the sovereignty of this Nation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. Just a moment. There might be, then, the other class, the mild reservationists, who would insist that we yield only part of our sovereignty, that we wade in about to our knees and then stand there trembling, wondering whether we were going to be overwhelmed by the next wave or whether we will be able to make shore. There might also be another class of old-fashioned, wicked people, who still believe that the American flag is the greatest flag in all the world, who would not exchange the star of a single State for an entire international constellation, who would not surrender the right of a single American citizen for the benefit of the subjects of any foreign power. We might happily have that old-fashioned doctrine taught. In that case I would be satisfied.

The point that I am making, abandoning all satire, is this: Whoever writes this bulletin on Americanism will teach his kind of Americanism in these days when we have so many different kinds of Americans. I am not willing that the Government's money should be spent in that way. When I consider that Mr. Hoover landed here a few months ago and solemnly asserted before the Agricultural Committee that the only residence he had on earth was the Willard Hotel, and that he had arrived there that morning, when we find him regarded as a presidential possibility, I am not willing to trust to the Americanism of all the publicists who may seek to teach Americanism. Let me suggest while we are on the subject that we complete the ticket. Why not Hoover and Creel? [Laughter.]

It is the truth, the very truth, that when they were here in Washington together the old quotation, "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," applied. If you had a ticket composed of Hoover and Creel, you would have two masters of publicity, but in this case the copartnership would not be obliged to go outside and hire talent and import it and bring it here from England, as Mr. Hoover did when he organized this publicity bureau down here at the Capital. In the next place Mr. Creel's lack of knowledge of English politics could be supplied by Mr. Hoover, and the lack of American geography which Mr. Hoover is burdened with could be supplied by Mr. Creel, who is a much-traveled man. In the third place they are both very progressive and forward-looking gentlemen.

The opinions of Mr. Creel have been embalmed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it will be discovered upon reading them that he is almost abreast of the times and nearly up to the advanced kind of politics we are now being taught. I do not know whether he has yet advocated the licensing of all interstate business in order that it can be controlled, but I am sure he would readily accept that doctrine. If he did, and we had Mr. Hoover for President, and had a general law for the licensing of every man engaged in interstate business, so that every man, from the corner grocer to the great manufacturer, would be under a Government license; and if that power were by Mr. Hoover administered, as he has already exercised the license power, truly Mr. Hoover could run this country in every part of its business and in all of its life.

At the same time Mr. Creel, as the boss of publicity, could teach the American people what they were to think and the progressive ideas they might entertain. Of course, the whole ought to be supplemented by such a law as has been proposed by Mr. Palmer, whereby every citizen of the United States who dares think out loud might be incontinently dragged to jail, haled before a Federal court sitting perhaps some hundreds of miles away from his home, bankrupted in his purse, and destroyed in his reputation—the picture of a free country would be perfect. What a glorious country this would be.

But I do not want to talk about Hoover any more. This much is true of the pending bill. It proposes to put into the hands of somebody the business of teaching Americanism and to pay for it out of the taxpayers' money, and I am unwilling that any individual shall be picked to teach the people of this country Americanism, because he will teach his kind of Americanism, his ideas of Americanism. It would not do to seek to escape this by saying that it is only $75,000, and it does not go far. It goes far enough to impress itself upon the public opinion of the country, or else it is not of any value at all; it is wasted. It goes far enough to impress itself upon the forming opinion of these foreigners, or else it does not amount to anything. If it does affect opinion and help shape that opinion, then it is highly important that Americanism in its proper sense should be taught.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KENYON. If we can not rely on anyone to teach Americanism, can we rely on any histories of America that may be written? They must be written by some man or woman, and in the last analysis is there not the same argument against both?

Mr. REED. I will state the difference: I would be against an official history of the United States unless it was a mere matter of the statement of absolute facts preserved, as we now preserve them, in our statistical reports, for if the Government of the United States were to be permitted to write a history of itself at the public expense, it could cover every iniquity, every sham, every fraud, and describe all acts as in the public interest.

Let me point out to the Senator the distinction between the two propositions. The Senator asked me if there might not be mistakes made if we had individuals writing history. Yes; there might be something worse than mistakes made if the Government wrote the history. There might be a deliberate attempt to mislead. But if the Government does not attempt to write the history, if it is left to private individuals to write the history, then if private individual "A" writes a false history it has to stand upon its merit. It is subject to the scrutiny of everybody, and private individual "B" is very likely to write a history showing that private individual "A" did not tell the truth, that he was mistaken; and the great public, still possessing a modicum of common sense, judges between the two, and forms its opinion as to which is the proper and true story.

So if we do not attempt to have a governmental teaching of what constitutes Americanism, but leave that to the press, the pulpit, the law school, and all the agencies of enlightenment, the intelligence of the people will form a very correct conclusion. But when the Government goes to teaching what constitutes Americanism you will have the Government teaching that true Americanism is written in the platform of the dominant party. That is the objection to it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KENYON. That leads me to ask the Senator about an utterance or a program of another one of the candidates for President. He has discussed two of them, I think, this afternoon. Mr. Bryan has suggested that the Government ought to issue an official bulletin giving facts to the people; that the press of to-day is in such a condition that it does not give the people the real facts. Now, is there not something to be said in favor of that?

Mr. REED. No; that is wholly unnecessary as long as we have the Commoner and a multitude of other papers.

Mr. KENYON. But suppose they do not have access to the Commoner?

Mr. REED. They can all have access at a dollar a year.

Mr. KENYON. They all have not the dollar.

Mr. REED. In these days a man who can not get a dollar in order to get a newspaper like the Commoner is so poor that he would not be able to get to the polls.

No, Mr. President, and without indulging in any satiré toward Mr. Bryan—I am not going to discuss all presidential possibilities—Mr. Bryan has done one or two things in the last few days that have very greatly pleased me. In the first place, he has said to the American people that article 10 of the League of Nations will not do.

In the second place, he has declared that the acceptance of a mandate by this country is a thing that is against the spirit of our institutions. Since I am invited by the chairman of the committee into this field for mowing June grass with a dull scythe, let me call attention to that article of Mr. Bryan. I have not the Commoner with me, but this is a quotation from the Kansas City Star, a very large and influential paper. The quotation is in a telegram from Washington:

> Mr. Bryan says in the Commoner that a mandate would be "very objectionable to the American people," and continues:
> "In the first place, it is contrary to the theory upon which our Government rests."

The Senator from Iowa appealed for my opinion about Mr. Bryan, and I hope he will pay attention to this.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to listen very attentively.

Mr. REED. The article proceeds, quoting Mr. Bryan:

> In the first place it is contrary to the theory upon which our Government rests, and our country will not be willing to step down from its high position and indorse the doctrine upon which land-grabbing empires have tried to justify the exploitation of helpless countries. The pretext is resorted to by one of two classes, namely, those who use it to cover their greed and those who use it to cloak their aristocratic ideas. As our country has neither land hunger nor the aristocratic germ there is no reason why we should enter upon any scheme of government without the consent of the governed. In the second place it would involve us in the politics of the Old World, and the word "politics" over there has a very different meaning from that given to it in this country. In Europe and Asia they have not yet risen to the point of governing for the benefit of the governed. There would be no scramble for mandates if service was the predominant idea. But service is not the predominant idea; it is commercial advantage, and we would at once become involved in the schemes of the commercial nations, each seeking an advantage over the other. We would not do justice to any one of the rivals without offending the others, and we could not favor outsiders without doing injustice to domestic interests.

That is the excerpt that is printed. I have not the original here, but I have no doubt that is perfectly correct.

So I am glad that Mr. Bryan condemns another and a very important part of this document that we are asked to accept. He has at last stated, in a voice which I am sure will be heard over the country, what I have said in my weak way on a number of public occasions. He has said it perhaps better; but what I said was that "mandatory" is only a polite name for military conquest; that it means nothing more nor less than that some people or some nation is to be held in subjection at the point of the sword; that an armed soldiery is to be quartered upon them; and that they are to be compelled, if necessary by fire and sword, to submit themselves to the will of another people.

You may call that a mandatory if you please, but Rome called it conquest; Great Britain called it conquest; France called it conquest; the United States of America called it conquest up to the very moment when it became necessary or desirable, according to the opinions of some gentlemen, to sanctify these conquests, whereupon they sought out the gentle term "mandatory."

Since I am off the track of the argument we are having, and referring again to Mr. Hoover, let me put this into the RECORD, since the question of his citizenship is raised: On the 8th day of May, 1917, he testified before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. He had arrived in this city only two or three days before. I will read these questions a little out of order. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] propounded this question to Mr. Hoover:

> When did you get back?

That is, back from Europe. Mr. Hoover had described how he had been over there transacting business with the food controllers of England.

I arrived here on Thursday.

The first question that was asked Mr. Hoover in this examination, which occurred on the 8th day of May, which succeeded the Thursday of his arrival, was this:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hoover, will you please state your full name and address?

A. My name is Herbert C. Hoover; and I am at present at the Willard Hotel, this city, which is my only residence now.

"Which is my only residence now." But since he has started to run for President he claims California has, I understand, been his residence all the time. When he got back here from England he said that the Willard Hotel was his only residence; but at that time he owned a house in London, where his goods, wares, and chattels were located.

In Who's Who in America, written in 1916–17, volume 9, will be found this information.

Mr. GORE. Who's Who in America is not confined to Americans?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. Who's Who in America does not limit itself to Americans. This is what appears in the volume to which I have referred:

Hoover, Herbert Clark, engineer * * * Home: Red House, Hornton Street, London. Offices: 1 London Wall Buildings, London, E. C., England; 71 Broadway, New York; Mills Building, San Francisco.

There is a great deal more about that that I want to say later on.

Mr. President, since we have been led into this discussion of Mr. Hoover, I want to have it appear in the RECORD that the New York American to-day prints on its front page a statement giving the names of the men who attended the luncheon at which was launched the candidacy of Mr. Hoover for President of the United States. The statement is accompanied by the pictures of the men who were present at the luncheon.

It will be recalled that the New York World, which is owned by the Pulitzer estate, or by the members of that family, indorsed Mr. Hoover a day or two ago. The editorial indorsed him whether he ran as a Democrat or as a Republican or as a hybrid. The New York American prints the pictures of the principal dinner guests. That of Mr. Ralph Pulitzer, owner of the World, appears at the left. Next to him is Mr. Frank I. Cobb, editor of the New York World. Next to them is Viscount Edward Grey, British Ambassador to the United States, and next to him Herbert C. Hoover, who is labeled "corporation director and friend of President Wilson." Next to him is Col. E. M. House, President Wilson's—this states "political handyman," but I will withdraw those words. Then next is Cleveland H. Dodge, millionaire Wall Street financier, and then Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Philadelphia publisher. The statement of the article is—and I am reading the headlines—

The British envoy sat in at famous gathering. Col. House had five guests at luncheon to fix on candidate to succeed Woodrow Wilson. Aim of the gathering was to choose a man who would carry out President's policies. Newspapers, Wall Street, and the English Government represented, and Hoover boom started.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the article in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

THE BRITISH ENVOY SAT IN AT FAMOUS GATHERING—COL. HOUSE HAD FIVE GUESTS AT LUNCHEON TO FIX ON CANDIDATE TO SUCCEED WOODROW WILSON—AIM OF THE GATHERING WAS TO CHOOSE A MAN WHO WOULD CARRY OUT PRESIDENT'S POLICIES—NEWSPAPERS, WALL STREET, AND THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT REPRESENTED, AND HOOVER BOOM STARTED.

Herbert C. Hoover, whose candidacy for the Presidency was publicly launched recently, was in this city yesterday consulting with his New York backers.

Prominent among these are Cleveland H. Dodge, the Morgans, and certain representatives of the railroads, notably the New York Central.

The Philadelphia North American, Mr. Wanamaker's newspaper, gives a highly interesting account of the launching of the Hoover boom, which occurred at a luncheon given by Col. Edward M. House, at which were representatives of the various interests supporting Mr. Hoover and anxious to secure his election as President.

At this luncheon were: Ralph Pulitzer and Frank I. Cobb, respectively, owner and editor of the New York World; Cleveland H. Dodge, Wall Street financier; Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Philadelphia publisher; and Viscount Edward Grey, British ambassador to the United States.

It is rather unusual to have a British ambassador present at an occasion at which the boom for an American President is launched. But Mr. Hoover is understood to be the candidate of the Democratic administration, pledged to perpetuate Mr. Wilson's policies. And, naturally, the British ambassador is anxious to see policies continued which have been so advantageous to England.

Mr. Pulitzer and Mr. Cobb represent the New York World, which has been the supporter of the administration through thick and thin, and is generally recognized as the official organ of the administration.

Mr. Curtis is publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and other publications.

DODGE A WALL STREET FINANCIER.

Mr. Dodge is a leading Wall Street financier, connected with many of the big interests. He is known to the public mainly as a heavy contributor to Mayor Mitchel's $2,000,000 election fund. He was also known as a large contributor to the Wilson campaign fund. Mr. Dodge also came before the public notice by reason of his association with the Phelps-Dodge Mining Co., which in 1917 deported 1,200 workmen from their Bisbee, Ariz., mining properties, which caused great public furore at the time.

Col. House is well known. He has been the right hand of the Wilson administration and probably is still, although a statement was given out for political purposes that he had had a difference with Mr. Wilson.

The Philadelphia North American's article follows; at the time this article was printed the presence of Viscount Grey at Col. House's luncheon had not been made public, but since then the fact of his presence there has been fully verified, and the list now stands as above detailed, including the British ambassador:

"COL. HOUSE DINNER WAS BIRTHPLACE OF HOOVER BOOM—TEXAN'S TACTICS SEEN IN SUDDEN CALL FOR CANDIDATE.

"WASHINGTON, January 22.

"The sudden effulgence of the Hoover star in the firmament of presidential possibilities is not a cosmic accident. It is the result of well and carefully laid plans, under the direction of that practiced President maker, Col. E. M. House.

"The chronology of the Hoover boom begins with the return from Europe of Col. House, sick in body and sore at heart over the heartless treatment he had suffered at the hands of President Wilson. Having had the luxury of private ownership of a presidential administration for more than six years, Col. House refused to be thrown in the discard without ceremony.

"What was done prior to December 3 in the way of getting a new President for the quiet little Texas colonel does not yet appear. The first fact of record is that on December 4 the New York World, whose chief recent claim to fame had been its unfaltering devotion to President Wilson, editorially announced that it would not stand for a third term for him.

"The very next day, December 5, Col. House gave a dinner at his apartments. Among the colonel's guests were Ralph Pulitzer and Frank Cobb, respectively owner and editor of the World; Cleveland H. Dodge, a very rich man, hitherto a friend of the President and Col. House; and Cyrus H. K. Curtis, publisher of the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia.

"On the following Monday, December 8, the World published a story in which its veteran political reporter, Louis Seibold, occupied several columns telling that Col. House and the President were on the outs. A great deal of the several columns was taken up with a recapitulation of the colonel's value as a counselor and his shrewdness as a political manager.

"Soon Hoover talk began to spring up with apparent spontaneity in various quarters. There was mysterious discussion as to his availability as a candidate for either party. Hoover headquarters were opened here and there, frequently under the management of a former member of Mr. Hoover's food administration.

"About the middle of December the Public Ledger devoted nearly two columns of space to exalting Mr. Hoover, without declaring for him for President; but, as the Ledger did not retract or mitigate its praise next day, it was considered very showy for the Ledger.

"About that time came the announcement that a group of capitalists had purchased the Washington Herald.

"Among these were Charles R. Crane and Julius Barnes. Crane is a rich Chicago manufacturer, who had been a big contributor to the Wilson campaign and had since that time been on intimate terms with Col. House. Barnes is the Federal wheat dictator and a close friend of Hoover. The other capitalist in the group was Hoover himself.

"About a week ago Mr. Barnes, at a trade dinner, nominated Hoover for President, attempted to classify him politically as a progressive Republican, but served warning on the Republicans that if they do not accept Hoover as a candidate the Democrats might avail themselves of this alluring chance to have a winning candidate. Incidentally he gave a sort of vicarious assurance that Mr. Hoover would accept the Democratic nomination.

"The matter was put by the reporters to Mr. Hoover, who was ready with an oracular reply. It left him free to do anything that occasion might suggest.

"Within four days, the New York World made its declaration for Hoover. Explaining its position, the World said it would be glad to support him as a candidate on a platform that 'represented the historical principles of the Democratic Party'; it would 'be glad to support him as an independent candidate on a platform of progressive liberalism'; and it would 'not hesitate to support him as the Republican candidate on a platform representing the kind of government which Mr. Hoover exemplified in his public career.'

"The World's declaration set the old Democratic organization by the ears. The Senators who meekly have taken orders from Wilson for seven years in the hope of inheriting his mantle couldn't see Hoover with a telescope, and they used a megaphone in telling it to the world.

"But the widespread Hoover uprising left little doubt that the able and noiseless Col. House had done a good job. The New Republic, a periodical devoted to spreading Col. House's kind of internationalism and operated by Col. House's personal friends, comes out this week for Hoover. The devoted "E. S. M." editorial writer of Life also picks Hoover as the successor of Wilson in its adoration of the White House.

"In the meantime the other Democratic aspirants are living in dread that the little Texas colonel will give another dinner. From present appearances that would make Hoover unanimous in the Democratic convention. Always with the possible exception of Mr. Bryan in the doubtful background."

CURTIS'S NEWSPAPER DECLARES HOOVER IS WILSON'S CANDIDATE.

Strangely enough, yesterday morning, at the same time the North American printed its story, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, owned by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, one of the guests at Col. House's luncheon and a very close friend of Mr. Wilson, printed in its most prominent position on the first page a story that Herbert Hoover is Woodrow Wilson's candidate for the White House. The story appeared under this head:

"HOOVER CHOICE OF WILSON FOR THE PRESIDENCY."

The story, under a Washington date line, began:

"Herbert C. Hoover is Woodrow Wilson's candidate for the Presidency. That assurance was given to the Public Ledger correspondent to-night from a quarter which bears every indication of being well informed."

Beyond question Mr. Hoover is the choice of Mr. Wilson for the Presidency, and he will to a large extent secure the support of all the devoted followers of Mr. Wilson and all the supporters of Mr. Wilson's policies.

Mr. REED. I also ask to put in the RECORD, from the same paper, a cable dispatch of January 29, 1917, sent from London by Charles H. Grasty, staff correspondent. It will be interesting, I think, to Senators.

There being no objection, the cable dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITAIN WANTED BELOVED HOOVER TO TURN ENGLISH.

Herbert Hoover, a resident of England for most of the time from 1902 until 1914, was so well thought of in Great Britain that officials in the highest circles there wanted him to become a Briton.

A cable dispatch printed in the New York Times on January 29, 1917, sent from London by Charles H. Grasty, a staff correspondent, stated:

"Mr. Hoover's abilities have excited the greatest admiration in the highest circles. They have wanted him very much to become an English citizen, and I don't think that I exaggerate when I say that the House of Lords would not have been beyond his reach if he had consented to change his allegiance."

Mr. Hoover was a partner in Bewick, Moreing & Co., mine operators, with offices in London, from 1902 until 1908. He was director of the following English firms from 1908 to 1914: Zinc Corporation (Ltd.); Kyshtim Corporation (Ltd.); Tanalyk Corporation (Ltd.); Oroya Exploration Co. (Ltd.); Russo-Asiatic Corporation (Ltd.).

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Missouri. In view of what he has said in the general lines of his argument, he ought to be in favor of the bill and use all his eloquence and his efforts to favor this particular item, because the bill is for Americanization as against internationalization; it is for Americanism as against internationalism. It is to prevent the spread of a doctrine taught by the whole tribe of internationalists.

The Senator from Missouri referred in his last remarks to what would be published and sent out by the Secretary of the Interior. The course of study under this system, the plan provided for in the bill, is to be adopted by the several States, and may even be adopted and carried out without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. They have a system of reporting to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of the bill, it is true, but the several States will have the initiative in all the work that is done under the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Iowa is going to make a motion to adjourn, why not let it go over until Monday?

Mr. KENYON. I have no objection, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to offer an amendment so that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON's amendment is at the end of section 2, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such charge, as prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, be exacted of each person attending any school maintained in whole or in part from any funds provided for under the provisions of this act, as will reimburse the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Iowa is going to ask to have the bill reprinted?

Mr. KENYON. I am going to make that request. I ask unanimous consent that the bill now under consideration be reprinted with the amendments as adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold that request just a moment? Does the Senator intend to proceed further with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I have some amendments to offer.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has some amendments about which there will be no controversy?

Mr. SMOOT. I think there will be no controversy about the one I will offer first. If there is, I will say to the Senator that I will withdraw it.

On behalf of my colleague [Mr. KING] who is ill at home, and at his request, I offer the following amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I renew my request that the bill now under consideration may be reprinted with the amendments as adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have been requested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to ask to have inserted in the RECORD an analysis of the Sterling bill, by Prof. Zechariah Chafee, jr., of the Harvard Law School, and also a memorandum on the Sterling bill and the Graham bill by Dr. F. C. Howe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Analysis of the Sterling bill, by Prof. Zechariah Chafee, jr., of Harvard Law School.]

"The Sterling bill against sedition, which has just passed the Senate, will, if it becomes law, be the first restriction by Congress of liberty of speech in time of peace, with the exception of the notorious sedition act of 1798, which was opposed by Marshall and denounced as unconstitutional by Jefferson and Madison. Without any legislation against advocates of violence and revolution this country has gone safely through much worse crises than the present.

"James Ford Rhoades, in the last volume of the history of the United States, tells how in the midst of the great railroad strikes of 1877, when unemployment was larger than ever before or since, a big communist meeting took place in New York. The Seventh Regiment was held in readiness to put down any actual disorder, but there was no interference with anything that was said. The speakers indulged in the wildest kind of talk, but everything went off tamely.

"Arthur Woods used the same wise policy with success when he became police commissioner of New York City during the hard times of the summer of 1914. Under the previous administration the police had been breaking up anarchistic meetings, which were held in Union Square every Saturday afternoon, and the crowds were in an excited, defiant, and bitter mood. When Mr. Woods took office he told the police to interfere in case of any actual disturbance, but not to stop any speaker. A hundred plain-clothes men were scattered through the crowd singly on the watch for violence to nip any attempt in the bud, but beyond that they were to radiate good nature and try to maintain an atmosphere of quiet and calm. Mr. Woods says:

"The change of method was almost unbelievably successful. There was no disorder, the crowd was very large but very well behaved, and at the end of the meeting, when everything was over and many had gone home, three cheers were proposed and given for the police and for the old chief inspector, Max Schmittberger, who had been in personal charge.

"Why should we abandon this traditional American method of dealing with hot-headed agitators and revive the odious sedition act of 1798?

"It may be urged that the Sterling bill does not impose penalties on radical discussion, but simply punishes those who advocate the overthrow of this Government or changes in its form by means of force. We ought to remember, however, that reformers who get excited are pretty sure to take the position that force is justifiable if peaceful methods fail to gain what they consider right. In the past we have felt it wiser to let them talk than to cause much greater bitterness in them and in their friends by throwing them into prison. We have refused to arrest them unless there was a real danger that the lawlessness which they advocate would immediately take place.

"Under the Sterling bill, however, it will be possible to go through any socialist or communist book or speech with a fine-tooth comb and probably find a sentence here or there which can be interpreted as advocating revolution. Thus it will be possible to imprison almost any radical agitator in the absence of any real danger of revolution. There will be a serious temptation to those in authority in times of great strikes and other excitement to make use of this law to bottle up the leaders. It is too powerful a weapon to intrust any human being with.

"If Judge George W. Anderson is right in his statement that 90 per cent of the pro-German plots never existed in spite of our fear of them, and that there is no greater reason to anticipate serious "red" plots, then it is just as safe as it ever was to treat revolutionary talk with contempt.

"On the other hand, if there is any real plot to overthrow the Government of the United States by force or to hinder the execution of its laws, we do not need any new legislation to deal with such a conspiracy. Section 6 of the Federal Penal Code of 1910 gives the Government ample power to deal vigorously with any such emergency. This section reads:

"If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war again them, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

"In addition, every State has laws to punish severely any successful or unsuccessful attempt to destroy life and property by bombs and other violent means. We have enough legislation now to protect us against any real danger.

"The third and fourth sections of the Sterling bill are particularly objectionable because they make it a crime to send through the mails or to import or transport from State to State any book which contains a single passage advocating any changes in this Government or in all governments through force. Many of the classics of modern economics contain a few such passages in addition to theoretical discussion.

"This statute would prevent a loyal citizen from obtaining the works of Marx, Proudhon, Bakunin, or Stirner from abroad or from another State, and would make it criminal for a loyal bookseller to buy those books for him. One particular instance will show the evil of such a statute. The faculty of Harvard University is now planning to collect in its library all books and pamphlets relating to the Russian revolution in order to start as soon as possible to parallel the great collections which were made after years of delay of material relating to the French Revolution. This statute would make it impossible to bring a large part of this material into the United States. It makes it impossible for us to know what our enemies are planning, and cuts us off from some of the main currents of modern thought.

"In the past we have been proud to believe that arguments for law and order, the common sense of the American people, including those who come from Europe to help build up our industries, and the noble qualities of our institutions would win out in a short time over any revolutionary talk or writing. The Sterling bill shows a serious distrust in these three great stabilizing factors of American life.

"It is a kindergarten measure which assumes that our patriotism and our institutions are so weak as to crumble away at any talk of revolution. Those who have confidence in the American policy of free speech, the stability of American institutions, and the sound sense of the American people ought to do all in their power to secure the defeat of this bill or any similar legislation."

[Memorandum on Sterling bill and Graham bill, by Dr. F. C. Howe.]

"These bills are alike in creating constructive or inferential crimes. Constructive sedition was evolved by Judge Jeffries in an historical case which was not overthrown by the courts of England for several centuries. Under the original infamous Jeffries decision a man was held guilty of treason for having in his possession a private memorandum written by himself, which the court said might have gotten into the hands of some one else, and might have so influenced his action that he would conspire or take some action against the King or the Government, looking to its overthrow.

"This was the genesis of constructive sedition. It was reversed, I believe, about 150 years ago, to the credit of English law.

"The Federal Bill of Rights was a protest against constructive sedition, with which the colonists were thoroughly familiar. The pending bills elaborated this idea in a most extraordinary way. They carry it much further than the English law ever contemplated.

"These laws put in the hands of policemen, district attorneys, and courts all over the country the power to arrest men, to hold them in jail, and ultimately to try them. Even aside from conviction, it creates a net for terrorism which may be directed as any local official agency may desire. It can be used to destroy strikes, agitation, protest, or publications. It is a standing menace against every speaker and against every radical publication.

"The common law has heretofore contemplated only overt acts. Overt acts can be proved. They can be proved by witnesses. The proof under this statute is inference or conjecture. this is an entirely novel criminal procedure, except as it has been recently extended under conspiracy acts, for the most part against labor. As I recall, the 35 men sent to jail in Indianapolis some years ago in connection with the Los Angeles explosions were convicted by inferential conspiracy. This makes it possible to network the country and dragnet it by secret-service men. It can be used to exhaust by bail bonds and trials all kinds of radicals.

"The provision in the bill requiring a man to testify against himself, even though it does incriminate him, is a reversal of the traditions of our criminal procedure.

"The act itself is ambiguous. This is probably intentional. It would be very easy to have made the clauses definite as to the use of force and violence. The ambiguity is undoubtedly intentional.

"The act establishes a menacing censorship over every printed word, over every movie, over every caricature, as well as over every speech that may be delivered. It subjects every one except a reactionary to fear. The resultant psychology of the Nation will be terrible to contemplate.

"The thing that distinguished America heretofore has not been its form of government; it has been a sense of freedom on the part of the individual to do and say what he chose. That is what liberty has meant. These bills take away liberty by substituting fear; by denying a man the right to be the judge of his own opinion. I doubt if Germany or Russia ever went further.

"There is no need for such legislation. We have gotten on for 150 years without it. There is adequate legislation against sedition or treason.

"I understand there has not been a single person arrested by the Immigration Service against whom there was any evidence that he conspired against the Government. I understand that Attorney General Gregory has made a similar statement in one of his reports.

"The results of the section creating a post-office censorship are obvious. Every radical publication would be under a standing menace. It would not dare speak freely. It could be bankrupt overnight. Under this bill socialist papers, even liberal papers like the Nation, and the New Republic, could be denied the mails by a hostile administration, while such papers as the Liberator would be surely suppressed. The passage of this bill really marks an end of freedom of the press in America. The very existence of this power is a denial of freedom, even though it is not used.

"This is the essential effect of it as to the three primal American liberties: Liberty of speech, liberty of assemblage, and liberty of the press. The power of an official to deny these rights, to arrest men as they have been arresting them, to hold them in jail and subject them to expensive litigation, are in effect as complete a denial as their exercise.

"This bill invites the agent provocateur; it invites espionage; it is an invitation to spying of all kinds."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3794) granting an increase of pension to John Colby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3795) granting a pension to Ann Carman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3796) granting an increase of pension to Eli F. Holland (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for the relief and care of nonreservation Indians in California in destitute circumstances, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 11892. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11927. An act to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 26, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 24, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To be at one with Thee, in intent and in purpose, our Father in heaven, is to live to the highest purposes of life, to be in the world and yet not of the world. The Master said to His disciples: "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world."

The man who lives without God and in his quest for material gains forgets the rights of his fellowmen, lives a lonely life; and when he passes on will be unwept, unsung, and go to the place he has prepared for himself; but the man who regards God, loves Him and recognizes the rights of his fellows, will be surrounded by friends and tears will follow his going; for truth is truth and right is right, so let us live and pass on, serenely, to the larger life, prepared for us by Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RATIFICATION OF SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Kentucky announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER BETWEEN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 3331, a bridge bill, which was on the Speaker's table, an identical bill being on the House Calendar, and I ask that the same be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3331) authorizing the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether the House bill was reported before or subsequently?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed it was reported before. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the Interstate Construction Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the county of Hood River, State of Oregon, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That a license is hereby granted to the Interstate Construction Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate an approach to the bridge mentioned and referred to in section 1 of this act over property belonging to the Government of the United States, said approach to be constructed as near as practicable upon the following locations, to wit: Across an area 200 feet in width, the center line of which originates and bears as follows: Beginning at a point on the section line between sections 12 and 13, in township 2 north, range 7 east, Willamette meridian, in Hood River County, Oreg., 4,494 feet west of the southeast corner of said section 12, township 2 north, range 7 east, whence extending in a straight line bearing north 76 degrees 44 minutes west to an intersection with the north shore of the Columbia River, in the State of Washington, the exact location to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GARRETT. Do I understand that the House bill, Mr. Speaker, is in identical terms with this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10281 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 10281, identical with the Senate bill, be laid on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11960, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] has 36 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill—after a little more pruning. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and myself, though through no real express understanding, have made up our minds to put through an economy program in this House at this session. [Applause.] I have been helping him. I have been voting for every bill that reduced appropriations, and I am going to continue to do it. Of course, he and the Republicans have put in items amounting to $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 on bills that I could not stand for.

Of course, there has been some criticism of the gentleman from Wyoming and the steering committee by Republicans and by Democrats. I do not think those criticisms are justified at all. I do not criticize the steering committee for taking charge of these regular standing legislative committees of the House. I think they have done right from their standpoint. These committees are composed, from the steering committee's viewpoint, of incapable, impotent members. Take the Committee on Naval Affairs. The members thought they knew what to do. They thought they knew what kind of bill to report out. They thought they knew what kinds of appropriations to make; but the steering committee did not think they knew. Of course, I had nothing to do in making up the Republican membership of the Naval Affairs Committee. If I had, I believe I could have made up a committee that would not have been under the necessity of having overlords, but my friend MONDELL and others made up that committee from their membership, and, from their standpoint, they know them. They know they are weak men; they do not believe they have the wisdom or patriotism or judgment sufficient to know how to legislate, how to make appropriations, although some of them have been on the Naval Affairs Committee for 20 years or more. So the steering committee said to itself, "Why, the chairman and these other Republican members of the Naval Affairs Committee do not know what to do. They have not sense or wisdom or patriotism or sense of economy sufficient to know what kind of bills to report out." So they are brought up before the steering committee, and the gentleman from Wyoming, acting as spokesman—I assume this is the way it was—[laughter], said to them, "Now, look here. Tear up that bill that you propose; tear it up! This House has got to make an economy program—for this year's election—and I intend to carry it out. Tear it up! Do not appropriate a single dollar except for these noncommissioned officers and enlisted men." And this Naval Affairs Committee, the Republican membership of it, went back and tore up the bill they proposed, and substituted exactly what the steering committee drafted.

I presume the steering committee is right. Why should they be criticized for taking charge of a committee like the Naval Affairs Committee? Why, they have shown wisdom, so much so that I voted for the bill that the steering committee reported out yesterday.

Now, you take the rivers and harbors bill. There is a committee made up of Republicans, a large majority selected by the gentleman from Wyoming and his Committee on Committees, and they proposed to do what seemed at that time to be the wise thing to them. They decided to take each item, each project mentioned in this proposed bill, and go over it and cut that project to the bone; and they proceeded along that line. The Republican steering committee said to itself: "Why, we Republicans have got a crowd of weaklings on that committee. We made it up to satisfy this element and that element and to have this river or harbor and that river or harbor represented. We made it up in order to get their votes, and not because we thought they were the wisest and best or strongest members we could put on the committee. They do not know what they are doing. Now, let us have them up before us."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. One moment. I have but 10 minutes, and this is going to do you a lot of good.

And the steering committee proceeded to hale this rivers and harbors Republican membership before it. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had determined for politics to carry out an "economy program" here in the House, knowing at the same time that whatever reduction in the rivers and harbors bill was made here was never going on the books, that the Senate was going to increase the bill by many millions, and the House was going to back down at the proper time. I do not think or say that Mr. MONDELL intends to back down on it, but so many Democrats and so many Republicans do. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To this Rivers and Harbors Committee—that is, to the Republican members—he said: "Here, don't you put in the bill a single dollar specifically on a single project of the 50 or 60 projects; not a dollar. You have no right to exercise your judgment one moment on these projects or say where the money must be spent. Don't you permit Congress to do it, but you put it in the engineers' discretion and judgment, and cut that bill down from $25,000,000 or $40,000,000 to $12,000,000. This must be done for 'my economy program.'"

And Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa, the chairman, and the other Republicans—I just assume this is the way it was; it turned out that way—just walked out, head down, and forthwith, in servile obedience to the overlords, called the committee together, and said: "Boys, here is what we have to do; not what we ought to do, but we have just got to do it. This bill by its orders can not carry but $12,000,000. The steering committee says we have got to do it." And they did it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not now. The sight of the gentleman himself [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] reminds me of another committee of the House that has been for a hundred years considered a very important committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, that has been converted into putty in the hands of this overlord committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; right now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thought you would.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I have changed my mind. I decline to yield right now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. Here is the Committee on Ways and Means, as I said, a very important committee, which has been in existence for over 100 years, and it is considered by the House to be a very important committee, of which the gentleman from Iowa has been for a long time a member, and is now the ranking Republican member on it, and my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is the chairman, and has been on it for 14 or 15 years. It was made up this session mostly of new Members. Of course, the steering committee knew they were going to be handicapped somewhat in the future, because of the make-up of this committee. Do you know the only kind of bills this great committee has been allowed to report out and consider in the House, although there have been bills after bills, important bills, referred to that committee? Do you know the only kind of bills the steering committee permitted to be reported out were bills in which members of the committee were particularly interested, as, for instance, the little pearl-button bill. [Laughter.] And then they only allowed the gentleman from Iowa to report it because he begged them so hard to let him have the pearl-button bill reported, to encourage a little home industry in his district. [Laughter.] Over 50 per cent of such buttons made in the United States is made in his State and district.

Another bill was for the protection of tungsten, introduced by another member of the committee. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] was permitted to report it. He begged to be allowed to report out that little bill for tungsten ore, and they trusted him with that little bill. [Laughter.]

Another bill was reported by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], a member of the committee, for magnesite. He said, "Let me get it out, to show the folks of the State that I am on that committee." [Laughter.] This overlord committee has taken complete charge of Brother FORDNEY's and Brother GREEN's committee, to their great humiliation. [Laughter.] The committee reported a bill for which both Republicans and Democrats unanimously voted, to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the same scale of wages for helpers at the appraisers' offices as other people are getting around the seaports, and which is absolutely necessary in order to get any help at all, and they wanted to bring it up in the House, but this steering committee said to Mr. FORDNEY, "Don't you do it; don't you do it. We forbid. We forbid." [Laughter.] And they did not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, all right. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right. They would not let Brother FORDNEY get out that bill. They have another bill before the committee to appropriate $150,000,000 to loan to Poland and Austria and Armenia to keep their people from starving. The steering committee will not let the Republicans report out that or any other bill for any amount to prevent starvation. To illustrate the situation, in the city of Vienna or Budapest there is a hospital that will accommodate 18,000 children—babies—and do you know that the children put in there have been dying at the rate of from 60 to 96 per cent? The highest rate in one month was 960 out of every 1,000 put in—perishing to death from lack of food and medicines; and they are unable to help the situation. Relief must come from the outside. And the steering committee tells Mr. FORDNEY: "You shall not help. Report no bill out. Come before me. Your committee have not sense enough to know what to do. Humanity, starving people, and perishing babies can not interfere with my economy program." Yet every man on the committee was in favor of giving some needed assistance. These overlords have dwarfed that once proud and important and powerful committee into a mere thing of servile obedience.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Was it not a fact that the committee was called for the very purpose of reporting this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no; that was because of the eloquent speech of the gentleman from North Carolina against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. You do not need these legislative committees. You only need the steering committee. Now, let me tell you something else——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North olina has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, let me just tell them something! [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I ask that in part of my time there may be read from the desk an editorial from the Baltimore Evening Sun of January 23, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object to the reading.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is in my own time. I will read it myself.

Mr. WALSH. I will object to the gentleman reading it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You can not object to me reading it.

Mr. WALSH. I will object to the gentleman reading it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed to read it to the House.

Mr. WALSH. I would not object but for the action of the gentleman from Maryland the other day in connection with the rivers and harbors bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] moves that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] be permitted to read an extract from the Baltimore Evening Sun. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, this is an editorial from the Baltimore Evening Sun of January 23, 1920, entitled "The steering committee acts." I read:

THE STEERING COMMITTEE ACTS.

Austria is starving. That fact has been asserted by numerous well-informed persons and has not been denied by anyone. Eight out of every ten children in Vienna have the rickets. Hearses clog the traffic in the streets. Women so weak that they can not stand erect are seen crawling along the pavements, dragging to their homes bits of firewood which they have gathered.

England has advanced some millions of pounds for its relief. Italy, herself struggling under terrible economic burdens, has furnished a refuge for 15,000 Austrian babies in order to give them the milk and food which will save their lives. Out of their little they have given much. The United States Government, out of its abundance, delays to give anything.

When Secretary Glass and Mr. Hoover a few days ago presented to the House Ways and Means Committee a plan for the relief of the starving nations of Europe—a plan which meant, in the end, very little monetary loss to this Government, for they showed how the money advanced would be largely returned and within a comparatively short time—the members of that committee were convinced. They announced that they were ready to support the congressional measure suggested by Secretary Glass and indorsed by Mr. Hoover. Now, the Republican steering committee of the House has ordered the Ways and Means Committee not to approve the project. Its members give puerile reasons in defense of their action.

Is the Ways and Means Committee, is Congress, are the American people willing to let Austria starve in order to discredit a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury or to hinder the movement to make Herbert Hoover President?

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 26 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman from Wyoming like an audience? If he does, I will get him one. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. We have a very good audience. The gentleman from Texas is here, and others. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Texas is an audience in himself.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at one time and another I have felt under very great personal obligations to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. I have a very high regard for him. I agree with him in many things, but I have never been under such profound obligations to him as I am at this moment, because he has afforded me an opportunity—in fact, he has really made it incumbent upon me—to make certain statements which in my modesty, and in view of the modesty of the members of the steering committee and of the Members on the Republican side generally, I should not have felt justified in making, except that the gentleman has invited, suggested, even insisted upon it.

Of course, the gentleman has been largely in favor of what we have done. He has approved in the main the policy that has been adopted. He was good enough to announce that it had been his purpose—and his purpose has been very clearly indicated by his votes and by his attitude and by his actions—to join with us in an effort to carry out a program of economy and of sound business legislation.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, delightful gentleman as he is, of course, can not feel absolutely and unqualifiedly happy over the fact that the Republicans are working in absolute harmony in this Congress. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] That they are giving the finest example of teamwork and of cooperation that has ever been given in the Congress since I have been a Member of it. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have an organization. The Speaker is a part of it; the steering committee is a part of it; in a small and humble way, the chairman of the steering committee is a part of it; and every Member on the Republican side is an important part of it. [Applause on the Republican side.] They are a part of it that is constantly and continuously consulted on all the matters that come before the House.

Why, even from time to time the gentleman from North Carolina himself and some of this colleagues who are sound-thinking men are a part of it, because they are consulted in regard to matters on which their judgment is known to be reasonably sound—and it is sound on many matters. [Laughter.] Now, it would have been very presumptious under ordinary circumstances for me to have stated on the floor of the House the methods of the organization on the Republican side—in fact, I should not have thought of doing so—had it not been for the fact that the gentleman from North Carolina has in effect suggested that that be done; and, inasmuch as I always like to agree with him and carry out his wishes when I can and when it is for the good of the country to do so, I feel not only justified but rather impelled to say a few words in regard to the manner of conducting the public business in this Congress.

We have splendid committees, not only the majority membership but the minority membership of them; and fortunately for the good of the country, on very many matters that come before us there is no considerable difference of opinion, at least from a partisan viewpoint. Of course, there is the playing for position. There is the inevitable effort at times on the part of the minority to try and secure just a little political advantage, and sometimes it appears on the floor as though they are not wholly in favor of certain action which in their heart of hearts they indorse and approve. It is just a part of the game. We all understand that, and we are charitable enough about it not to expose their hand if they do not go too far. [Laughter.]

We have a steering committee. The Republicans of the various committees of the House, after having given careful consideration to the matters that come before their committees, very frequently say to the Speaker or to the chairman of the steering committee, or some member of it, "We have some matters with regard to which there is some difference of opinion as to the proper policy to follow. We are trying to carry out a policy of economy. We want to provide properly for the public service, but we want to cut out all unnecessary appropriations, and the members of our committee would like to take up with the steering committee and with the Speaker, and with such other members as you see fit to invite in, the general questions of policy before our committee." We frequently have conferences thus suggested. We have done that with regard to every appropriation bill that has been presented to the House thus far. That policy will be followed with regard to other appropriation bills, no doubt. The conference not only takes in the Republican members of the committee having the matter in charge, the members of the steering committee, and the Speaker, but generally chairmen or members of other committees interested in the carrying out of the general policy and having to do with legislative and appropriation matters somewhat akin to those under consideration. And after full consideration we have always reached a unanimous agreement. That is what has pleased me. It is not a matter of a showing of hands with the idea of finding out whether there is a preponderance of opinion on one side or the other; but after all have discussed the matter, frequently, not once but a number of times, there is eventually a unanimous agreement.

We keep at it until there is a unanimous agreement as to the general policy that ought to be followed. You know, I think that is what we ought to have had here years ago. I have a notion it is the best way to legislate and appropriate—that is, to bring the membership of the House together frequently in groups, first one and then another; bringing in those who desire to be heard, those who are particularly interested in the matter before us, those who have a special responsibility with regard to the general policy of the party, and finally coming to an agreement as to what we shall do. The steering committee has never told any committee what it should do, what it could do, or what it could not do, and has no thought of doing anything of the sort. [Applause.] But I am thankful that out of this policy of cooperation and coordination and constant and frequent conferences we are able to secure an agreement on the Republican side as to what should be done; and, as I have said here, even the gentlemen on the other side are frequently very helpful. And I want to say now that I think the very great majority of the men on the Democratic as well as the Republican side of the House have an earnest desire to make a good record for this Congress, without regard to whether it is Republican or Democratic; a record that will commend the Congress as a Congress and every Member of it to the good opinion of the people of these United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, so much for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] for the opportunity that he has given me. He said something about specific matters that perhaps I ought to refer to. I have never believed that I was a particularly hard-hearted individual. I have been sometimes accused of being oversympathetic and overtender-hearted. With my own funds, limited as they are, I have always tried to do what I could in my small and humble way to relieve suffering. I think that is characteristic of all the American people. Why, how they have poured out their money by the tens and hundreds and even thousands of millions—personal funds—contributing to every good cause that has appealed to them, particularly since the day we entered the European war. They are still contributing generously, beyond all example in the past, to the relief of the peoples of various portions of the devastated, war-torn areas of the world.

The question recently has arisen as to whether we, as representatives of the people, are justified in appropriating their money as a matter of charity for the relief of suffering in Europe. Of course, it is a very large question.

It is a question that a short time ago would have started all the constitutional lawyers talking as to whether we have in our commissions any warrant to expend large sums of the public money for charity. I am reminded of the fact that as long as we can remember there have been recurrent, frightful, and devastating scourges in the Far East, and particularly in India, in which millions of people have died and during which the most frightful suffering has occurred, far beyond anything now in Europe; and I can readily understand how we might have been called upon by humanitarian folks, sympathetic people, to have contributed of our money to the relief of those people. Our people did as individuals contribute largely, but we never felt that as Members of Congress we were justified in giving the money of the American people for these purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand that the gentleman from Wyoming gathered from the very touching remarks of my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that he was in favor of that bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not want to put the gentleman from North Carolina in any embarrassing position.

Mr. KITCHIN. If you will permit me, the gentleman from North Carolina is not in favor of the bill as drawn.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; of course not.

Mr. KITCHIN. But I will tell you what I am in favor of.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman misled my friend from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from North Carolina is not in favor of the $150,000,000 proposition which is before the committee. I knew that.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will have plenty of time in which to explain all of the good things and all of the questionable things that he is for. [Laughter.]

I have conflicting emotions about this matter. I do not want my view to settle it. It would not if I desired it to. I am only one Member of the House, and I am not going to make any special effort to have the House follow my views as to this thing; but I believe that we should think long and carefully before we take the money of the people of the United States to provide funds for the needy people of Europe. [Applause.]

No matter how trying conditions may be. And, gentlemen, do not be misled. I think conditions must be frightful over there in certain localities from all we have heard, but all the sob stories that you hear are not true. We gave France at an exceeding low figure several hundred million dollars worth of good foodstuffs we had there at the signing of the armistice. The condition of starvation in Austria, particularly Vienna, is in the main due to the fact that France and the Allies insisted that Austria should be dismembered to the last acre and that German Austria should not be allowed to join Germany. We are not responsible for that condition. If Austria, what is left of her, were to-day a part of Germany, I have no doubt that the German people, their neighbors, their kinsmen speaking the same language, would provide for them. But France said no, and the Allies agreed. Gentlemen, whatever the condition may be, the responsibility is not primarily ours, and France, war torn as she is, might spare at least a little of the Army foodstuffs we left with her in order to take care of these people just across the hills from her border, whose present condition is largely due to the fact that she insisted that they should remain as an independent government.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. In speaking of the dire need of France for foodstuffs, I saw in the sporting column of the paper this morning that they raised 100,000,000 francs from a prize fight. Could they not have used some of that?

Mr. MONDELL. The other day when I said I doubted that we ought to spend $15,000,000 in addition to the $60,000,000 we had already spent for aeroplanes this year some one said, "Well, England has spent $350,000,000." I said, "My dear friend, if there was any rag of truth in that old gag, then we ought to pass a resolution through the House of Representatives insisting that England pay the interest on what she owes us." [Applause.] If England can afford to pay $350,000,000 or $150,000,000 or $100,000,000 for aeroplanes, then she ought to pay the interest on her debt to us. [Applause.] The fact is that there is nothing in the story. It is not true. It is not so, and no such sum or anything approaching it has been spent or is being spent by England for that purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware that we have loaned Europe over $2,000,000,000, a large portion of which has been used for the purchase of foodstuffs, since the armistice?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there can be no doubt that a large portion of our very great loans, amounting to almost $10,000,000,000, were used as a military necessity and in connection with military operations to keep civilians as well as the military population supplied with food. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. I want to suggest to the gentleman, the chairman of the steering committee, that he permit the Ways and Means Committee to report a bill primarily for charity, and providing in that bill that they can use the profits of the Grain Corporation, profits made out of Europe, toward the relief of those who are really suffering in Europe.

That is what I want to do, and that is as far as I want to go. I want to take the profits of the Grain Corporation, which were made out of Europe, and give them to the people who are really suffering and dying in Europe. I do not want to give one penny of it toward the military proposition or in support of an economic condition in those countries.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] does me altogether too much honor—if honor it be—in the assumption that I personally control these things. I am but a Member of the House, and I have my opinion; but the Committee on Ways and Means is composed of strong, capable men. They will arrive at some conclusion in the matter. They will, of course, confer with their colleagues; but the conclusion will be theirs, not mine.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield, first, to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely wanted to state to my friend that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] speaks advisedly, he being the chairman of the Democratic steering committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, the difference between men in organizations on the Democratic side and men in organizations on the Republican side is this, and it is quite important, that the duty of men in the organizations and at the head of the organizations on the Republican side is to find out what the Republicans desire to have done, and then help them do it, whereas the gentlemen on the other side frequently conceive it to be their duty to tell gentlemen what they should do. There is a vast difference.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only error in the gentleman from Texas is that he is assuming that business is conducted on the Republican side of the House as it has been on the Democratic side during his incumbency and that of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], ably assisted by Mr. Tumulty at the other end of the Avenue. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I must say that if we have got to have bosses who decide things without regard to the views of their colleagues, we might have even worse than the gentlemen who have been referred to. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that during my incumbency, as the gentleman from Ohio refers to it, I went a little further in bossing than the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I bossed so well that every Republican voted for every measure that I brought out of the committee, and they voted unanimously for the measures that I reported out, the measures that I indorsed, so I had you all under my hand. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. To a certain extent that is true. In the days when we were fighting the great fight, in the days when we had but one thought, and that was to win and win gloriously, we had to take the word of men in position of responsibility. We could not do otherwise. We had to resolve every doubt on both sides in favor of the insistent statements of the gentlemen in command that certain sums were absolutely necessary, as patriots on both sides, gentlemen voted to support their Government. [Applause.] Now, we have come to the cold, gray dawn of the morning after, and we have discovered that large portions of those sums were wasted, were used uselessly and unnecessarily, and we are trying to take up the slack and get back to normal, sane, sound, and safe conditions. And gentlemen on the Democratic side are generally helping us, as we did them, and we thank them for it. It is just what we expected of them, because while their views and notions with regard to many things are as wrong as they can be, their hearts are all right. [Laughter.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, may I talk for a moment on this bill? This bill follows the policy that we have been trying to follow, with the aid of our friends on the other side, at least part of them, when the political exigencies of the occasion do not demand a temporary switch the other way, to keep down the appropriations within the sums necessary for the prosecution of the people's business in an economical way. There is not a service provided for in this bill that is not well provided for, and I think rather liberally provided for. Yet there is a reduction of $3,000,000 below the estimates, amounting in percentages to something over 25. This committee did not get any orders from the steering committee. This committee, like other committees of the House, did confer with the steering committee and with responsible Members as to the general policy, and said they desired to carry out the general policy of the party as it had been outlined. There is no great disagreement in regard to the measure. It is a good bill, and I congratulate the chairman on the splendid way in which the bill has been prepared and every member of the committee on the good work that has been done on the bill—and I mean the Members on both sides.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is now speaking about the Diplomatic bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks it necessary to continue $400,000 as a secret fund in the State Department, not to be accounted for, under section 291? I ask him if he thinks that is economy, if he believes it to be economy in a time of peace to have $400,000 as a secret fund in the State Department, whereas before this war $90,000 was the highest amount ever appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. MONDELL. I would ask the chairman of the committee what the sum is that the department asked?

Mr. PORTER. The department asked for $700,000.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; the department may have asked for $700,000 or $1,700,000; but I am asking the gentleman from Wyoming, whom I know to be an honest man—and I believe he will tell the House the truth—if he, as the leader of the majority, believes it necessary now, under the conditions that exist and the necessity for economy, to appropriate $400,000 when we had appropriated $90,000 only for that purpose theretofore?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be frank with the gentleman; I have very serious doubts about it. I was born in Missouri and I have the Missouri temperament in regard to that particular item, but my friend from Texas must remember this: The war is over, but Europe has not gotten down to normal conditions, and the State Department insisted that they were not extravagant in asking for $700,000. They pleaded earnestly for every dollar of the $700,000, and frankly I do not feel like taking the responsibility—I would not if I were a member of the committee—of saying that no part of that sum, no considerable part of it, should be appropriated, although I have grave doubts whether it is all needed. The gentleman from Texas knows that in economizing you can not use a broadax, we can not simply slash here and there. If we are to justify our economies before the country, they must be carefully considered and we must not run squarely in the face of and in opposition to the earnest, insistent demands of the administration.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. With reference to another section of this bill. There is a section in the bill where we authorize $600,000 to supplement salaries in the Consular Service. That is for the State Department to go out and increase salaries without Congress knowing anything about how much each person is to receive. Does the gentleman believe that is good public policy?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a case, as I understand it, where the Republican majority on the committee followed the views of the Democratic committee twice expressed, and twice brought before this House. I do know the State Department pleaded for that item and insisted upon it. I do know that your own committee asked it. Frankly, whether those increases are absolutely necessary, I do not know. I hoped that we could get along without any increases and I am, just at this time, constitutionally opposed to all increases.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MONDELL. But I want to be reasonable. I do not expect committees to take my judgment.

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman think it is economy to continue in this bill that post-allowance fund which was put there for the purpose of supplementing the salaries of secretaries and clerks to embassies and legations to the amount necessary to make up the difference in the cost of living prior to the war and now, and at the same time and in the same bill increase the salaries of these secretaries by $1,000 each?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the committee did not go anywhere near as far as the administration asked, and it did not go as far as the committee did last year, when it was presided over by the exceedingly able gentleman who has just spoken.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman is mistaken about that. They went further than the committee went last year in the increase of the secretaries' salaries.

Mr. MONDELL. And, furthermore, it does not follow that every item of this bill will commend itself to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole. That is for the committee to determine.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me tell the gentleman one thing: Whatever the steering committee may or may not do, whatever the gentlemen in responsibility on our side may do, we do not want to get in the habit of spending our time picking up pins. We are trying to carry out a general policy, but in the nature of things we can not have an opinion except the same as any other Member of the House with regard to every item in all the bills. We must accept the judgment of the committees in regard to the items. Did the gentleman from Ohio desire to ask a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Merely in connection with the salaries. I was wondering whether or not the gentleman was aware that the Secretary of State himself personally appeared before the committee and asked for an increase in the ambassadors' salaries to $35,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; and the Secretary of State was very insistent, too, about enormous increases not covered in this bill, and I shall not be disturbed if the Committee of the Whole and the House conclude to modify some of these items.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, it may be of interest to the committee to recall that although the war was over when this bill was under consideration a year ago, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], in charge of the bill, reported a bill to the House which included an item of $700,000 for post allowance instead of the $600,000 carried in this bill.

And, furthermore, the department requested $800,000 this year, and said if they did not have it it would wreck the service, and Secretary Lansing laid more stress upon that item, as did his associates, than on any other item in the bill.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. It may be of interest to the committee to know that the same bill also carried an increase of salaries of secretaries, about the same as the pending bill.

Mr. MONDELL. These are matters of detail that the committee will pass upon and discuss briefly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not true that this secret fund of $400,000 is expended under the direction of the President of the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. It is. And the President of the United States, while not of my political faith, is my President, and when, through the officer of the particular service charged with responsibility, he says the money is absolutely essential in the conduct of our foreign affairs, I can not well say that all of it can be dispensed with. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Peru, and Spain, at $17,500 each, $210,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. LITTLE. To make a parliamentary inquiry. Is an amendment in order right there after line 5?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The bill is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. LITTLE. I will send this amendment up and ask that it be read. I do not care to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 2, line 3, after the word "Belgium," insert "and Luxemburg"; and strike from lines 7 and 8 "and Luxemburg."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. What point of order?

Mr. ROGERS. That it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. DYER. And, Mr. Chairman, I make the additional point of order that all the lines to which the gentleman refers in his amendment have not yet been read.

Mr. LITTLE. That might be true as to the latter part of my amendment, but, of course, it would be in order to insert in those lines. This is an appropriation bill to decide what money shall be expended for certain purposes, and this amendment simply provides that the territory of Luxemburg shall be transferred from Holland to that of Belgium.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman what law there is that places Luxemburg where it is now?

Mr. ROGERS. It is not necessary to answer the question to enable the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to pass on the point of order. There can not be any existing law upon which we can predicate an amendment that will make Luxemburg a part of the same diplomatic entity with Belgium.

Mr. LITTLE. It does not say it is the same diplomatic entity. This says that the one gentleman shall be a representative to both of them.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to say that if that point of order is sustained you could sustain a point of order to other items in the bill. Some of them are authorized by law and others are not, but those that are not authorized by law would go out.

Mr. LITTLE. If that is the case, we can make a point of order and let them go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment to the existing law authorizing "ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Luxemburg." And the Chair would say that if the point of order is made the point of order would be sustained.

Mr. FLOOD. This is an amendment to the law authorizing an embassy at Brussels.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think the State Department has rendered a splendid service to this country in the development of the Diplomatic and Consular Service and our foreign relations generally. Its Diplomatic Service has brought us in closer touch with the nations of the earth than we have ever been before, and has accomplished much good for this country. Its Consular Service, which I believe is considered the best consular service in the world, has extended our commercial relations and our commerce to the great advantage of the business men of this country. I am in thorough sympathy with the attitude of the State Department in the development of these great foreign services.

I am for this bill. I do not expect to undertake to defeat an item in it, but what I do object to is the attempt that is being made here to show that this is a measure of especial economy. It is no more so than the current appropriation act, which carried a larger amount than any Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill ever enacted by Congress. But the attempt that is being made—that was made by the chairman of the committee yesterday in his address and by the chairman of the steering committee this morning—to show that this measure was framed along economical lines is without foundation. We are practically at peace with all the world now. We stand on a peace basis. This bill carries an aggregate appropriation of $8,843,000, which the chairman of this committee alleges is less than the existing appropriation. It is. But that appropriation bill was enacted when we had just emerged from the great World War, and when our diplomatic relations were in an unsettled and uncertain state.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the gentleman think necessarily that the estimates submitted by the State Department, for which the gentleman's administration were responsible, were at least 30 per cent high, and probably much higher than that?

Mr. FLOOD. I think the estimates of the State Department were like the estimates of every department of this Government since I have been in Congress, whether the administration has been Democratic or Republican—greater than they got from Congress and greater than they really expected to get.

Mr. ROGERS. Can the gentleman suggest where this bill can be reduced without crippling the service, and to what extent?

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman has not been listening to what I said.

Mr. ROGERS. I have.

Mr. FLOOD. I said, on the contrary, I did not expect to vote to reduce any item in this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Then why criticize the committee?

Mr. FLOOD. I am not criticizing the committee for bringing in the bill, but I am criticizing the attempt that is being made to show that it is a measure of greater economy than its predecessor, when it is not. If your purpose was to show whether the committee was more economical when it was Republican than before you should have compared the amount carried in this bill with that carried in the bill when we were appropriating on a peace basis. The appropriation made in this bill then was $3,000,000 less than the appropriations carried in the pending bill. Your claim of economy therefore is without merit. This claim constitutes the objection I have to the contention which is made here. It is not true to the fact.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman from Virginia if the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill last year was a measure of economy?

Mr. FLOOD. No. It was not paraded in this House as a measure of economy.

Mr. DENISON. I did not ask whether or not it was paraded to the House as a matter of economy.

Mr. FLOOD. It was for the purpose of extending and enlarging our Consular Service, and the largest appropriations were made for the Consular Service in that bill that were ever made, and for generally taking care of our foreign service on a broad basis.

Mr. DENISON. It was an economical measure?

Mr. FLOOD. It was economical considering the service that had to be supplied by it. There were no unnecessary items in it—no waste.

Mr. DENISON. If you can say that that was economical, can you not also say this is a measure of economy?

Mr. FLOOD. It is not a measure that can be claimed to be a measure of economy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Some of the appropriations are cut below what they ought to be. Some are cut at the suggestions of the steering committee of the majority side of this House. I do not think the reductions were always wise, and some apparent reductions will not save any expenditures; that is, they are apparent and not real reductions.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman will remember, I think, that we cut out several hundred thousand dollars for telegrams, cablegrams, and so on, that were quite an expense during the past year or two. Does not the gentleman think that was in the interest of economy and properly to be credited to that?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know how much the committee cut out for cablegrams and telegrams. They reduced the secret fund of foreign missions, out of which these telegrams are paid for. I do not know whether it was all for telegrams or not, but I suppose that the gentlemen on the committee propose to allow the State Department to use the cables when the State Department deems it necessary to do so.

Now, I want to refer to one item to illustrate the economy which this committee claims it has practiced. Take the item that we are dealing with, "Salaries of ambassadors and ministers." They report a very considerable decrease in the item of ambassadors and ministers—from $240,000 in the current year to $210,000 in this bill. That will save not one dollar to the Treasury of the United States. They simply accomplish that apparent reduction by making no appropriation, and no suggestion of an appropriation, for an ambassador to Russia, Austro-Hungary, or Turkey.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Does the gentleman think we should have continued the appropriation for Austro-Hungary and Russia?

Mr. FLOOD. I see no reason for not appropriating for Russia. I am not criticizing you for not doing it, but I am showing that you are not saving any money by the bill. Last year Turkey and Austro-Hungary were exactly in the same position that they are this year, and the Acting Secretary of State asked us to keep those appropriations in the bill. We also kept Russia in, and I can see no reason why an appropriation for the Russian Embassy should not be made now. As soon as conditions are stabilized in that unhappy country we shall again have an ambassador there.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. After the processes of disintegration have been completed in Austro-Hungary, Turkey, and Russia does the gentleman think we will be justified in creating embassies, or should we reduce those countries to legations?

Mr. FLOOD. Of course, Austria will be a legation and Hungary will be a legation and Turkey will be a legation. But I have heard no suggestion that Russia, or the conditions there, justified our not resuming our diplomatic relations with them. We have never formally broken them off. We will send another representative there. I have never heard a suggestion that we should not send an ambassador there.

Mr. PORTER. Why continue appropriations for Austro-Hungary and Turkey?

Mr. FLOOD. Why leave out Russia? You certainly ought to have made some provision for Austria and Hungary and Turkey, and Congress will have to appropriate for these four places in a deficiency, and instead of the appropriations for embassies and legations being less this year than last they will be more, and your claim is merely an attempt to fool yourselves, the House, and country.

I can see no reason why the appropriation for an ambassador to Russia should not be continued in this bill, just as it was last year. In this bill you carry an appropriation for an ambassador to Germany. Our relations are certainly not any more strained with Russia than they are with Germany.

I am simply pointing out that the reduction claimed by the chairman and the Republican leader are apparent and not real. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the offering of this amendment was somewhat formal, and I did not care to discuss it. My reason for suggesting the amendment was simply to put into the RECORD a statement of the desirability of attaching Luxemburg to Belgium instead of to the Netherlands, because Luxemburg is a country a considerable distance from Holland, whereas Belgium is adjacent. I supposed it would get into the RECORD, and in that case perhaps some one in the State Department would have sense enough to ask that the item be corrected.

Gentlemen on the committee now turn around and object to it on a point of order, which was good, as the Chair held. I simply sought to transfer Luxemburg from the next paragraph and have it linked up with Belgium in the preceding paragraph. If Luxemburg is not entitled by law to belong to this bill, it has no more business in the second paragraph than it has in the first paragraph. If my motion had been voted on, the whole thing would have been settled. I will have to make a point of order later, and Luxemburg will be struck out. I am sorry the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] will not withdraw his point of order, so as to allow Luxemburg to take its place along with Belgium. The matter is too obvious for further discussion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman going to make a point of order on the paragraph?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the second paragraph has not yet been read, and the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] has in mind can not be made at this time.

The reference of the Chairman, as I understand it, is to the point of order that I made to the first paragraph of the bill. The item that the gentleman from Indiana wishes to discuss is the prospective point of order which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] plans to make on the two words in the second paragraph of the bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ROGERS. The point of order was not made, because the paragraph has not been read yet.

Mr. FLOOD. I thought I heard it made.

Mr. ROGERS. There was a general announcement of a prophetic point of order, but the point of order could not have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] offered an amendment to the bill, inserting something in line 3 and striking out some language in line 7. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], as the Chair understood it, on the ground that there was no authorization by existing law for including the word "Luxemburg," in line 3, after the word "Belgium." The gentleman from Kansas did not direct the attention of the Chair to any authority or existing law for the appointment of an ambassador extraordinary or minister plenipotentiary to Luxemburg, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts made.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman has in mind some provision of law which authorizes the insertion of "Luxemburg" anywhere in the bill, then, of course, the point of order would have to be overruled, because if there is that authorization for Luxemburg to be put in anywhere there is as much reason to put it in in one line as in another. Is there any law that authorizes "Luxemburg" to be put in?

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is out of order. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. LITTLE. I want to ask the committee if there is any authority of law for putting "Luxemburg" in the bill?

Mr. PORTER. I think the gentleman will find it in the act of March 1, 1893, Twenty-seventh Statutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I cite the Chair's attention to that act. It seems to be a law that authorizes "Luxemburg" to be provided for in this bill. If so, it has as much right to go in at one line as at another. I think that settles the question, and I will offer the amendment again.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, of course the obvious answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas is that he seeks to make Luxemburg a part of an embassy, whereas the authorization of law is to make it a part of a legation, as it is now.

Mr. LITTLE. That is splitting too many hairs altogether.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the statutes of the United States, whether it is splitting hairs or not.

Mr. LITTLE. If the statutes of the United States authorize the sending of an ambassador to Luxemburg, you can assign it to any other Government you want to attach it. This is not to send an ambassador to Luxemburg directly, but it simply says in effect that the representative to Belgium, no matter what he is, shall be the fellow to take care of Luxemburg. It is just attached to his duties; that is all. You can leave any embassy in the hands of a temporary personage of lower rank any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Poland, at $12,000 each; $60,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Does that mean that there is one envoy or one minister to the Netherlands, Luxemburg, and Poland?

Mr. PORTER. No; Netherlands and Luxemburg, one, and one to Poland.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not mean one envoy for each. I notice there is a difference in the punctuation. China, Cuba, and Czechoslovakia are separated by commas, and then we have the "Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Poland."

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is a comma after "Luxemburg."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does that mean one representative for the Netherlands and Luxemburg?

Mr. PORTER. Yes; and one for Poland.

Mr. DENISON. I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of getting the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DENISON. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any provision of law authorizing an ambassador or a minister plenipotentiary to Czechoslovakia?

Mr. PORTER. There is an authorization passed in January or February of last year.

Mr. LITTLE. Is that an act of Congress?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. While I am on my feet I will ask a further question. Did the Congress by legislation provide for the status of our representatives to the other new countries in Europe that have been formed—for instance, Jugo-Slavonia? Is there any provision of law for the appointment of a minister or ambassador to Jugo-Slavonia?

Mr. PORTER. No.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that question?

Mr. PORTER. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. We have for many years sent a minister to Serbia, which is a part of Jugo-Slavonia. The committee considered changing the title of that minister so as to call him the minister to the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. The minister from that tripartite kingdom to this country is called the minister from the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. The Secretary of State and his representatives, who were questioned on that point, suggested that there was still something of a state of flux in that part of Europe, which might be modified by the ultimate peace adjustment, and that, therefore, for this year it was wise to leave the old title as it originally stood, although, of course, it conveys the idea of the Republic of Jugo-Slavonia.

Mr. DENISON. Has there been any change in the law as to the amount of salary to be paid to the minister to Serbia?

Mr. PORTER. No.

Mr. DENISON. The minister to Serbia will have a great many additional duties to perform over and above what the minister to Serbia formerly performed before the war, because the Kingdom of Jugo-Slavonia is two or three times as large as it used to be, and it seems to me that the man who has charge of American affairs for that country certainly ought to have as much compensation as the man who has charge of the United States business at the capital of Poland or Jugo-Slavonia.

Mr. PORTER. Your committee, on account of the uncertainty in regard to the status of these countries, thought it better to follow last year's appropriation until matters become settled and we can determine the amount of the salary with accuracy and certainty.

Mr. TILSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to Finland. I note that it is inserted in the bill this year. What about these other new countries in that part of Europe, Esthonia, Lithuania, Latvia, and so on? Have they all been taken care of in the bill?

Mr. PORTER. Finland has been recognized, and therefore we have a right to appropriate for a minister to that country.

Mr. TILSON. I am not raising any point of order. I am simply questioning whether there has been authority given to send a minister to Finland and Lithuania and Esthonia and Latvia and some of these other countries?

Mr. PORTER. We are only appropriating for representatives that have been authorized by Congress.

Mr. TILSON. And there is no authorization and no request to provide a minister to any of these other countries?

Mr. PORTER. None whatever.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on a matter in connection with the river and harbor bill, which I did not have an opportunity to discuss during the consideration of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on a matter relating to the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the last rivers and harbors bill contained provisions for two surveys of very marked interest, one so unusual as to fix the attention of the whole country. The provisions to which I refer are for surveys of two ocean waterways, both via the Great Lakes, the one from there to and by the Hudson River and the other by the St. Lawrence. The survey of the St. Lawrence route contemplates the improvement of the Canadian part of that waterway at the joint expense of Canada and the United States, and in this respect the proposed improvement would be a departure in principle from the long-settled policy of this country.

Let us see what has led up to this novel, startling, and amazing proposal that the United States should depart from its wise and conservative habit of expending the money raised by taxes on its citizens on its own waterways and use its funds instead to improve a foreign country.

Over a hundred years ago the Empire State, under the leadership of a far-seeing statesman, De Witt Clinton, dug the Erie Canal to carry the products of the West from Lake Erie, on its western boundary, to the Hudson River, a distance of over 300 miles, and thence down the Hudson to the port of New York.

This great undertaking was conceived and carried out by the State of New York, and from the time of its completion it was maintained by that State, at its own expense, and it proved for a very long period of incalculable benefit to the great producing West. Of late our transportation methods have changed, and it has been found economical and therefore necessary to employ ships and barges on our inland waterways of vastly increased carrying capacity. The State of New York, alive to the necessities of the day, has modernized its canal by the expenditure, again from its own treasury, of $200,000,000, straightening the channel of the canal, utilizing natural streams wherever available, and the providing throughout its length a channel 12 feet deep. Terminals have been provided at the cities along its route. Modern loading and unloading facilities will, in the near future, be installed. Railroad connections and exchanges will be provided. A fleet of boats to the carrying capacity of the canal will, it is believed, in the near future be built to receive traffic at the Lake Erie and Hudson River ends of the canal and transport it.

However, this great and expensive improvement has just been completed. Boats have not as yet been provided nor have the terminals and the facilities for loading and unloading and for exchange with railroads been as yet completed. So there has been an interregnum—a period when it has not been possible to transport trade over this great inland waterway.

And the West, forgetful of the fact that New York, at its own expense, provided for the transportation of its traffic for over a hundred years, unmindful of the circumstance that New York has asked no contribution from it in exchange for these great benefits, seeing only the interruption of traffic for the moment, has indulged the dream of a lake-to-ocean route through Canadian waterways. This way by the St. Lawrence, it is respectfully urged, is not practical. During a large period of the year the St. Lawrence is not navigable by reason of ice, and at all periods of the year its navigation is dangerous by reason of fogs which have always prevailed in the lower stretches of the river.

I quote from a communication to the International Waterways Commission, made by the attorneys representing the Ontario government, filed with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in January, 1911, when the development of water power on the St. Lawrence River was being considered by the committee, as follows:

> The amount of ice delivered by the Long Sault before the breaking up of the Lakes is probably as much as that delivered by the Cedars and Lachine combined. This is on account of the much longer and wider stretch of agitated water where the fragile ice forms; the numerous bays for boderage ice; and the large tract of snow-swept lands and ice fields for slush ice. The swiftness of the current keeping the mass in constant motion alone prevents the accumulation from uniting, but when a narrow portion of the river has become bridged by some large field swinging out from one shore and striking the other side then the arrested mass soon cements and quickly creeps upstream. That its disastrous effects are to be dreaded is evidenced by the memorable seasons of 1879, 1887, and 1905. In the latter winter the bridge began toward the end of January and extended 10 miles upstream to Rapid Plat, raising the water 12 feet at Morrisburg and affecting the river level as far as Prescott. That the tendency for the jams to occur in the slackened current due to damming the river is self-evident. But, in addition, the problem of guiding the ice accumulation (consisting of cement-acting slush and cakes of ice ranging up to 12 and more feet in thickness) over any dams or through any sluices is something for which there is not any precedent for engineers to calculate upon. Past experience has shown that, with 12 hours' start, after a bridge has formed it would be impossible for ice breakers or dynamite to be effective, but that only the warm spring weather would prevent the upward march of the ice, carrying destruction beyond the imagination of anyone. * * * Everyone has heard of the strenuous but unsuccessful effort put forth by the Canadian Government to keep free the lower St. Lawrence of its ice and maintain an open channel. The damage incurred by the jamming of the channel below the lower rapids (Coteau, Cascades, and Lachine), and that often taking place in Montreal Harbor gives a faint idea of the responsibility entailed by arresting the flow of the river at the Long Sault. (P. 779, hearings.)
>
> Fog forms more frequently at night and disappears shortly after sunrise. Fog prevails more frequently in the United States, along the northern part of the Middle Atlantic and New England coasts and thence increases northward to the Banks of Newfoundland.
>
> Mr. E. B. Garriott, of the Weather Bureau, who made a careful study of the dense fogs of the North Atlantic States, says that they are caused by the warm, moist currents of air from the Gulf Stream 300 miles to the east, being carried over the cold water of the "Banks" by the southeasterly winds blowing into low pressure areas advancing from the west.
>
> The temperature over the North Atlantic in July is 45°, while that of the Gulf Stream is 78°. (The Weather, by E. B. Dunn, pp. 71–72.)
>
> On the other hand, the St. Lawrence is not open throughout the year; the average time between the arrival of the first vessel at Montreal from sea and the departure of the last ocean vessel is seven months. From Kingston to Quebec the river freezes over every winter, except at points where the current is rapid. * * * To pass through the field of ice that is always present in the gulf, in greater or lesser quantity, specially strengthened vessels are required. (Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 24, p. 22.)

I am advised, too, that during the five months' ice period in the St. Lawrence some Canadian steamship lines are compelled to use the harbor at Portland, Me., and that the Grand Trunk Railway, a line owned and operated by the Canadian Government, has been extended to Portland to connect with these steamship lines.

Moreover, competent and distinterested engineers, all except those who are paid to construct ship canals, agree that the transportation of cargoes over the Great Lakes, through canals and a river, and across the ocean to Europe is utterly impracticable, because the overhead charges of a vessel built large enough and of sufficient strength to withstand ocean storms are so heavy that from the practical standpoint they can not be met. Engineers say that there are three classes of boats: First, the ocean-going vessels; second, ships fitted for commerce on the Lakes; and third, barges. They say that, in cost of construction and of operation, the ocean ship represents the factor 6, the lake vessel 4, and the barge 2. And the opinion is universal among experienced and competent engineers that you can not afford to use the ocean-going vessels on the Lakes, much less on a canal or river. They point, as illustrative of this, to the fact that ocean-going vessels do not use the Hudson River practically at all, although it is improved to a sufficient depth to enable them to navigate it for a hundred miles or more above New York.

Then, too, those who advocate this Canadian route forget that all of the trade of the communities of the United States is not with Europe; that, in fact, a very small percentage of it is with foreign countries, and that its market, and the most profitable market and the market where most of the trade is carried on and commodities exchanged, is right in our own country; and this Canadian waterway would therefore carry a very small part of the traffic of the West and all of the exchanging of products with the East would be by routes wholly within the United States.

At the National Rivers and Harbors Convention the argument was made that the St. Lawrence route should be improved because incidentally a water power would be developed of a million horsepower which would be enormously profitable, and those who gave this as a reason for improving the Canadian route seem to think that this water power would only be developed in case this Canadian route was improved at American expense. In this they are entirely mistaken. The power of the St. Lawrence has awaited simply the passage of the general water-power bill, and it will be developed utterly regardless of whether or not the Canadian ocean waterway is improved.

To show that those who advocate this measure on the ground that water power will be developed are themselves in doubt about the soundness of their argument it may be said that one of the advocates of this Canadian route, in a speech in the Senate a few days since, advocated the excluding of boundary streams from the general water-power bill on the ground that to include them would conflict with the provision for the survey of the Canadian route. In other words, his argument was that the State of New York should not be permitted to develop its own water power except in subordination to and in connection with the improvement of this Canadian waterway. Reasonable men would hardly concur in such an argument.

I have long realized the importance of keeping New York's waterways engaged in carrying the grain and other products of the West, and have, so far as I could, directed the attention of those in a position to hasten the utilization of our Barge Canal and the Hudson River to the importance of the duty which confronts them. In this effort I addressed the two following letters to the governor of the State of New York, the majority leader of the State senate, and the speaker of the assembly, namely:

JANUARY 14, 1920.

Hon. ALFRED E. SMITH,
Governor of the State of New York;
Hon. J. HENRY WALTERS,
Majority Leader of the Senate; and
Hon. THADDEUS C. SWEET,
Speaker of the Assembly, Albany, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: A matter of vital interest to the commerce and prosperity of the State of New York has arisen in Congress, to which the attention of the chief executive and of the legislative body of the State should be directed for their action. The river and harbor act approved March 2, 1919, contained the following provision, viz:

"SEC. 9. That the International Joint Commission created by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington January 11, 1909, under the provisions of article 9 of said treaty, is requested to investigate what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with the estimated cost thereof, and report to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to the Congress of the United States, with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river."

The plain purpose of this section is to have the United States unite with Canada in improving Canadian waterways so that ocean going vessels may transport the commerce of the Northwest, without break in bulk, from ports on the Great Lakes to Liverpool and other foreign destinations and bring back cargoes from these foreign ports to Lake ports from which they sail. If this plan is practicable it would result in New York, which pays a very great percentage of all Federal taxes, contributing her part of the very large expense necessary to improve Canadian waterways, in order that commerce of the Northwest may be diverted from its present channels through New York, Boston, Baltimore, Norfolk, and the other Atlantic ports to the improved Canadian waterways, robbing our own ports of a great part of their commerce and depriving them of the commanding position which they now occupy in world traffic and placing them in a relatively minor and secondary class. Of course students of traffic questions and leading engineers do not believe that it is economical or, from the transportation standpoint, feasible to run ocean vessels on the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes, and the connecting canals, because the traffic on the Lakes and still more on the river and canals could not stand the heavy expense of steamers built of a size and strength to meet the necessities of ocean traffic and because this far northern route would not be practicable for a large part of the year on account of ice, storms, and the other difficulties incident to the winter, late fall, and early spring. However this may be, New York State, the New England States, and the Atlantic States face two really dangerous conditions in this agitation for the joint improvement of Canadian waterways: (1) The improvement of the proposed Canadian route will be exceedingly expensive and the money expended there can not be used for the much-needed improvement of our own waterways; and (2) during the long period of investigation of the Canadian water route, of its improvement and of its experimental use to demonstrate its impracticability, the attention of our country will be diverted to this route to the exclusion of our own waterways.

New York, New England, and the Atlantic States do not realize the extent to which this agitation in the Northwest has already progressed. To show the condition, I quote from a speech delivered yesterday in the Senate by Senator LENROOT, of Wisconsin, advocating an amendment to the general water-power bill to exclude boundary streams, particularly "the Niagara" and "the St. Lawrence," viz:

"Mr. President, I am in favor of the adoption of this amendment for two reasons: First, because the propositions upon the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers are of such magnitude that they ought to be dealt with separately by Congress; secondly, because the improvement of the St. Lawrence River is now under investigation by the International Joint Commission, consisting of three members of the United States Government and three members of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, with instructions from this Congress to report as early as practicable upon the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, and we all know that that report, if made and favorably recommended, will cover the water-power improvement upon that river; and if the St. Lawrence River is to be included in this bill and the authority vested in this commission to grant lisenses for dams upon the St. Lawrence River, it is absolutely in conflict with the legislation that this Senate enacted in the last river and harbor bill."

* * * * * * *

"* * * Why should we give to them this very, very great power whereby, if we retain it ourselves, we will have an ocean waterway making the interior Great Lakes admit ocean vessels and carrying the ocean to the heart of the continent? Why should we by any legislation of this character interfere or conflict in the least degree with a project of such great magnitude?"

* * * * * * *

"* * * The legislation provides that the International Joint Commission shall investigate the subject and make recommendations to their respective Governments regarding the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, the two Governments cooperating. Under the investigation there can be and is now being no improvement of the St. Lawrence River without the creation of water power."

* * * * * * *

"May I say to the Senator at that point that the joint commission is now engaged in the work of investigating the subject? There are 14 States now organized for the purpose of doing everything in their power to further the project. Appropriations have been made by the State legislatures and officials appointed to represent the States in that organization for most of those 14 States, as I recollect."

From these excerpts from Senator LENROOT'S speech, three things are apparent: (1) That the creation of an ocean waterway through Canada, at the joint expense of the Dominion and the United States, is being seriously and energetically pressed; (2) for this purpose, 14 of the Northwestern States have organized to further the project, made appropriations, and appointed officials to represent them; and (3) those who favor this Canadian route seek to subordinate the development of the waterways of the Niagara and the St. Lawrence to the interest of this route and to have such a development only as they believe in harmony with the route.

In the face of these facts New York, New England, and the Atlantic States should act promptly and energetically to protect their harbors and commerce from the agitation for the improvement of the Canadian waterways and the injuries to them certain to follow such agitation and the adoption of the scheme by Congress.

It is not enough, however, for New York, New England, and the Atlantic States to combine to combat the danger which threatens them from the agitation of this Canadian project. They must improve their own ports and waterways and demonstrate their capacity to carry the traffic of the country. On New York in particular rests the duty of devising means for the utilization to its capacity of the "barge canal." The State has been most generous in its expenditures to construct the canal. To stop with its completion, instead of seeing that it is used, would be to have expended $200,000,000 uselessly. The chambers of commerce and the business men of the State will be glad to cooperate with the governor and legislature in finding the best means possible to use the canal.

Mr. CLEARY, of New York City, and I, the New York members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and, indeed, the entire New York delegation in the Senate and in the House, will, I am sure, be glad to cooperate with you in your efforts in these matters.

Respectfully, yours,

S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, M. C.

JANUARY 17, 1920.

Hon. ALFRED E. SMITH,
Governor of the State of New York, Albany, N. Y.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have your acknowledgment, through your counsel, Hon. James A. Parsons, of my letter of the 14th instant, relative to the proposed ocean waterway via the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, to be built at the joint expense of this Government and that of the Dominion of Canada. I read with much interest that portion of your message dealing with this subject, and one of the reasons for my addressing you was that I knew that you had already taken a keen interest in the subject. The reason for my writing at the time I did was that the combination of the 14 Northwestern States was first revealed through Senator LENROOT'S speech, delivered the day before my letter was written.

In further reply to your letter saying that you would be glad to have any concrete suggestions which I would care to make regarding this subject, I beg to say that two things should, it seems to me, be done at once:

1. The legislature should, by appropriate legislation, provide for the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to be named by the governor, its functions to be:

(a) To protect the waterways and commerce of the State of New York; and

(b) To suggest to the New England and the South Atlantic States the appointment of similar commissions in the interests of their respective States, all of the States to act together as an association.

The commission will no doubt have to be provided with funds to defray its necessary expenses, as has been done in the case of the 14 Northwestern States.

2. Either a second resolution should be passed by the legislature or the governor himself should appoint a commission of several of New York's leading transportation experts, having in mind that the larger cities along the canals, naturally most vitally interested, should have representation to evolve and present to the legislature a comprehensive plan for the utilization of the State's canals to their capacity.

With these two things done, a splendid start will have been made in opposition to the proposed Canadian water route.

In this connection, may I also call to your attention that I have today read a report from the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, without date, but received by the gentleman who furnished it to me the 12th of January, from which it appears that there has been an increase in membership so as to embrace 14 States, the new members being Wyoming, Nebraska, and Colorado. Utah is said to be still pending and Kansas and Missouri to be the only States eligible not yet approached. I quote from the report as follows:

"The opposition of New York" (at the National Rivers and Harbors Congress) "was promised. It materialized. It was routed—flooded out as the searchlight floods out the shadows.

* * * * * * *

"National interests having their seat in New York, centering in the American Manufacturing Export Association, have invited us to present this at a luncheon to their 1,500 members, and this body and others offer their friendship. They are distinctly with us. They will carry great weight in the city and in New England.

"Incidentally, through the chairman of the New Jersey commission which controls the State's port activities, we are assured of the friendly disposition of the interests there akin to ours.

GENERAL CONVENTION.

"With the approval of the President, Detroit proposes to be host to the anuual convention of the association to be held in May, and to make it the occasion for a great gathering. Not only the members of the council of State, including the governors of the several member States, will be invited, but a general assembly will be called of perhaps a thousand people interested in this movement."

I send these quotations from this report to show that this association is exceedingly active and that it is none too early for New York to bestir itself to see that its Barge Canal is used to capacity and that the other great ports on the Atlantic and the Gulf are united with it in the effort to retain the transportation of the commerce of the United States over its own waterways instead of having them diverted to those of another country.

While I can not believe what is stated in this report as to sympathy with the Canadian route on the part of any New York City or New Jersey interests, it is well to have these assertions in mind.

I beg to assure you that, if the suggestions made by me meet your approval, or if, on considering the matter, you have any similar plans which you prefer, and I can be of aid by coming to Albany to consult with you or to appear before the proper committees of the legislature, it will be a pleasure for me to be of service to you and to the State at any time.

Respectfully, yours, S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, M. C.

It will be noticed that the writer emphasizes the fact that it is far from sufficient for the citizens of New York to direct attention to the cost of the St. Lawrence route or to the fact that it is not feasible, or to the circumstance that it will divert the attention of Congress to foreign waterways and result in the neglect of our own transportation by water for a long period of time; that affirmative action is needed; that the State of New York must actually utilize the Barge Canal to its capacity; and that doing this is the most effective answer to the agitation for the improvement of Canadian waterways at our expense.

Underlying all this, overshadowing it all, is the great question of "nationalism." The citizens of this country have a just pride in its wonderful growth and development. They have boundless confidence in its future. They feel that it can afford to be self-reliant and to depend on itself and not on the aid of other countries. We court the friendship and the good will of all other nations, but we depend upon ourselves as much in this matter of the development of waterways as in any other practical matter. We should not surrender our independence and our self-reliance to any other country or to internationalism.

Aside from the question of commerce, there is another aspect to this matter which prudence requires us to take into consideration. It is unthinkable that the two great English-speaking nations of the world will ever become involved in armed conflict; that Great Britain and the United States will ever be at war. But suppose that we carry out the ideas of the advocates of the joint ocean waterway and improve the St. Lawrence and neglect our own routes to the sea, and that afterwards we become involved in deadly conflict not with Great Britain but with some other power. Can there be any question that Great Britain would be obliged, as a neutral, on the demand of our enemy, to refuse to permit us to use the St. Lawrence route for any war purpose? Certainly Great Britain could not under well-recognized principles of international law permit either us or our enemy to carry our war to the Thames River or to any of her great harbors, such as Liverpool, Plymouth, Southampton, or Queenstown. And how do the Thames and these harbors differ from the St. Lawrence? So if we devote our resources and our energy to the development in time of peace of the Canadian route, with the inevitable result of neglecting our own waterways, we will find ourselves in time of war able to raise men and to manufacture cannon and munitions of war but utterly unable to transport men or supplies to our seaboard by water.

We should depend upon our own flag and our own territory and strive to be as progressive and as self-reliant in the future as we have been in the past. Our country has improved its great harbors so that they have a greater navigable depth than those of any other nation. We have secured 40 feet, while the greatest depth in any other country is 35 feet. In the face of such a record we should not be asked to abandon our own waterways and to join in improving those of any foreign nation.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. What is the depth of the Erie Canal? Is it 9 feet now, or 12 feet?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Twelve feet, but I do not think we have at the present time 12 feet for its entire length.

Mr. WELTY. That would not be deep enough for an ocean-going vessel.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no.

Mr. WELTY. The gentleman referred to the difficulty of operating ocean-going vessels in canals. They are operating on the canal to Manchester, England, are they not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The canal to Manchester, England, is an interior waterway. I do not know, and perhaps the gentleman can inform me; but I do not believe that that canal is navigated at all by ocean-going vessels.

Mr. WELTY. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman asked me about it, and I will tell him what knowledge I have. The Manchester Canal is less than 30 feet. I think its depth is only 25 or 26 feet.

Mr. WELTY. It is 31 feet, I understand.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think so. The deepest harbor abroad—the very deepest harbor outside of the United States—is only 35 feet, and it is utterly impossible that the Manchester Canal is within 4 feet of that. I do not believe it is. I say this, that you find here right under your own eye, under your own observation, and where you know the fact, that ocean-going vessels will not navigate the Hudson River, although it is navigable for 100 miles above the city of New York, because of the overhead charges.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Does ice prevail in the St. Lawrence River during the summer?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The authorities say that there never is a time throughout the whole year when ice does not prevail to that extent in the St. Lawrence route that you have to have specially constructed vessels, with a special strength; and under those conditions that the ordinary ocean-going vessel could not safely navigate that route. There are seven months of the year when you can not navigate it at all; and the attorneys who represented the Province of Ontario when we had a hearing here in 1911 stated that the Dominion of Canada had made great, herculean, but unsuccessful, efforts to combat that condition, and that it was not possible to combat it successfully.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. The gentleman made a remark a little while ago that the ocean-going vessels do not navigate the Hudson River?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. And that they could for 100 miles above New York City?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. And that the reason they do not is because of the overhead expenses.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Is it not a fact that the reason they do not is because they have no terminals there—that the terminals are all in the city of New York?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no. There is not a State in the Union that has gone to the expense, has provided terminals in the bountiful way that New York has, and that to-day has the terminals which the State of New York has.

Mr. WELTY. But the terminals are in the city of New York, are they not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, there are terminals in the city of New York, but there are also terminals at every good port in the State of New York.

Mr. ROWE. Both Newburgh and Poughkeepsie have fine ports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I introduced a bill this morning to which I desire to direct the attention of the Members of Congress. Gen. Harbord testified before my Subcommittee on Expenditures in the War Department the other day on the subject of medals of honor and went into detail as to rules and regulations pertaining thereto. He stated that the distinguished-service medal under the law could be granted only to men and officers who had distinguished themselves while in positions of great responsibility; that the distinguished-service cross could be given only to men and officers who distinguished themselves in action against the enemy. This was interpreted to mean while on the firing line. He further stated that the medal of honor was rarely given, and could be awarded only to men and officers who had greatly distinguished themselves beyond "all call of duty." As I recall it, only about 78 men and officers have received the medal of honor and something like 5,000 have received the distinguished-service cross, 20 per cent of whom are dead, the cross being given to the next of kin. I have not in my possession the number of persons to whom the distinguished-service medal was given, but I am informed that only one private received it.

For the reasons as stated previously, a man, to be entitled to it, must have occupied a place of great responsibility. Gen. Harbord stated before our subcommittee that "Gen. Pershing, thirty or forty times, perhaps, I would say, has set forth to the War Department the urgent advisability of establishing some decoration which could be given to soldiers who did meritorious service, but not necessarily people who were in a position of great responsibility. It has been done probably within a week—pointing out that we are absolutely unable to reward a lot of deserving people. It has practically made the distinguished service medal an officers' club affair, because it has kept out the enlisted man." Thus the young men whose hearts were aching to be in the front lines where their valor and patriotism would be recognized and where they would have an opportunity to distinguish themselves were kept in the rear. I have one in mind, who stayed 36 hours at a winch unloading a vessel until he fainted from exhaustion. Men have stayed with engines under the same trying circumstances. A petty officer on a ship at dock went into the hold of the vessel during a great fire in order to bring out imprisoned men and lost his life. Gen. Harbord recommended a hundred such men for service medals, but under existing laws nothing can be done for them. He can receive no recognition for extraordinary valor or fidelity; he must go home after long, faithful service with nothing on his coat to indicate that he has given the best that is in him in the service of his country. This is all wrong. It should be changed. I have here a number of different bills that have been offered on the subject of service medals. I have before me the bill recently reported out from the Military Affairs Committee, but none of them touch this phase of the case. The officers have been well attended to. But this war was not won by the officers alone. Pluck and grit of the American boy while in France has rarely been equaled, and where his services are exceptional he ought to be recognized.

It has come to my attention that in 1782 Gen. George Washington, during the War of the Revolution, issued an order establishing military merits, which, I believe, is still in full force and effect. At least, it could be reissued by the Secretary of War, and especially so if authorized and directed by Congress. This order was issued by Gen. Washington at Newburgh headquarters on August 7, and it provided that in order to "cherish a virtuous ambition in his soldiers, as well as to foster and encourage every species of military merit, wherever any singularly meritorious action is performed, the author of it shall be permitted to wear on his facings, over his left breast, the figure of a heart of purple cloth or silk, edged with narrow lace or binding; and not only instances of unusual gallantry, but also of extraordinary fidelity and essential service in any way, shall meet with a due reward." It provided that the names of those who receive this order of merit should be enrolled in the book of merit which was to be kept at the "orderly office." In those days men were honored for faithful service, regardless of whether they were officers or whether they were fortunate enough to serve on the front lines. I know that Gen. Pershing and Gen. Harbord are strongly in favor of the issuance of some badge of distinction which shall meet the need that I have outlined to you.

I believe the General Staff will favor it. I would like here to set out a copy of my bill, together with a copy of the order referred to and subsequent orders pertaining thereto which I think will be of interest to the Members who are interested in this question:

A bill authorizing badges of merit to be given soldiers, sailors, and marines and their next of kin.

Whereas under existing law and regulations the medal of honor can only be given to officers and soldiers and sailors and marines and persons who distinguished themselves in action above the call of all duty and the distinguished-service cross may be given to officers and soldiers who have greatly distinguished themselves in gallantry in action, and the distinguished-service medal can be given those who have rendered distinguished service in places of great responsibility; and

Whereas it has been held by the military authorities that there is no existing power or authority in the Secretary of War or President to decorate or confer military badges of honor for any character of service rendered by such soldier, sailor, marine, or other person, whose services did not bring him into actual combat action, since the soldier, sailor, and marine is not regarded as having occupied a place of great responsibility; and

Whereas it is entirely proper and desirable that this Nation give recognition to splendid and heroic services rendered by soldiers, sailors, and marines who were not permitted to come in actual physical contact with the enemy; and

Whereas Gen. George Washington, on August 7, 1782, by order executed at headquarters, Newburgh, authorized "honorary badges of distinction" to be conferred upon those who served with fidelity, bravery, and good conduct, which badge was known as the badge of merit, and was "the figure of a heart in purple cloth or silk edged with narrow lace or binding," which order is still in full force and effect when applicable to present conditions; and

Whereas the continuance of the spirit of this order and the making of it applicable to the soldier, sailor, and marine who can not be recognized under existing laws and regulations, would greatly increase the morale of such soldiers, sailors, and marines: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy under such regulations as he may prescribe be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to award, but not in the name of Congress, a military badge of merit, which consists of "the figure of a heart in purple cloth or silk edged with narrow lace or binding," and which shall be known as the order of merit, and which order shall be bestowed under such regulations and rules as the Secretary of War for the soldiers and the Secretary of the Navy for sailors and marines may prescribe upon soldiers, sailors, and marines only who have performed or may hereafter perform singularly meritorious action with fidelity or gallantry in a service of more than 90 days after April 6, 1917, and who by reason of the existing rulings or decisions are not permitted to have conferred upon them either the medal of honor, distinguished-service cross, or distinguished-service medal; that upon granting said order the name and regiment and service of the soldier shall be enrolled in the "books of merit," which will be kept in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively; but said badge of merit may be conferred upon the next of kin of such soldier, sailor, marine, or other persons.

—

[Revolutionary orders of Gen. Washington, published by Wiley & Putnam, New York and London, 1844 (164).]

HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, August 7, 1782.

Honorary badges of distinction are to be conferred on the veteran noncommissioned officers and soldiers of the Army who have served more than three years with bravery, fidelity, and good conduct; for this purpose a narrow piece of white cloth, of an angular form, is to be fixed to the left arm on the uniform coat.

Noncommissioned officers and soldiers who have served with equal reputation more than six years are to be distinguished by two pieces of cloth, set on parallel to each other, in a similar form.

Should any who are not entitled to the honors have the insolence to assume the badges of them, they shall be severely punished. On the other hand, it is expected these gallant men who are thus distinguished will, on all occasions, be treated with particular confidence and consideration.

The general, ever desirous to cherish a virtuous ambition in his soldiers, as well as to foster and encourage every species of military merit, directs that, wherever any singularly meritorious action is performed, the author of it shall be permitted to wear on his facings, over his left breast, the figure of a heart in purple cloth or silk, edged with narrow lace or binding. Not only instances of unusual gallantry but also of extraordinary fidelity and essential service in any way shall meet with a due reward. Before this favor can be conferred on any man the particular fact or facts on which it is to be grounded must be set forth to the Commander in Chief, accompanied with certificates from the commanding officers of the regiment and brigade to which the candidate for reward belonged, or other incontestable proof, and upon granting it the name and regiment of the person, with the action so certified, are to be enrolled in the book of merit, which will be kept at the orderly office. Men who have merited this last distinction to be suffered to pass all guards and sentinels which officers are permitted to do. The road to glory in a patriot Army and a free country is thus opened to all. This order is also to have retrospect to the earliest stages of the war and to be considered as a permanent one.

—

[Revolutionary orders of Gen. Washington, published by Wiley & Putnam, New York and London, 1844 (165).]

HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, August 11, 1782.

In order to prevent misapplication of the honorary badges of distinction to be conferred on the noncommissioned officers and soldiers in consequence of long and faithful service through any mistake or misapprehension of the orders of the 7th instant, the general thinks proper to inform the Army that they are only attainable by an uninterrupted series of faithful and honorable services. A soldier who has retired from the field of glory forfeits all pretension to precedence from former services, and a man who has deservedly met an ignominious punishment or degradation can not be admitted a candidate for any honorary distinction unless he shall have wiped away the stain his reputation has suffered by some very brilliant achievement or by serving with reputation after his disgrace the number of years which entitle other men to that indulgence.

The badges which noncommissioned officers and soldiers are permitted to wear on the left arm, as a mark of long and faithful services, are to be of the same color with the facings of the corps they belong to, and not white in every instance, as directed in the order of the 7th instant.

—

[The Commander in Chief's Guard, Revolutionary War. Carlos E. Godfrey, M. D. Published by Stevenson-Smith Co., Washington, D. C., 1904.]

The following order was given for creating a board to examine and report upon the applications of the candidates for the badge of merit:

"HEADQUARTERS,
"Verplancks Point, September 9, 1782.

"The Inspector General, or in his absence the inspector of the Northern Army, The Adjutant General, Brig. Gen. Huntington, Lieut. Col. Barber, or any three of them, are appointed a board to examine the pretensions of the noncommissioned officers and soldiers who are candidates for the badge of merit. The board will report their opinions to the Commander in Chief. All certificates and recommendations will be lodged with The Adjutant General, who will occasionally summon the board to assemble."

—

After the close of the Revolutionary War a board of officers was convened by order of the Commander in Chief, "for the purpose of investigating the several pretensions of the candidates for the badge of military merit," the only badge or title ever bestowed in this country. In a recent examination of some old papers, in possession of a friend, a part of the proceedings of this board has come to light and, even if it had already been published elsewhere, will afford interest to some of the readers of the magazine:

"Proceedings of the board of officers appointed in the general orders of the 17th instant for the purpose of investigating the several pretensions of the candidates for the badge of military merit.

"Brig. Gen. Greaton, president; Col. Stuart, Lieut. Col. Sprout, Maj. Fish, and Maj. Prescott, members.

"The board being met agreeable to order proceeded to an examination of the certificates and papers laid before them relating to the several facts on which the several pretensions are founded, and thereon report:

"1. That Sergt. Elijah Churchill, of the Second Regiment of Light Dragoons, in the several enterprises against Fort St. George and Fort Slongo, on Long Island, in their opinion, acted a very conspicuous and singularly meritorious part; that at the head of each body of attack he not only acquitted himself with great gallantry, firmness, and address but that the surprise in one instance and the success of the attack in the other proceeded in a considerable degree from his conduct and management.

"2. That Sergt. Brown, of the late Fifth Connecticut Regiment, in the assault of the enemy's left redoubt, at Yorktown, in Virginia, on the evening of the 14th of October, 1781, conducted a forlorn hope with great bravery, propriety, and deliberate firmness, and that his general character appears unexceptionable.

"The board are therefore of opinion that Sergt. Churchill, of the Second Regiment of Light Dragoons, and Sergt. Brown, of the late Fifth Connecticut Regiment, are severally entitled to the badge of military merit; and do, therefore, recommend them to his excellency the Commander in Chief as suitable characters for that honorary distinction.

"J. GREATON,
"Brigadier General, President.

"Cantonment, New Windsor, April 24, 1783.

"His Excellency Gen. WASHINGTON."

Certificate for the badge of military merit.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, ESQ.,
General and Commander in Chief of the Forces of the United States of America, etc.

To all to whom these presents shall come, sendeth greeting:

Whereas it hath ever been an established maxim in the American service that the road to glory was open to all, that honorary rewards and distinctions were the greatest stimuli to virtuous actions, and that distinguished merit should not pass unnoticed or unrewarded; and whereas a board of officers whereof Brig. Gen. Greaton is president, hath been constituted and appointed for the purpose of investigating the several pretensions of the candidates for the badge of military merit, and said board having reported in the words following, viz:

"That Sergt. Elijah Churchill, of the Second Regiment of Light Dragoons, in the several enterprises against Fort St. George and Fort Slongo, on Long Island, in their opinion acted a very conspicuous and singularly meritorious part; that at the head of each body of attack he not only acquitted himself with great gallantry, firmness, and address, but that the surprise in one instance, and the success of the attack in the other, proceeded in a considerable degree from his conduct and management."

Now, therefore, know ye that the aforesaid Sergt. Elijah Churchill hath fully and truly deserved, and hath been properly invested with the honorary badge of military merit, and is authorized and entitled to pass and repass all guards and military posts as fully and amply as any commissioned officer whatever, and is hereby further recommended to that favorable notice which a brave and faithful soldier deserves from his countrymen.

Given under my hand and seal, at the headquarters of the American Army, this 1st day of May, 1783.

By his excellency's command.

JOHN TRUMBULL,
Junior Secretary.

A badge was also awarded to Sergt. Bissel, of the Second Connecticut Regiment. The particular services he rendered, or the occasion on which he so distinguished himself, as to entitle him to this military honor is not mentioned in the foregoing proceedings of the board. Sergt. Bissel was sent into New York in August, 1781, for the purpose of obtaining information of the strength and state of the enemy's force at that place. "On his arrival in New York, there being a hot press to man the King's ships, and finding no other means to avoid it or escape but by entering into the land service, he enlisted in Arnold's corps, and never had an opportunity of getting off until the 27th of September, 1782," when he made his escape from Staten Island and returned to the American camp. Perhaps he received a badge for this dangerous service, in which he appears to have acquitted himself with much prudence and address. (Military and Naval Mazagine of the United States, September, 1833, to February, 1834, Washington, D. C. By Benjamin Homans. William Greer, printer. Vol. II, pp. 146 and 147.)

You will notice in the bill I have prepared that it orders and directs that the Secretary of War shall bestow the "Order of Merit" upon the class of soldiers, sailors, and marines that Gen. Pershing and Gen. Harbord have in mind.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I must have misunderstood the gentleman. Did the gentleman say that the officers who came back were entitled to a distinguished-service medal because they had done their duty?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Distinguished-service medal.

Mr. KITCHIN. Because they had done their duty and were officers in responsible positions?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought they must not only have done their duty, but that they must have done something that is meritorious which marked them out of the ordinary.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If they distinguished themselves while in places of responsibility, they obtained the distinguished-service medal.

Mr. KITCHIN. If they simply performed their duties and did not do anything extraordinary, under the law they would not be entitled to a medal, although I understand a great many of them have gotten it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They rendered distinguished service in their various capacities, and they are entitled under the law to a distinguished-service medal. But why should an officer in the Judge Advocate General's office be entitled to one while a poor boy who rescued a comrade from a burning ship is not entitled to one?

Mr. KITCHIN. I agree with the gentleman. But my understanding of the law in respect to these awards both in the Army and in the Navy is not that they shall be given to one who simply performs his duty or who failed to do it——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think we are agreed on that.

Mr. KITCHIN. But that is the scheme on which the medals have been awarded, and I would say that not one in a hundred under the law as it is is entitled to it; yes, not one in five hundred.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think we are agreed on that, and I can not yield further.

Mr. KITCHIN. They ought not to get a medal for simply performing their duty.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The point I am trying to make plain is that the officer gets the medal because he is in a place of responsibility, while a private behind the lines can not get it because he is not, under the construction placed on the statute, in a place of responsibility or in action against the enemy.

Would it not be a splendid thing, my friends, if we could revive the custom of George Washington and bestow the "figure of a heart of purple cloth or silk, edged with narrow lace or binding" upon these deserving boys? There is a sentimental side to it that should not be overlooked. This terrible war that has just ended is the most tremendous struggle that civilization has known. The heroism and deeds of valor of our boys will be extolled in poetry and song in the centuries to come. We should do everything to reward these brave men who offered or gave their lives. There is a fine sentiment, to my way of thinking, attached to bestowing upon a deserving soldier an order established by the Father of his Country almost a century and a half ago.

Mr. WELTY. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that, under the law, the officers have no right to recognize a private and order a medal given to him?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They could not reach a fellow behind the lines under existing law because he did not occupy a place of responsibility. Of course, you could give a distinguished-service cross to a private soldier who went "over the top" and performed some especially meritorious service.

Mr. WELTY. It seems that some of our officers have overlooked the privates who have been on the front lines.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am inclined to think that is true; but I did not rise to offer any criticism at this time, although I expect to go into this matter more fully at another time. I feel that, under the construction the War Department has placed upon existing laws, there is no way to reach the deserving soldier who did not get up to the fighting line. There are officers in the Army and men well trained in the interpretation of military statutes who contend that under existing law none of the medals authorized could be given to the soldier behind the line; but the construction has been made and the recommendations for citation have been turned down because of the construction, and if Congress is interested in having these boys who rendered conspicuous service in the rear of the lines obtain any recognition they will have to pass a new law. I would like for you to consider this measure that I have introduced and give it your support if possible.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 2, line 8, after the word "Poland," insert "Lithuania, Letvia, and Esthonia."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Bolivia, Bulgaria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Greece and Montenegro, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Uruguay, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, and Venezuela, at $10,000 each, $260,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 2, line 14, after the word "Serbia," insert "and Montenegro," and strike "and Montenegro" out of line 11.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 7, line 13, after the word "Uruguay," insert "Armenia, Georgia, and."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the indulgence of the committee for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. LITTLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest sympathy with the proposition insisted on so ably by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE]. I am sure every Member of this House has the greatest sympathy toward the cause for which he speaks. At the same time it has always been regarded as the function of the executive branch of the Government to recognize or to withhold recognition from new States. I think the gentleman's appeal, therefore, should be directed to the State Department and to the President, rather than to be suggested by the Congress through the medium of an item in an appropriation bill which is subject to a point of order; and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, and with very great regret personally, I feel obliged to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, starting in on line 6 of this bill, on page 2, I find that in lines 6, 7, and 8 appropriations are carried at the rate of $12,000 apiece for envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Poland.

Now, I will show you the grouping of the countries and call your attention to the size and importance of them. From lines 9 to 15 you are appropriating $10,000 for ministers to countries many of which are of far greater importance than the countries enumerated in the lines above. Here is Luxemburg, with practically no commerce that reaches the United States, and the appropriation is $12,000.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Netherlands and Luxemburg are combined in one legation?

Mr. JUUL. Yes. I want to call attention to the fact that the Netherlands and Luxemburg are placed in class 1, and the ministers are granted a salary of $12,000. If the gentleman would count the ships from there that enter the harbors of the United States and then drop below and think of placing Sweden, Norway, and Denmark in a class inferior to the classes above, the thing would appear ridiculous diplomacy, to say the least.

Now, it seems to me that if we are to send ministers plenipotentiary to a number of countries, we should not offend that number of countries by dividing them into two classes and putting the countries with which we have the greater commerce in class 2 and the countries that have a lesser commerce in class 1. I venture to say that there are 25 ships entering American harbors with Scandinavian flags at the masthead where 1 ship enters from Cuba or Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, or Poland.

Why should we say to these other countries that we are sending an inferior class of representatives to them at a lesser salary, and that Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg and Poland are higher-grade countries, and are considered to be in a better and higher class? I think it is offensive. I have no objection to increasing the salaries of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary of the second class up to those of the first class, or to reducing those of the first class down to the same figure as those of the second class, but I do object to the classification as an insult to the countries that are put in the second class, and I say it is mighty poor diplomacy and poor economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JUUL. I ask five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. I am very much in sympathy with what the gentleman says in regard to Sweden, Norway, and possibly Switzerland, but your committee thought that until the treaty of peace is ratified and the affairs of the world have become more settled it is not prudent to disturb this classification which has been in existence for so many years. In all likelihood in the next bill reported from the committee you will see a different classification.

Mr. JUUL. With all due deference to the chairman, of course, I have not been here as long as some of the gentlemen, but every time we try to remedy what is a glaring evil we are told, "We will do it next time." Why should the United States of America put itself in the attitude of serving notice on a certain group of countries—telling countries like Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, and Venezuela that they are of an inferior grade to Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg and Poland? If we can not afford to pay our envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the countries of the second group, having the same title as the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the countries of the first group—if we can not afford to pay them all $12,000 apiece, we surely can afford to cut them all down to $10,000 apiece; and if an amandment increasing those in the second group to $12,000 is not adopted by this committee, I propose to reduce them all to $10,000. I think it is a downright insult to label the nations mentioned in lines 6 to 15 as an inferior lot of people with an inferior representation.

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman propose to reduce the salaries of the representatives of the first class or to increase the salaries of the second class?

Mr. JUUL. I propose to make one class of them, so as to remove the difference between the first and second class.

Mr. FLOOD. What salary does the gentleman's amendment propose?

Mr. JUUL. I have no objection to the salary either going up to the first group or down to the lower group, but I do say that the Scandinavian countries, with their great commerce, having great commercial connections with this country, should not be put below Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Cuba. I do not think you gentlemen sitting here as the representatives of the United States can afford to do that, and I want to tell you that it has been commented on for years in diplomatic circles. It is a mistake and you ought to amend it.

I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out $10,000 and inserting $12,000, and to add to the sum of $260,000 an amount sufficient to pay the difference of $2,000 for each of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary mentioned in lines 6 to 15.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman know that that will increase the appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JUUL. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PORTER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHIN. Is the gentleman aware——

Mr. JUUL. If you gentlemen will question me one at a time, I will try to answer you.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to reserve a point of order so as not to lose that right.

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if that was offered as an amendment?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I want to make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] to proceed for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. After hearing the speech of the leader [Mr. MONDELL], does the gentleman recognize that this amendment increases the appropriations in this bill in one item $52,000, and does the gentleman really intend to increase the appropriation after what the chairman of the steering committee and the leader of the House says?

Mr. JUUL. Is the gentleman making a little speech in my time, or is he asking a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not know whether the gentleman recognized the fact that his amendment really increased the appropriation to that extent.

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right.

Mr. JUUL. Now I am going to answer the gentleman, and to be just as frank as he apparently is. I expected that somebody would make a point of order against the increase. The point of order was overruled. If I fail in getting this amendment adopted, I propose to offer another amendment placing all the countries mentioned in line 6 and line 8 at $10,000, instead of $12,000. I do not think there can be any point raised against that. In other words, I propose to reduce the appropriation to $10,000 for all of these countries. It seems clear to me, and it ought to be clear to you gentlemen, that a bill of this description may contain within its pages provisions which are offensive. We are sitting here and making a classification of nations. Let us take it home to ourselves. Suppose it was proposed in some other country to place the United States in group 2, among the nations to whom that particular nation was sending an ambassador. Every newspaper in the United States would rise up and protest against classifying this country as a second-class country. Now, we have in this bill a classification of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and then we name the countries to which they shall be sent. Does it seem right to pick out a series of countries and throw them into one group, and take others and put them into another group?

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair stated that the gentleman's amendment was not subject to the point of order, the Chair thought it related to lines 6 to 8, inclusive. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman's amendment related to lines 9 to 15, inclusive. The Chair discovers that the law provides that ambassadors to certain countries shall be paid $17,500, to certain other countries $12,000, and to certain other countries enumerated $12,000. The Chair thought he was dealing with the $12,000 countries, and felt constrained to hold that the gentleman's amendment was in order, but he realizes now that it was not.

Mr. JUUL. Then I move that the salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary provided in lines 6 to 8, inclusive, be reduced to $10,000 each, which is a reduction of $2,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The law specifies what the salary shall be, and any amendment which changes the salary would be subject to a point of order. The point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts is sustained.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the amendment be reported first.

Mr. LITTLE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the Appropriations Committee can not recommend a less amount for anybody's salary than the law allows for it? I think the law says that he may be given that much, but it does not require that he shall be.

Mr. CRISP. If the Chair will allow me, the Holman Rule specially provides that it shall be in order to change existing law by reducing salaries. That is clause 2 of rule 21.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that the amendment be reported before we debate this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the law.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JUUL moves to amend page 2, lines 6 to 9, by reducing the salaries of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary from $12,000 to $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The law provides that ambassadors and envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary shall be entitled to compensation at the rates following. It uses the word "shall" and it is mandatory.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I should like to know where it is intended that the language of this amendment shall be inserted in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to state, but since there is a point of order made, and the law is mandatory that the salaries shall obtain, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a moment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I have no interest whatever in this amendment, but I do have an interest in the uniformity of proceedings in this House. I grant that existing law fixes the salary of the ambassadors and ministers at a certain sum. That law is amendable. Congress can repeal the law; Congress can change it. Under the rules of the House that we have adopted for our consideration we say that legislation changing existing law shall not be had on a general appropriation bill, except under the provisions of the Holman Rule. Legislation can be had on an appropriation bill, but how? Provided the legislation is germane; provided it reduces the amount of appropriation in the bill; provided it reduces the salary of anybody carried in the bill. Legislation to repeal existing law fixing the salary of a public official is in order under the Holman Rule on an appropriation bill if the salary is reduced, and I respectfully call the attention of the Chair to that rule. If the Chair will indulge me I will turn to the rule and read it. It is clause 2 of rule 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the rule before him.

Mr. CRISP. Let me call the Chair's attention to the rule, for I think the Chair on reflection will not sustain the point of order on the ground he has stated. The rule is as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] is to reduce the compensation of certain public officials paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and if the Holman Rule means anything at all it means that this amendment is bound to be in order.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the conclusions of the gentleman from Georgia, but the point of order can still be maintained, because of the fact that we have passed lines 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. ROGERS. We have passed that paragraph, and we can not return to it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not desire to pursue the argument of this point of order on the line taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], namely, the application of the Holman rule to the reduction of an item, but merely to supplement his argument with the following suggestion. Congress is not required to appropriate at all, even to an object authorized by law. The statute may fix a salary, but so far as this body is concerned, we are not compelled to appropriate for that salary. Hence, as we may absolutely decline to appropriate, it follows upon the principle that the greater includes the less, that we may appropriate a less sum than the statutory amount and still be within our powers. The House can not appropriate a larger amount than that fixed for the salary by the statute for the simple reason that if we do so we will run against the positive rule requiring the authority of law for an appropriation. But the House having authority to appropriate a lesser amount, it is clearly in order to move a reduction of the amount carried by the bill, even if that amount is the exact amount fixed by the statute. So that both from this point of view and the Holman rule the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees that under clause 2 of Rule XXI, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] are correct, but he also agrees with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] that the item in the bill having been passed to which the amendment is offered, the amendment is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of this committee if they have not overlooked a bill of their colleague on the committee, Mr. MASON, with respect to making an appropriation for the salaries of a minister or ambassador to the republic of Ireland, and if we can not pass the paragraph now until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] returns to the city [laughter] I will not make the charge; but it seems to me that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is taking a snap judgment on him, or else they have gotten him to leave the city. [Laughter.] In any event, I would like to know, since the committee had extensive hearings on the Mason bill, what the attitude of the committee is. The committee called prominent men throughout the United States and throughout the world, advocates and nonadvocates of Irish freedom, and had them come to Washington and appear before the committee. I know I was very much interested in the hearings. I heard numbers of gentlemen, and I recall that it was one of the most imposing ceremonies I have ever witnessed, and that some of the greatest speeches I ever heard pro and con were delivered. Some months have elapsed since the bill was introduced and the hearings were had, and the committee has had sufficient time to consider the question. The bill was introduced May 27 last. I would like to know for my own information—and I presume the country would like to know—what has become of it, and why did not the committee put that in the bill, or why did they leave it out?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Is the gentleman urging that this should go in the bill—that the republic of Ireland should be recognized?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am asking for information, and when I get that I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. Could not the gentleman tell the committee whether or not he is urging it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I see the House leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], has whispered to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS]. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEARNS. But I did not hear what he said.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman from Wyoming that the gentleman from Ohio says he did not hear what the gentleman from Wyoming said. Will the gentleman from Wyoming tell him?

Mr. MONDELL. I suggested to the gentleman, if he will permit me, that inasmuch as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] had evidenced great curiosity in regard to the matter, he ought to tell the House what he would have done.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will tell the gentleman. I just dare him and his steering committee and this Foreign Affairs Committee to bring in a bill and test me. [Applause.] I have the courage to take a stand upon it, and you gentlemen have not even the courage to bring it to the consideration of the House, after inviting all the friends of Ireland throughout the United States to come to the hearings. I have asked these questions simply to show that the Republicans of the committee and of the House were playing with the Irish for politics; that you do not intend doing anything except to fool them for this year's election.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. I have not yet obtained my information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he desires an answer?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, I will tell the chairman. I do want information, but another gentleman of the committee "butted in" and asked me a question.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like the gentleman to withdraw that phrase, "butted in." As a Member of this House, addressing the Chair, I asked the gentleman if he would yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. And I did yield.

Mr. KEARNS. And the gentleman said that he would, and now the gentleman characterizes my action as "butting in."

Mr. KITCHIN. I will take all of that back. [Laughter.] The gentleman came forward—he forefronted in. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEARNS. After I have forefronted in, will the gentleman now explain to the committee his position relative to the so-called Irish republic?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will tell the gentleman my position. My position is that the committee having this bill before it, and having gone to the trouble and the expense on the part of this Government and the time of the committee to have public hearings, having summoned people, at the expense of thousands of dollars, throughout this country to come here, I think it is the duty of this committee to decide one way or the other and take the responsibility, and they should either vote it up or vote it down. If you bring it in here, I will take my responsibility. Bring something in and give me a chance to show where I stand.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman state it now?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, there is no use to tell it now, until you give me the opportunity to go on record by a vote. [Laughter.] It is not my responsibility; it is the committee's and the majority of the House.

Mr. KEARNS. But the gentleman has already said that he has listened to persuasive arguments, both pro and con. I would like to know which argument convinced him most, the one pro or the one con?

Mr. KITCHIN. The bill is before the gentleman's committee, not before me. How will the gentleman vote on the proposition?

Mr. KEARNS. I have not heard these arguments pro and con, and it is not my committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why did not the gentleman attend the meetings of his committee?

Mr. KEARNS. But I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, I thought the gentleman was. So the committee has kept him in ignorance just as they have kept me? I am trying to get information.

Mr. KEARNS. But the gentleman is not in dense ignorance. He has said that he has listened to persuasive arguments on both sides of the question, and that is the reason I asked him which kind had convinced him.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, the chairman is going to give us the information.

Mr. PORTER. There is a resolution appropriating $14,000 for a representative to the Irish republic pending before the committee. It is not a part of this bill, because the proponent of the measure, Mr. MASON, who introduced the bill, concluded that it was unfair to the Irish republic to place its rights in a position whereby they would be subject to a technical point of order by any one of the 435 Members of this House and thus prevent its consideration on the merits. There is no authorization of law for the appropriation, and it therefore would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course Mr. MONDELL could have had the Rules Committee bring in a bill in the jerk of a lamb's tail, making it in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Agent and consul general at Tangier, $7,500;
Agent and consul general at Cairo, $6,500;
Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government;

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out enough words to get a chance to ask the chairman of the committee a question as to why the agent and consul general at Tangier should receive $7,500 a year when we have next to no commerce there, and why the agent and consul general at Cairo, which is one of the world's important points both for shipping and commerce, should receive $6,500 a year? And I want to ask him if we are not proceeding, in lines 17 to 18, the same as we proceeded from lines 6 to 16, and there go into classifications that are absolutely unjust and unfair. I would like the opinion of the chairman.

Mr. PORTER. For many years we had a minister to Morocco, but after it passed under French control he was reduced to an agent and consul general at Tangier, at $7,500. The salary may be a little high. It is one of the matters that the committee desired to investigate when we take up the matter of reorganization of the Department of State. I understand the man at Tangier now is a very efficient official, and I would regret very much to see his salary disturbed until we have time to take testimony and fix the status of our representation at that place. It may be also that the salary of the agent——

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I believe I had five minutes on this pro forma amendment, did I not?

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman asked a question, and I was trying to answer it.

Mr. JUUL. Yes; but I have not finished yet. I want to know if it is not possible to give the agent and consul general at Cairo the same salary we are giving the agent and consul general at Tangier? I do not mean to embarrass this committee. I am not here for that purpose. I am going to vote for this bill, but with all due deference to any committee having any bill in charge, if a Member on the floor finds inequalities in the bill he ought to be permitted to call attention to them, and that should not arouse the hostility of any gentleman on the committee because they brought the bill in. This is not right, and gentlemen sit here with the power to straighten these things out, and the month of January, 1920, is as good a month to straighten it out as any other month in any other year since creation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF SECRETARIES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

For salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, as provided in the act of February 5, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," as amended by the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, approved July 1, 1916: Provided, That secretaries in the Diplomatic Service shall hereafter be graded and classified as follows: Secretaries of class 1, $4,000 per annum; secretaries of class 2, $3,625 per annum; secretaries of class 3, $3,000 per annum; secretaries of class 4, $2,500 per annum; in all, $418,375.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. I think the Clerk has just read the next paragraph.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that proviso, too.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet trying to get recognition all the while, and the Clerk was proceeding in such a manner as not to hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. TILSON. I simply wish to ask an explanation in regard to the reclassifications of the salaries of the secretaries in this department. I would like the chairman of the committee to explain what this really does.

Mr. PORTER. Under the act of 1915 the secretaries were placed in five classes, the salaries ranging from $1,200 to $3,000. This bill reduces them to four classes, and raises the salaries of those in each class $1,000 a year. This increase in salary was urged in the appropriation bill of 1919, and an increase of $500 a year was reported in the bill for the current year. The Department of State assures us that the integrity of the service is largely dependent upon increasing these salaries.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman realizes that with that one proviso he has practically doubled the expense of this item. The amount carried last year in this item was $289,000, plus; this year it is $418,000, plus. It seems to be a pretty large increase of salaries for a rather small class of officials—a large increase to be made in a single year.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I have an analysis of the duties of the secretaries of the Diplomatic Service, prepared by the State Department, that I would like to have the Clerk read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is all on the reservation of a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DUTIES OF SECRETARIES.

ANALYSIS OF DUTIES OF DIPLOMATIC SECRETARIES.

In submitting this analysis I should point out that the organization of all missions is not identical, and that during the last three years the political work and the observation conditions have been so overwhelming that all secretaries have had to participate in some measure. The duties outlined below are those which will be filled by the various officers under normal conditions. In addition to the work outlined below all secretaries must be able to perform duties of a purely clerical nature whenever the occasion demands. It should be observed that under normal conditions many missions are not staffed with as many secretaries as herein described.

COUNSELOR.

Inasmuch as the counselor acts as chargé d'affaires in the absence of the chief of mission, he must keep in the most intimate contact with the political events of the country in which he resides. During the presence of the chief of mission the counselor acts as his political adviser, and all matters of importance are, as a rule, discussed between the counselor and his chief before action is taken. The counselor does all routine work with the foreign office and all negotiations with members of the foreign office other than the secretary of state for foreign affairs and under secretary. He also has under his supervision relations with the members of the Diplomatic Corps, with whom he must keep in constant contact. The counselor receives a great many visitors and relieves the chief of mission from the burden of such business of this nature which it is unnecessary for him to pass on directly. The counselor receives and prepares the answers to communications of political importance, and directs the action of the entire staff in the protection of American interests. He maintains such organization as is necessary for him to keep accurately informed of political affairs in the United States and in the country in which he resides. He supervises questions of policy affecting the relations between the embassy and the consulate. He must also keep in touch with the representatives of the American press who may be in the capital as well as with the representatives of the local press.

FIRST SECRETARY.

The first secretary acts as executive head of the chancery. It is his duty to oversee the organization of the office, questions of personnel, of courier service, code room, file room, accounts, and other questions that pertain to the administration of the organization. He is also obliged to keep in touch with the political situation, as he must replace the counselor in the latter's absence from his office on duty or on leave. Incoming mail of a commercial or routine character is received by the first secretary, and answers are prepared by him for the signature of the chief of mission. It is his duty to keep in contact with the officers of the military, naval, and commercial attachés in order that there may be complete cooperation among the American officials in the country.

SECOND SECRETARY.

The second secretary is charged with all matters pertaining to passport control, including diplomatic passports, visés, questions of free entry, and the arrival and departure of those persons who enjoy frontier privileges. He also prepares under the direction of the counselor and first secretary, memoranda and dispatches for the guidance and signature of the chief of mission. The second secretary is in charge of the press analysis of the country in which he resides.

THIRD SECRETARY.

It is the duty of the third secretary to receive all visitors who do not ask for a particular person, to ascertain their business, to handle it if it is of a routine nature, and if not, to refer the visitor to the chief of mission or counselor, as the case may be. He often acts as private secretary in the official matters of his chief. His duties also include being at the disposal of American visitors and being of service to them in various matters in the capital. He assists in coding and the clerical work of the chancery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Most of my time was taken up in reading the analysis, and I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I make a point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly subject to a point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Turkish secretary of embassy to Turkey, $3,600.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to return to page 2, paragraph 3, for the purpose of offering an amendment to include the word "Ireland."

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 2, paragraph 3, to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I object.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I want to take this opportunity to observe that as a member of the committee which reported this bill I believe that the committee has done in the main good work, and I approve practically all of the bill, with the exception that I believe two items—the secret fund and the post allowances—are perhaps larger than they should have been. But I want to take occasion to point out here the difficulties into which gentlemen fall when they undertake to pretend that they are doing something which, in fact, they are not doing.

Now, you have heard here to-day a good deal about this bill being a bill of economy, that they have reduced the estimates, and that it does not appropriate as much money as the bill of 1920. Now, of course, the estimates were reduced, because the departments always estimate more than they expect to get.

And especially at this time, when word is being scattered all over the land by the leaders on the Republican side that our economical and saving friends are going to reduce all of the estimates and to adopt economical processes in the departments. I approve any real economy and hope that they may adopt it. Now, of course, it is true, and of course it ought to be true, that this bill is a reduction under the appropriations of last year, because at that time, on account of the United States being engaged in gathering up the tangled ends of diplomatic affairs left by the war which had just come to a close, there were unusual burdens placed upon the State Department.

But I want to call the attention of the gentleman of the committee to the fact that in the first paragraph of this bill the committee pretends to reduce the appropriation by $52,500 in the matter of appropriations for ambassadors. As a matter of fact, the committee failed to provide for ambassadors to Russia, to Turkey, and to Austria-Hungary. By failing to make such provision we shall have no diplomatic representatives of appropriate grade either in Russia or Turkey or Austria-Hungary. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] offered an amendment to provide a diplomatic representative to the Armenian countries. I would like to direct his attention to the fact that if this committee had provided for a minister or ambassador to Turkey he would have been so located, geographically, as to represent the interests of American citizens with reference to those countries which he mentioned.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman spoke of having no diplomatic representative of proper rank for Austria-Hungary. Where is Austria-Hungary?

Mr. CONNALLY. Austria and Hungary. The gentleman's question accentuates the fact that instead of having one country there are two there.

Mr. TEMPLE. And we are not yet at peace with either of them, and we have no representative at either of them.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we are not at peace with Germany, either, but nevertheless you have provided in this bill for a diplomatic representative in Germany. And I may say, further, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if an appropriation is made for these diplomatic representatives they need not be appointed until such time as peace shall have been concluded. And if they are not appointed the money will remain in the Treasury, just as it did in the first six months in the fiscal year 1920, when, under a Democratic administration, we made the appropriations, but it remained in the Treasury.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. But we are at peace with Russia. We are at peace with Russia, and we are at peace with Turkey, because we have never had any declaration of war against Turkey. Gentlemen, it is done for the purpose of creating the impression that we are saving $52,500.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. If I have time, I shall.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman fear that it will embarrass this country in resuming diplomatic relations with the three countries in question if we have not the authorization at the moment for an ambassador or minister? In other words, does not the gentleman think that the complete fabric of the State Department machinery, both diplomatic and consular, with the exception of the more or less figurehead gentlemen at the top, is quite sufficient to protect the rights of this country when the moment comes for us to resume trade relations with those countries?

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask what the gentleman means by "more or less figureheads at the top"?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, the ambassador to any country is quite apt to be more of a figurehead than is commonly supposed. The gentleman will realize that a very large part of the constructive work in the country's interest is necessarily done by the permanent, unseen, but fairly efficient corps of secretaries and consuls. Those men under this bill can be sent to these countries just as occasion requires, and we are not handicapping anybody, either our representatives in foreign countries or the State Department here, by not appropriating money for those ministers.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that those ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary for whom the committee has provided a compensation of $17,500 are likely to be mere figureheads in the future, if they have not been in the past? And if so, why have you not recommended a reduction of those salaries, as was called for by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] a little while ago? I am surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the secretaries and clerks perform the duties of the ambassadors.

Mr. ROGERS. I said the "secretaries and consuls." They do, to a very large extent.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had thought that the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking majority member of this committee, who takes a great interest in diplomatic affairs, had certainly the conception that this Government, when it carried on intercourse with great powers, did so through our ambassadors and not by means of our secretaries and the underlings of those great functionaries. But I call attention to the fact that you pretend to save money by eliminating an appropriation for an ambassador to Turkey.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. And yet, in line 21 of page 3, and line 24 of page 5, and line 11 of page 6, and line 22 of page 6, and line 7 on page 8, the following items are appropriated for the embassies at which we are going to have no ambassador. The first is "Turkish secretary of embassy to Turkey, $3,600," in line 14 of page 3. This is called Turkish secretary of embassy to Turkey, as though he were a Turk.

Mr. TEMPLE. Oh, no.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes. Look at it.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. The Turkish secretary is not a Turk.

Mr. CONNALLY. From the description he might be.

Mr. TEMPLE. The Japanese secretary to the Japanese embassy is not a Japanese.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was perhaps inaccurate in saying that the "Turkish secretary" implied that he could be a Turk.

Mr. TEMPLE. Quite so.

Mr. CONNALLY. He is required to speak Turkish, and a person to speak Turkish must remain in Turkey quite a long while. On page 5, line 24, $15,000 is appropriated for 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. "Rent of quarters for Turkish student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600." "For hire of steam launch for use of embassy at Constantinople, $1,800." For use of what? Supposedly for the use of the ambassador, and yet we shall have no ambassador there.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CONNALLY. "Rent for prisoners in Turkey, $1,000."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will have to yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. LITTLE. I have a motion ready to strike most all that out.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman know that in the absence of the ambassador the secretary takes charge of the affairs and acts as the representative of the United States in these countries, and that it is necessary to maintain the diplomatic organization there until such a time as an established government comes out of the chaos in that particular country? Now, before you answer that question, I would like to ask another along the same line.

Mr. CONNALLY. Do not give me too many at once.

Mr. BEGG. I want to give you two because you have made much of the failure of the committee to provide for ambassadors in Turkey and Austria-Hungary and Russia. Is it not just as probable that there will be two or three countries in Russia as one, and would it not be foolhardy to make an appropriation for an ambassador to a country that is in such a state of revolution as Russia is?

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman's argument contradicts itself. He says it is not necessary to have an ambassador there, because the secretary performs the duty of an ambassador, and therefore we do not need an ambassador; and in the next breath he says it would be foolish to provide any diplomatic representative in Russia because it would be two or three countries instead of one.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to answer the gentleman's first question before he asks another. I do not object to the proposition that in the absence of the diplomats the secretaries shall perform their duties. They ought to do that; but what I am trying to draw to the attention of this committee and the House is the fact that the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is undertaking to practice a deception when it pretends to be saving money by reducing the appropriations for ambassadors to Turkey, Russia, and Austria-Hungary. They admit that our citizens in those countries will need protection. They ought to admit that in a country that is torn and distressed, and with whom we have had difficulties, it is much more important that the men who represent our interests should be seasoned and experienced men with diplomatic dignity and powers, because those duties require more discretion than in a country with which we are at peace and with which our functions are purely normal and customary.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PORTER. Did the gentleman raise any objection in the committee to striking out the provision for the ambassadors to Turkey and Austria-Hungary?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sorry the gentleman has asked me that question, because at the last meeting of the committee which I attended the bill had been completed and these items were in it.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not a fact that after this bill had been practically agreed upon the chairman of this committee sent for Mr. Carr, the director of the Consular Service in the State Department, and asked him whether it would be all right to leave these matters out and did not consult other members of the committee about it?

Mr. PORTER. That is not the fact at all. Mr. Carr was consulted about other matters.

Mr. FLOOD. I was so informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for another question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PORTER. Our ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Fletcher, has not been there for months. Does the gentleman think we should fail to appropriate for the secretary and other officers who go to make up the diplomatic organization in Mexico——

Mr. CONNALLY. No; certainly, I do not believe we should fail to so provide.

Mr. PORTER. I have not finished my question—so that the rights of American citizens can be protected in so far as they are protected?

Mr. CONNALLY. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say no. I do not complain at the appropriation for the secretaries, but I do think this committee ought to be frank and to make appropriations for ambassadors to those countries which were omitted, and not pretend a saving in that regard.

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. LITTLE, and Mr. TEMPLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], a member of the committee.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised that a member of the committee charges the committee with an attempt to deceive the Congress and the people of the United States, and I resent that charge. The proposal was made in the committee, as the gentleman ought to know, that we omit the appropriations for the payment of salaries of ambassadors in the countries with which we were at war. That proposal was not accepted by the committee, because it was not deemed wise to fail to appropriate for an ambassador to Germany, where we expect again in due time to have an ambassador. But we do not expect ever to have an ambassador to Austria-Hungary. Austria-Hungary has been destroyed, and whatever diplomatic recognition the fragments may have, we shall not probably send a representative of ambassadorial rank. I hope that this particular appropriation is permanently discontinued.

Mr. FLOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TEMPLE. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. Instead of having an ambassador to Austria-Hungary, will it not be necessary to have a minister to Austria and a minister to Hungary?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes; it will.

Mr. FLOOD. Which will cost more.

Mr. TEMPLE. Perhaps it will.

Mr. LITTLE. They can have one representative to both countries.

Mr. TEMPLE. There is absolutely no pretense about this. We did not need these appropriations this year, and we did not make them. We make no claim as to whether it is an economy or not. It is a fact.

Mr. FLOOD. But in this report of the committee to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] takes exception, claims are made of great economy because it saves from $35,000 to $40,000, as against the bill of last year when it carried these items for ambassadors to Austria-Hungary and to Turkey.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think it is always an economy to refuse to make unnecessary appropriations.

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman think there is any economy in this?

Mr. TEMPLE. It saves money always to refrain from making useless appropriations.

Mr. FLOOD. Does not the gentleman know that not one dollar appropriated in the current law for ambassadors to Turkey and to Austria-Hungary has been used?

Mr. TEMPLE. I know that not a dollar appropriated to pay the salary of an officer who has not been appointed will be used until he is appointed. That is true.

Mr. FLOOD. And if it were carried in this bill it would not be used if the officer was not appointed?

Mr. TEMPLE. Certainly not.

Mr. FLOOD. I ask if it actually saves $1 to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. TEMPLE. This bill saves many a dollar. I think in some respects we have even gone beyond economy and have reduced the appropriations unwisely.

Mr. FLOOD. Does this item save $1 to the Treasury?

Mr. TEMPLE. I am explaining this item, and the gentleman thoroughly understands what I am explaining.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. In just a moment. I would like to complete my explanation. With regard to Turkey, the same question arises. But before I finish as to Austria-Hungary let me say that we are not neglecting the interests of American citizens in those two countries. We can not appoint a minister to Hungary and a minister to Austria when the law creating such offices has not yet been passed. But we are maintaining an extraordinary diplomatic mission in Hungary—a commissioner of the United States with a secretary and attachés—who, I suppose, are paid out of the one fund which is never audited; that is, the emergency fund of the State Department. I said that fund is never audited. Payments of this nature, I believe, are audited. It is only certain payments which the President makes which ought to be of a confidential nature for which no auditing is ever called. I have no doubt payments of salaries to officers of these commissions will be paid for out of this fund and charged against it, so that everybody may know what they are for. Now I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to say that we would never have a representative to Austria.

Mr. TEMPLE. No; I said Austria-Hungary, because that country has been destroyed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, yes; of course.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TEMPLE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do you explain the failure to appropriate for an ambassador to Turkey? We have never been at war with Turkey. Turkey is an entity. The papers stated the other day that the English are determined that Turkey shall not be driven out of Europe.

Mr. TEMPLE. I do not care to discuss international questions of that sort, involving the relations of other nations with one another, but I should like to answer the first part of the gentleman's question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to have it answered.

Mr. TEMPLE. We have never been at war with Turkey. We have fought Turks, I have no doubt, but we never declared war against Turkey. Nevertheless we have had no diplomatic relations with Turkey for several years. Our ambassador has been withdrawn, and the rank of Turkey among the powers of the earth has probably been so changed that when we do send a diplomatic representative to that country he may not be of ambassadorial rank. I state that as a probability, but not as a certainty.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, I understand that if this bill passes, which no doubt it will, the only way in which we can send diplomatic representatives to the fragments of the Austria-Hungarian Empire and to Russia—I do not know into how many pieces it may be divided—or into Turkey, will be to bring in a bill here and pass a law authorizing those appointments.

Mr. TEMPLE. That is the way—creating the offices.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are they going to abolish the ambassador to Turkey?

Mr. TEMPLE. We have not done it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are you going to do it?

Mr. TEMPLE. Very likely when we find out what the rank of our diplomatic representative there will be, if he is not to be an ambassador, we will bring in a bill creating the new office and abolishing the old. That will also have to be done in the case of Austria-Hungary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that to appoint two ministers to Austria and Hungary would cost more than the old ambassadorship would?

Mr. TEMPLE. I have not the slightest doubt that our foreign relations will cost us more money from this time on than they have ever cost us. I believe that the Consular Service ought to be reorganized and improved, and every man in the service, the whole foreign service, whether diplomatic or consular, ought to be an attorney for the United States. I believe that this is an exceedingly good time to employ good attorneys for the United States, the consular officers to look for business opportunities for American business men and the diplomatic officers to look after our peculiarly tangled foreign relations. I believe that it is a mistake to cut as much as we have cut this bill. I have accepted the cuts because it was necessary for the sake of economy. I do not mean to say that every cut has been wise economy, but they have beeen made with the purpose of saving dollars.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] raised a very interesting question to me. Certainly I had never thought about it before. He said that our ambassadors were mere figureheads.

Mr. TEMPLE. I would rather the gentleman from North Carolina would discuss that with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KITCHIN. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that is a fact?

Mr. TEMPLE. I would prefer that the gentleman from North Carolina would discuss matters of that sort with the gentleman who, he said, made the remarks.

Mr. KITCHIN. I see the gentleman from Massachusetts. I did not see him in his seat at the time I asked it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have not any doubt that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] knows how to get the floor when he wants it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman the next time he gets the floor, because I want to find out.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have heard of men in the Diplomatic Service of the United States to whom, I think, the term "figurehead" would apply, without any unfair criticism; but, on the other hand, I do not believe that any man in this House or out of it would make a statement of that sort in general about the heads of the diplomatic missions of the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the gentleman from Massachusetts did make the statement, and that was the reason I was surprised. I suppose he did not intend it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I did not hear the gentleman make that statement. The gentleman from North Carolina may discuss it with him.

Mr. KITCHIN. He did not intend it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] promised to answer my question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would be very glad to answer it now. I did not have the time.

Mr. LITTLE. Why did the gentleman make the statement that I ought to know that the minister to Turkey could take care of the business in the Republic of Armenia and in the Republic of Georgia? Where did he get that information?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that he will remember I said, "On account of the geographical location of that minister, he would be in a better position to look after that than if we had no one there at all."

Mr. LITTLE. He would be a thousand miles from where his residence is, and he would have no railroad on which to go there—a great sea between.

Mr. CONNALLY. He would be several thousand miles closer than he would be in Washington.

Mr. LITTLE. Not so much closer as you might think.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to an item at the bottom of the page—lines 21, 22, and 23—and I have an amendment to offer there to strike them out. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] animadverted to a series of these things scattered through here, and, as I understand him, he very justly suggested that it was a waste of money. There is $1,800 here appropriated for a launch for the Turkish Embassy, and we have no ambassador there; $15,000 are allowed for 10 students. I do not know what they want with 10 students there.

Mr. Chairman, $2,000 is appropriated for a Turkish assistant secretary of the embassy, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters. There is an appropriation for a launch for the embassy, and they could as well hire a taxicab.

Mr. KITCHIN. But a taxicab does not travel on water.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, well, let him take a rickshaw or sampan, as they do in Japan. There are 10 student interpreters, and we are not going to need any. There is $22,000 just wasted money. The biggest graft in all of the diplomatic service is the Turkish Embassy. They have less to do, and are going to have less to do there from now on, than any of the rest of the embassies. The Turkish Embassy will be abolished; there is no question about that. When this war began Turkey was a great empire. Now it is a very minor State. When they get done with it in Europe it probably will not be in Europe at all, but will be across in Anatolia. There is no reason on earth for appropriating $3,600 for an assistant secretary to the Turkish Embassy, as they have one already in this bill who will take care of the business there. Nor is it necessary that they should proceed to take 10 or 12 or 15 men and teach them the Turkish language to assist him. There is no other embassy on earth that is kept up in the way this bill provides for Turkey. There is no place on earth where there is less reason for it than in Turkey.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to state the purpose of the launch.

Mr. LITTLE. Very well.

Mr. PORTER. The appropriation of $1,800 includes launch, fuel, officers, hands, and so forth, and is considered to be more economical than owning a launch and hiring the men. The launch is necessary to convey the embassy staff from Pera across the Bosphorus Channel, connecting the business and the residence sections of Constantinople; $1,800 has been regularly expended from year to year.

Mr. LITTLE. The ambassador is not there, and he does not have to take these trips.

Mr. PORTER. The chargé d'affaires is there, and he acts as our representative in the absence of the ambassador.

Mr. LITTLE. Besides, this is a minor part of it. The fact that he attempts to explain that shows that he can not explain about the $15,000 to educate 10 students there. That is purely graft, worked in by somebody with a local pull, probably in connection with the American college there, to take care of some young men. There is no reason on earth for it. There is no other representative of our Government who has any such corps of interpreters and assistants. He could talk to all of the clerks in Constantinople through those 10 people. We are out for economy, and here is a place we ought to practice it and save $2,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can make a point of order against it.

Mr. LITTLE. I heard that it was in some kind of a law. I am going to make the point of order. I was told that it was in some law, and I am going to make them produce it. There is no sense in putting 10 or 12 assistant clerks in Turkey nor any other such country. Turkey is dead. There will be some kind of a minister there, but when he goes he will be over in Anatolia. I wish gentlemen to bear in mind that here is a chance to really save some money.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I should like to remind the committee that our foreign intercourse is carried on, speaking very generally and broadly, by two great instrumentalities. On the one side there is the diplomatic instrumentality, which is primarily political, although necessarily closely related to the commercial; and on the other side there is the consular, which is primarily commercial, although very closely related in many cases, and especially at present, to questions of politics and international policies. In this bill we appropriate something like one-half the total amount carried for our consular intercourse, which is a business appropriation and which has not been discussed during the recent debate. About one-half of the remainder is appropriated for the diplomatic side, and the other fourth is appropriated for the odds and ends of international relationship.

The question has come up, sponsored largely by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], as to the place of the minister and the ambassador in the general scheme of our foreign intercourse. It is a perfectly obvious and well-known fact, which I alluded to in the course of the debate, that a very large part and perhaps the major part of the solid, detailed, and scientific work of our intercourse is performed by the secretaries on the one side and by the consuls general and consuls on the other side. Then the question arises as to the usefulness of the ambassadors and ministers in the general fabric. They have their place. They have an extremely useful place in many cases. But I repeat that in the generality of cases their functions are quite largely those of a figurehead. In saying that I do not by any means intend to belittle the importance of their functions. When I say they are figureheads, I mean they are the official spokesmen abroad of the great Nation from which they come, and there can not be a more important function than that.

They must appear in days of war and in days of peace as the representatives of this great Nation. It is of the first importance that they should be truly representative, and representative in the best sense, of the United States of America. When I say they are figureheads, therefore, I mean no disrespect. It is inevitable that they must to a great extent perform duties which are difficult to describe in the terms of an appropriation bill. They are doing much larger things, much more important things, much more fundamental things in behalf of international comity, than if they were sitting at their desks doing merely routine work.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Massachusetts, as I understood him to say a moment ago, said that the functions of our ambassadors were political; that is, involving the political relations of our country and other countries.

Mr. ROGERS. That is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the gentleman think those relations are of less importance than the truly commercial business which the consuls transact?

Mr. ROGERS. I certainly do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the gentleman think that an ambassador can with any more propriety be a figurehead than a consul?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not see the particular pertinence of that question, and, after all, it is a matter of definition. The gentleman chooses to adopt one definition of "figurehead" and I to adopt another. I accept his definition for a moment, and I will say that time after time, especially in the Bryan régime in the State Department, there has gone forth to represent this country as ambassador or minister a man who was not fit to be a representative of this country. [Applause.] The scum of the earth has on occasion been sent out from the State Department in Mr. Bryan's day to represent the United States.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman name one whom he characterizes as "scum of the earth"?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not in that connection seeking to condemn or belittle the splendid men who also went forth; men like Walter Hines Page, in London, who laid down his life for his country just as truly as if he had laid down his life in Flanders; and his successor, John W. Davis, with whom many of us served on the floor of this House, and who is one of the truest and finest representatives of American manhood I have ever met [applause], and a man who has been a most distinguished success in London.

I can go on and name men of that sort. But, gentlemen, that is the bright side of the story. The other side is that some of the most unworthy specimens of American manhood have gone forth to represent this country, especially in Latin America, where perhaps the need was paramount for selecting men who would do us credit.

Mr. FLOOD. Can the gentleman name an ambassador or minister appointed during Mr. Bryan's régime in the State Department whom he is willing to characterize as "scum of the earth"?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I will—James M. Sullivan.

Mr. FLOOD. He is not ambassador or minister.

Mr. ROGERS. I beg pardon. He was retired on the recommendation of Senator PHELAN, of San Francisco, who was appointed by the President to investigate. [Applause.] I do not care to bring names into this discussion, but I can cite cases. I can cite the case of a minister who was notoriously pro-German in Latin-America, after we entered the war. I can cite the case of another Latin-America minister whose conduct was such during our actual fighting with Germany that after he died his body was exhumed, because it was thought he sought to escape the consequences of his wrongdoing and had caused the body of another to be put into his own coffin. I do not know what fact was developed, but I do know the case caused a scandal in Latin-America. I can cite the case of another man——

Mr. FLOOD. Name him.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not care to bring names into this discussion.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think the gentleman ought to get up here and say that ambassadors and ministers are the scum of the earth without naming them. He has named one. That man was properly defended. The gentleman may think that of him, but many other people do not.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not yield further.

Mr. FLOOD. You ought to name these men.

Mr. ROGERS. I am seeking to point out that good men have gone forth and bad men have gone forth, and when a bad man goes forth he does worse than if no one at all was sent to the post. That is the point I am trying to make. I should like to have time to analyze for this committee, as I have done in the past, the character of the men who went forth to Latin America to represent us as ministers during the régime of Mr. Bryan. I have not time to do so, but if anybody is interested I can refer him to a speech that I made in the House four or five years ago. I can refer him also to a speech I made a year ago when I called attention to the case of a man who was still drawing his pay as minister to a Central American country when he had not set foot in that country for two years. Of that case the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] said on this floor, in reply to my speech, that the official responsible ought to be impeached. And in saying all this I am by no means reflecting on the splendid representatives we have in other places.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 7, after the figures "1916," insert "$289,458."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has been passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Immediately after the reading of the amendment and it was rejected, I made a point of order against the proviso, which was sustained, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was recognized, and nothing else has been read since.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the items below had been read down to and including line 14.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not so understand it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is so advised by the Clerk.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to return to that section in order to provide the amount prescribed by law for the secretary.

Mr. ROGERS. Inasmuch as the matter is carried in the existing law, and therefore unnecessary, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chinese secretary of legation to China, $3,600.
Chinese assistant secretary of legation to China, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amount of $3,600, to the amount in addition to which it has been increased over the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PORTER. I think the gentleman is misinformed. It has not been increased.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand it has been increased to the extent of $1,000.

Mr. PORTER. No; that is not in the class of secretaries.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chinese secretary of legation, $3,600—has not that been increased over the last bill?

Mr. PORTER. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood it was. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Japanese assistant secretary of embassy to Japan, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.
Turkish assistant secretary of embassy to Turkey, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law providing for this second assistant secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. LITTLE. I understand that there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. In Barnes' Federal Code, section 2714, there is a provision by law, "The interpreter to the legation to Turkey, not to exceed $2,000."

Mr. LITTLE. This is not an interpreter. This is an assistant secretary.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The secretary of legation is in the section preceding—Revised Statutes, 1677. It has been the law since 1872.

Mr. LITTLE. The secretary of embassy has been agreed to.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. There is a statute for each of them.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman has not read any yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Indiana to indicate what provision of law there is providing for the assistant secretary to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Is that a Japanese or a Turkish?

Mr. LITTLE. A Turkish. The Japanese is a good place to have one, I think.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Sections 2713 and 2714, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman read the law which includes an assistant secretary of embassy to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the sections referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] do not seem to authorize the appointment of assistant secretaries to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. They provide for the secretary and for the interpreter. I am willing to let that go out—the students.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $435,175.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the total. I ask that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals and to deduct $128,907, which the Chair sustained on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the totals be corrected on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals on page 3. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. May I add, Mr. Chairman, on lines 12 and 24 also?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks also that the totals be corrected on lines 12 and 24. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $438,000; and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil service rules and regulations.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order, if anybody cares to speak for it, on lines 13, 14, and 15, beginning with the last three words, "and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil service rules and regulations."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves the point of order on the language, "and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil service rules and regulations." And the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] reserves a point of order on the whole paragraph. The Chair will hear the chairman or some member of the committee and ask him to point out any authority of existing law for the language contained in the paragraph.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, the law creating embassies and legations undoubtedly had in contemplation the fact that embassies and legations would need clerical help. It seems to me that the authority to employ such help is implied from the mere creation of the office. The authors of the law did not expect an ambassador or a minister to perform all of the duties of those great offices without clerical help; and under section 169 of the Revised Statutes authority is given to the executive department—or, rather, to the head of an executive department—to employ such clerks. I know that there is a ruling which holds that that does not apply to clerks outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, maybe we can come to an understanding or an agreement on this. I rather believe it is necessary to have some appropriation on that paragraph.

I am sorry that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is not here. I do not think he is "toting his end" fairly with me here to-day. If he were here he would stand by me to save about $2,000,000 out of these items, which are subject to a point of order.

In 1917 we appropriated only $100,000 for these purposes. Can we not cut this down to $250,000? The gentleman will not lose anything by it. I hate to say it—you know this is not the committee's bill. The steering committee have told the committee to cut, as Brother TEMPLE, from Pennsylvania, said. He thought some of the cuts were too much.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. This is one of the items that I thought had already been cut too much.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will when I get through this.

The steering committee says to this committee, "Cut, cut." So they cut; so that it is simply a play to enable Mr. MONDELL to issue these little weekly bulletins about economy. Now, we know, and I know, and every man on the committee knows, that all of these items will be restored later. They will go right back in the Senate. If we put $200,000 here, the Senate will make it $400,000 or $450,000, and the conferees will accept it, and Mr. MONDELL will issue his little bulletin and say, "If it had not been for the doggone Senate, which is trying to be wasteful, we would have saved money; but the Senate says we should not have any bill at all unless we let them put these appropriations back, and rather than have the bill fail I would prefer to have them go in." Mr. MONDELL will say, "I would let them go in rather than to destroy the whole Diplomatic Service." [Laughter.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the appropriation for 1918 was over $600,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. That was during the war.

Mr. PORTER. In 1900 it was $641,000.

Mr. GARNER. What was it in 1917?

Mr. KITCHIN. It was $100,000.

Mr. PORTER. And in 1919, three months after the armistice was signed, the Democratic majority appropriated $688,000 for this service.

Mr. KITCHIN. It was necessary, and the gentleman himself voted for it. That was during the war, and more clerks and expenses were required. Of course, during the war we had hundreds and hundreds of more clerks.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. The expenses of the peace conference at Paris were not paid out of that item.

Mr. KITCHIN. You had a separate item in a deficiency bill, did you not?

Mr. TEMPLE. No; I think that came out of the President's fund.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. The Secretary of State earnestly insisted upon the necessity of this appropriation. We cut it materially. He assured us that the integrity of the service depended upon maintaining these appropriations. We have tried to be fair with him. We agreed with him; but if the gentlemen on that side of the House desire to cripple that branch of the service, which they represent, we can not prevent it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Secretary of State insisted on a good deal larger figure than this, did he not?

Mr. PORTER. Yes. We cut his estimate materially.

Mr. KITCHIN. You gentlemen did not have any confidence in the Secretary of State, because you cut him down two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PORTER. I have unlimited confidence in the Secretary of State.

Mr. BEGG. Why does not the gentleman from North Carolina make his point of order if he is going to?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am willing to play the game with you, so that you may have all the credit you can get out of your pretended economy. You know that the Senate is going to put this back, and you can say that you saved two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PORTER. If you want to make this sharply technical point of order and cripple this department of the Government, it is entirely up to you.

Mr. KITCHIN. We are not going to cripple it. The Senate will put it back.

Mr. PORTER. I am not willing to say to you that I will ask the Senate to put it back.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to make the point of order, so that you can say you saved this $438,000; so that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can put that much more in his bulletin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PORTER. I desire to be heard further, Mr. Chairman. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to Hinds' Precedents, section 3675. A point of order was raised by Mr. Charles L. Bartlett, of Georgia, that while a purchasing agent had been authorized by law there was no law authorizing the clerk. After debate, the Chairman said:

The Post Office appropriation bill for 1904 created the office of purchasing agent for the Post Office Department. It did not, however, provide for any office force for the performance of the duty of that department, but it prescribed that the purchasing agent should report direct to the Postmaster General, and that under such regulations not inconsistent with the existing law, as the Postmaster General should prescribe, and subject to his direction and control, he should have supervision over the purchase of all supplies of the post-office service. It then goes on and prescribes the purchasing agent's duties, and they are such that he can not perform by himself without assistance of a clerical force—

Which is true of the case before us.

It is not to be assumed for a moment that such an anomaly was intended by the authors of that law, and, indeed, we find that no such anomaly exists because, under section 169 of the Revised Statutes, Title IV, the head of the Post Office Department and the heads of all other executive departments named in the title are authorized to employ such a number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, and other employees, at such rate of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year. So it seems to the Chair that the point of order is not well taken and must be overruled.

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. PORTER. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not a fact that that would not apply to this case, for the reason that for a long time after we had embassies and legations the clerks to those embassies and legations were paid by the State Department out of the contingent fund, and there was no contemplation that there should be an appropriation for the clerks and the law the gentleman read can not by construction be made to apply to these clerks?

Mr. PORTER. As I recall it, that was changed about 12 years ago, in 1907.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; in 1907, but up to that time there was assigned, out of the contingent fund which Congress appropriated in this act, a sum of money to pay for the clerks and janitors at legations. In 1907 a separate item was carried in this bill, for clerk hire, amounting to $65,000,000.

Mr. PORTER. That item was improperly paid out of the contingent fund. It was not provided for in the act of 1856 authorizing the contingent fund. But that is no answer to my argument that when we create an embassy or a legation, by implication we authorize the employment of the clerical force necessary to make that embassy or legation function properly.

Mr. FLOOD. It occurs to me that it is a reply to the gentleman's argument that for a hundred years and more after we had created legations there was no contemplation of law that there should be an appropriation for clerk hire for these legations, and only in 1907, without any authority of law, the appropriation bill carried that item.

It is a wise appropriation, but it seems to me the item is clearly without any warrant of law for it. Of course, it could be paid out of the contingent fund still.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is it not a fact that while the gentleman from Virginia was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs this same item was carried in the bill for seven or eight years?

Mr. FLOOD. It has been carried in this appropriation bill since 1907. I was not chairman all the time. I think it was a wise provision. I think it is a wise provision in this bill, but that does not affect the question whether it is authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The Chair is ready to rule. The item under consideration, to which a point of order has been made, is the paragraph, beginning in line 11 and down to line 15, inclusive, providing for the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil-service rules and regulations.

The Chair will state that under section 169 of the Revised Statutes provision is made for the appointment of clerks in the various executive departments; and the precedent is cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] to the effect that where a purchasing agent was authorized by the Post Office Department it necessarily included the appointment of clerks; but that would only permit the employment of clerks in the executive departments here in Washington. The rulings heretofore have been that where appropriations are asked for under the establishment of the departments, which do not specifically mention or include the employment of certain clerks or employees, it is restricted to the employment of those employees here at the seat of government in Washington.

Of course, the mere fact that this item has been carried in the appropriation bill for a number of years without any specific authorization of law does not now make it in order. In the view of the Chair the absence of any provision in the law creating embassies and providing for the appointment of ambassadors and other employees would not, and could not, be construed as authorizing the necessary clerks or other employees not specifically mentioned in the act, and as no authorization in the law has been called to the Chair's attention, and as he can not find any such authorization, inasmuch as it is the purpose of the proposed legislation to employ these clerks beyond the limits of the seat of government, the Chair believes that the language is subject to the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation and consulates in China, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the legation or consulates in China so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. KITCHIN. I reserve a point of order, and I should like to say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] that I would like to have the Republicans get the benefit of all the economy that can be saved out of this bill. This is the place to which the gentleman referred as grafting. I do not know what he is going to do, or if the gentleman will make a point of order against it. If he will do so, he will save that so-called expense of $15,000, and that side of the House will get the benefit of such saving.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against the provision from line 22, on page 5, to and including line 10, on page 6, because there is no law authorizing any student interpreters.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I rose before the gentleman from Kansas did.

Mr. LITTLE. I withdraw in favor of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that portion of the bill beginning on line 22, page 4, and ending on line 7, page 5, because there is no law authorizing any appropriation for 10 student interpreters at the legation in China, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the paragraph. The Chair would ask the chairman of the committee to cite the authorization for the language in the bill.

Mr. PORTER. I do not care to reply to the point of order. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters in China, at the rate of $200 per annum, each, $2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this $2,000 appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call attention to the fact, if the gentleman will withhold his point of order for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I intend to make it; but if the gentleman wants to give us any light I will reserve it. I intend to make it.

Mr. TEMPLE. I do not know that I can give any light, but I can assure the gentleman that there is no particular fire here. I merely wish to say that it has been thought wise for a number of years to carry these provisions in the bill without legislation which would make the thing so rigid that it could not be changed from year to year. It has been left without legislation purposely, and the party in power—the Democratic Party—depended with confidence upon the patriotism of the Republicans not to interfere with the organization of the State Department. I am sorry that we can not put the same dependence upon the Democratic Party now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said by the distinguished gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment on the reservation, if the Chair will kindly recognize me on the reservation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, but I would like to be heard upon it for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill is unauthorized, because there is no law for it. This matter of paying salaries to pet students, and paying all their tuition and expenses, has been carried on for years without law. I think we ought by this time to have some law before we make any further unauthorized appropriations to educate students in China, Japan, Turkey, and other foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,500 each, $9,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan; And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the embassy or consulates in Japan so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that there is no law authorizing student interpreters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania or some member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to indicate the authorization for this.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair withhold that for a moment?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas not to make the point of order against these items. It will disorganize the whole foreign service in these countries.

Mr. GARNER. They will put them back in the Senate, anyway.

Mr. FLOOD. I reckon they will put them back in the Senate, but there is no use of striking them out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Virginia that I have a real, bona fide, sure-enough case of economy on me that is more than lip and skin deep, regardless of what there is on the other side of the aisle, and I think the time has come to cut down these extravagant appropriations, and cut out every single employee of this Government that we can get along without.

Mr. FLOOD. I agree with the gentleman that we have to cut down on expenses.

Mr. BLANTON. And the idea of keeping men in school year after year over in China and Japan is ridiculous. By this time we ought to have educated enough interpreters to last us.

Mr. FLOOD. But the gentleman understands that they act as interpreters for a while and then go into the Consular and Diplomatic Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and then quit and come home, and commercialize the education paid for by Uncle Sam by hiring out to private concerns.

Mr. FLOOD. Sometimes they quit and come home, but the rule has been that they have stayed there abroad faithfully for years.

Mr. BLANTON. There are plenty of interpreters to be found who are not students. We can find a well-qualified interpreter right now for any of the countries without going into the business of raising them.

Mr. FLOOD. While they are students, they also act as interpreters.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but I would rather have an interpreter and pay him than to have 10 fellows learning how to be interpreters.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman would find that the result would be that the service in this part of the world will be without interpreters at the time they need them most.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; it will cripple the educational institutions in China and Japan.

Mr. FLOOD. It will cripple the ability of our embassies and legations and consulates to get interpreters when they need them.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to practice sure-enough economy, and there is no more propitious time than now to begin.

Mr. KITCHIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not, Mr. Chairman; but I want to say this, so far as the points of order I am making are concerned: Following the theory of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and knowing his sympathy for economy and his determination to have it, I feel very sure, although he has never told me, that he would have made these points of order that I am making had he been here. Because of the fact that he is not here, of course it throws the whole burden on me, and although you fellows are cussing me out I feel that I am bound to insist on the economy program. [Laughter.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has been present for the last 8 or 10 years while these bills have been pending and has never raised one of these technical points of order?

Mr. KITCHIN. But the spirit of economy had not seized him then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order as to the language——

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes before the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes pending the ruling of the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this provision for these 10 Chinese interpreters is absolutely the best provision in this bill, and you will get more out of your money there than you will from any other item in it. There are 400,000,000 people in China. Their language is the most difficult in the world to learn, and we have less people who address themselves to learning it than any other language on earth. There is the greatest opportunity there for the extension of our business and the consular system. This is a judicious and wise provision, to educate young men for the Consular Service and keep them there, and most of them stay, and to secure business for our people by having somebody who can talk the Chinese language. If you fellows would go there and try to learn to talk with these people every one of you would vote for this provision of the bill.

I am sorry that the general hilarity that has arisen here has attached itself to this provision. I do hope the Members of the House will see their way clear to withdraw their objections. I can assure you that it means a great deal to the business of this country.

Mr. KITCHIN. Was the gentleman ever one of these students?

Mr. LITTLE. No; but I have been in China and at the consulates.

Mr. GARNER. How about the Turkish people?

Mr. LITTLE. I will be just as fair about that as I want you to be with the other. The situation in Turkey is entirely different. Turkey does not contain one-twentieth of the number of people that China does. There is no possibility of building up any such business there, and the money would not bring any such results. Now that the Turkish Empire has been dismembered, the time has gone by when these men could be useful. The Turkish provision ought to go out, but the Chinese provision is not on the same plane.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes, pending the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes, pending the ruling of the Chair on the point of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will be ready to rule at the end of five minutes—and is ready to rule now.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in the wind-up of his remarks yesterday afternoon asked the question if I was against laws to punish burglary and rape because burglars and rapists do not like the laws. I will not consume any time on this floor replying to such a question, because my life work and my character is sufficient answer thereto. Mr. BLANTON, however, made the assertion that I intimated that all union men are against sedition laws because same might incite trouble with anarchists.

I am not responsible for the queer workings of the mind of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or the fact that, regardless of what I or anyone else might say, he has the happy faculty of deducting conclusions in accord with his own ideas. However, in defense of the union men he again misrepresents, I will say that I intimated no such thing, because organized labor never was and never will be fertile soil for anarchy, and the members of organized labor love their country and their Government. [Applause.] I repeat what I said on the floor of this House yesterday afternoon, that the four railroad brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor denounce anti-Americanism and anarchy and are as loyal to their Government as any Member of this Congress. [Applause.]

If revolution and anarchy were rampant in this country, the very first to take the steps to crush it and preserve the Nation would be the sons of toil—the workers of the country, who shouldered arms and fought in the trenches of Europe to crush autocracy—who gave their life blood in defense of America and the allied cause. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order on the paragraph beginning at line 10 and ending at line 20. The Chair has had called to his attention the provisions of the Thirty-second Statutes at Large, chapter 272, Fifty-seventh Congress, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, which contained an item for 10 student interpreters at the legation in China. However, the Chair finds, upon examining that statute, which it will be noted is simply a paragraph of the appropriation bill, that it authorized that year the appointment of 10 student interpreters, and went on to deal with the manner of their appointment. The language in that statute is very similar to that carried in the present paragraph relating to student interpreters at the embassy in Japan, providing they should be selected and on receiving the appointment should make certain agreements.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, Mr. Chairman; it must be in the same identical language. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman. The Chair is making his ruling, if the gentleman will permit.

The item in the appropriation bill, even though it is in the nature of legislation, unless the language is so drafted as to make it permanent law, is not permanent law; and in the view of the Chair the language called to his attention is in that class, although the item has been carried in the various appropriation bills from year to year, still, if any point had been made at any time, it would have been subject to a point of order. And this relating to Japan is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill for which no authorization has been shown, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $1,200.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PORTER. No; I do not desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs gave to this bill careful and earnest consideration, and in its consideration we were not partisan. We had in the committee the cooperation of the Democrats. The people of this country are not so deeply interested in who saves the money as they are interested in having the money saved and having the service of this country preserved. I think it is high time that this farce of belittling the measure of the importance of this by striking out, because you can do so legally, that which should be maintained in the bill should cease. The people of this country are not interested in either the Democrat or the Republican claims as to who are saving the money. They are interested in the fact that the money is saved, and at the same time they are broad-minded enough to have the Congress of the United States vote a proper amount of money for the maintenance of this Government both here and abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 10 words.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that these propositions should really be submitted as unanimous-consent requests, because there are no last words.

Mr. LITTLE. I will withdraw the request and wait until we reach another paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] brought to the attention of the House a question involving what he alleges is an improper practice by agents of the Federal reserve banks in trying to coerce and intimidate State banks to become members of the voluntary clearance of checks at par arrangements which have been made by the Federal reserve banks. If the gentleman from Nebraska will introduce a resolution to investigate that I shall be glad to join him and investigate the facts. But I think it would be more practical if the gentleman from Nebraska would try to get the law amended, because the Federal reserve bank is not to blame for refusing to permit exchange charges on checks.

This matter, as the older Members will remember, was thrashed out in Congress, and Congress—not by a party vote—specifically gave the Federal Board the power to do the very thing they are doing now. I was one of those who opposed the law and predicted that this very situation would arise. But gentlemen on both sides of the aisle did not agree with me at that time. Now, instead of criticizing the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks, what the gentleman from Nebraska should do is to introduce a bill to amend the law so that the Federal Reserve Board would be denied the right of doing the thing of which he complains.

Now, evidently the gentleman by calling attention to the matter and putting this unsigned letter in the RECORD sought to make political capital. I am sorry he has done that, because no politics has entered into that controversy heretofore. But if the gentleman does want to make it a question of politics, I suggest to him that his party is in power, and instead of standing before the House here he had best go to work on gentlemen who are responsible for legislation on that side, because on their shoulders must fall the blame for the defeat which I and others suffered in the Congress of 1917, when this subject was up, and when the law was put on the statute books which now works great hardship on the State banks.

We lost by only 11 votes on that occasion. You will find that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the Democratic leader, stood with us in our fight to permit the banks to charge a reasonable and fair charge for the services rendered; the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]; the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]; the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]; and other leaders upon this side joined me in an effort to preserve the right of the banks to make a reasonable exchange charge for services actually rendered.

Now, where do we find those responsible on the Republican side? I will take your steering committee—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]; the distinguished Speaker of this House [Mr. GILLETT]; the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a member of the steering committee, now the very able and distinguished chairman of the Committee of the Whole; Mr. MILLER, who has now become the secretary of the Republican National Committee; Mr. PLATT, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency; Mr. RODENBERG, a strong and influential Republican, a Member of the House; Mr. DARROW, a member of the steering committee; Mr. WINSLOW, another member of the steering committee—they are the men who by their influence, vote, and voice at that time denied justice to the banks of this country.

And now, when the natural effect of that law is beginning to operate on the banks, instead of standing up here and calling the attention of the country to it, what my friend from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] should do is to go to work on these gentlemen and get them to change their opinion and permit him to bring in a bill to amend that law. And I am authorized to say that if he will do that the Democrats on this side will give him a majority vote, and we will relieve this inequality and inequitable arrangement that is now oppressing the State banks of the country.

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman will yield, I heard the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska, and I understand his complaint was that the Federal reserve banks, through their examiners, and so forth, went to the State banks and practically gathered up their checks and almost made a run on the State banks.

Mr. WINGO. Not through an examiner.

Mr. BROWNE. Now, is there any law or any ethics to justify the Federal reserve examiners in gathering up the checks of the small State banks and then coming there and presenting them and demanding payment and overwhelming the State banks? That is the main thing that the gentleman is complaining of, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for one minute more in order to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. That is exactly what I want to get rid of, I will say to my friend. That is what I fought for. That is the fight I made when the Federal reserve act was originally written. It was not a partisan question at that time, although if the great Republican leaders whom I mentioned had voted with me and with Mr. GARRETT and with Mr. CRISP and Mr. COLLIER and against Mr. Glass and Mr. PLATT, you would not have this condition. I predicted that you would have this very thing. It is the natural consequence of the authority we gave.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] asks me if it is fair for the Federal reserve banks to gather up the checks of the small State banks in large volume and go in and present them and demand payment and thus embarrass those State banks by presenting them? I say, no; it is not fair; it is an outrage, and I do not care whether it is done by a Democratic official or by a Republican official. But let us quit complaining, because the law is responsible for it, and let us amend the law. If you Republicans who are responsible will bring in a bill to relieve the situation, a majority of the Democrats will support it. Quit abusing the banks, but go to work on your Republican steering committee, a majority of whom voted against the country banks and are responsible for the conditions complained of by the gentleman from Nebraska. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Turkey so long as his services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph, there being no law authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No person drawing the salary of interpreter or student interpreter as above provided shall be allowed any part of the salary appropriated for any secretary of legation or other officer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph. There is nothing in the law authorizing it.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, that is a limitation, I submit, and therefore it is clearly in order.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no law authorizing any student interpreters to draw any salary whatever, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROGERS. The entire subsection beginning on line 16 of page 4 has not, I think, been stricken out, and therefore there is a portion of these paragraphs to which this limitation can properly attach.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that this is not in the form of a limitation.

Mr. ROGERS. But, Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that there can not be a more obvious limitation than one which prevents a single individual from drawing two salaries, which is what this language professes to do? If the Chair is in doubt, I think I can in a moment find the authority on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to have the citations from the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has been recognized.

Mr. ROGERS. I will yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is clearly a limitation, as much so as if it followed the words "Provided, That." If it had in front of it those words, "Provided, That," it would be in the usual form of limitation. But it is just as clearly in the form of limitation as if it had those two introductory words.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on the point of order. This is very plain. I would like to have the attention of the Chair.

Suppose we cut out everything except this part, dropping out "no person," and say "no student interpreters shall be allowed any part of the salary appropriated for somebody else." The only argument here is that there is no such thing as a student interpreter. That is true. But there might be. We have the right to make a provision in anticipation of the fact. We can say that "no lawyer or no doctor employed by this Government shall receive more than $5,000 a year." It would not be an answer to come and say, "There is no doctor to be employed." Somebody might put through a law to make one. If we did not say a thing more than provide that "no student interpreter shall draw anybody else's salary," that would be a perfectly legal proposition, and the rest of it ought to stay in.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Chair will notice that this provision applies not only to the student interpreters but also to the interpreters. I would like to have the Chair, through the Clerk, correct me if I am wrong in my understanding that the first two paragraphs of this section in reference to interpreters were not struck out, so that this would still apply to these two paragraphs.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly. That is settled.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it is as clearly a limitation as if, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] said, the words "Provided, That" were inserted in front of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this, while it is peculiar language, is clearly a limitation upon the salary of the secretary of the legation or other officers. We have made appropriations for the salaries of secretaries, and while this language does not follow that paragraph making appropriations, yet it seems it would have been clearly in order when we made an appropriation "for the Japanese secretary of embassy to Japan, $3,600," to have said that "no part of this salary shall be paid to any interpreter or student interpreter." It is a limitation upon the salary of the secretary to provide that an interpreter or a student interpreter can not get double salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language in lines 14 to 17 is rather peculiar, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] says. It is such language as is usually employed in the form of a limitation, but undoubtedly it is intended to prevent the use of the salary appropriated to any other person being drawn by an interpreter or student interpreter; and hence it can, the Chair thinks, be properly construed as a limitation on the appropriation made for the secretary, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the three words beginning on line 14, "or student interpreters," there being no law authorizing student interpreters.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not proper to make the point of order on the language as suggested by the gentleman at this time, because the Chair has already ruled on the whole paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, a point of order might not be good for the whole paragraph, and yet it could be good to a certain part of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman covers all the language of paragraph 4, and the Chair having already ruled, he does not think the point of order is now well taken. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $48,200.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Clerk be instructed to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERS FOR STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT EMBASSIES.

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Japan, $600.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph, there being no law to authorize it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. There are no student interpreters provided for in the bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, there being no law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the Clerk be authorized to correct the total by striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $1,200.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand the Clerk will correct that total by striking it out.

Mr. WALSH. The Clerk can not correct it by striking it out.

Mr. BLANTON. I move that the Clerk correct it by striking it out.

Mr. WALSH. It is not in order for the Clerk to do it. It is for the committee to strike it out.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to strike out line 24, page 6.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 3, noes 14.

Mr. BLANTON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman. If they want to waste time foolishly, I will help them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present. If they want to kill time, I will help them.

Mr. PORTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R.

11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the bill.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. In case the Chair is not able to be present to-morrow, he designates the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to preside in his absence.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. RUBEY), for 10 days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. TINCHER (at the request of Mr. HOCH), until further notice, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Sunday, January 25, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Anthony Sulik (H. Doc. No. 633); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting amendment to draft of proposed legislation, so as to include Navy nurses in the proposed bill to grant six months' pay to dependents of officers and enlisted men of the Navy (H. Doc. No. 634); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting proposed draft of a bill prohibiting the use of naval aircraft insignia by or on aircraft privately owned or operated; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting further information in connection with desired legislation for the relief of contractors on fixed-price contracts with the Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to amend the provisions of the naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916, in connection with the leasing of real and personal Government property under control of the Secretary and the lending of instruments, etc., to educational institutions; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting proposed draft of a bill empowering the Secretary of the Navy to secure options on land to be purchased for naval purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to provide for payment of damages by civilian employees of the Naval Establishment to private property; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting proposed draft of a bill providing for the purchase of additional land adjoining the Naval Academy grounds; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to provide for the disposition of certain lands commandeered for the Navy Department during the war but not now needed for naval purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

10. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damage to private property arising from collision with naval vessels; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

11. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to prevent the exportation of helium, the noninflammable gas for inflatable aircraft; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

12. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the War Department for the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 635); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

13. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for "Improvement and care of public grounds," fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 636); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

14. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report as to the rents received from properties located on sites of proposed public buildings purchased by the United States Government in this city; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

15. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of legislation to exchange portions of site occupied by naval radio station, South San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

16. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting proposed draft of a bill making available certain appropriations made in the naval act of July 1, 1918, for the purchase of lands for aviation purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 584), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 12031) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended by section 7 of the act entitled "An act to create a commerce court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 12032) to provide for the segregation and care of men in the United States Army afflicted with mental and nervous maladies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin (by request): A bill (H. R. 12033) providing that Indians of the United States may legally assemble in general council and providing for a general election among the Indian tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 12034) to encourage stock raising and agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 12035) to provide a means of reimbursement for owners of property appropriated by the United States under the provisions of section 6911a of the statutes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 12036) for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 12037) to prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws by international or interstate transmission of bets and betting odds on horse races and other contests; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12038) authorizing badges of merit to be given soldiers, sailors, and marines and their next of kin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 12039) to authorize the coinage of a Roosevelt 2½-cent coin; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 12040) to provide for the payment of six months' pay to widows, children, or other designated dependent relatives of any officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 12041) defining criminal anarchy, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POU: A bill (H. R. 12042) to amend section 5334 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 12043) to amend section 13 of article 8 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the receipt on board a vessel of the Navy of goods, merchandise, or treasure for freight or safe-keeping; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 12044) to accept the cession by the State of California of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Yosemite National Park, Sequoia National Park, and General Grant National Park, respectively, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. COADY: A bill (H. R. 12045) to provide for the conveyance of lots on the low grounds of Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GOOD: A bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. KING: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 282) to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln on its original site; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 12047) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Hagy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12048) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Lime; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12049) granting a pension to Henry Puder; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 12050) granting a pension to Rachel E. Edwards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE: A bill (H. R. 12051) granting an increase of pension to Anna Eschbach; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12052) granting an increase of pension to Dianah Jacobs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 12053) granting a pension to Thomas L. Harris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDY of Texas: A bill (H. R. 12054) to reimburse H. A. Swink for loss of cattle sustained by him by the negligent dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12055) to reimburse S. G. Ward for loss of cattle sustained by him by the negligent dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLER: A bill (H. R. 12056) granting an increase of pension to Rosalia Reiner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 12057) for the relief of J. C. Maxfield; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 12058) granting a pension to Ellen S. Vestile; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUFKIN: A bill (H. R. 12059) granting an increase of pension to Archie M. Leighton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 12060) granting a pension to George H. Spang; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12061) granting a pension to Mary A. McClelland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12062) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Shepherd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 12063) granting an increase of pension to William Gross; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12064) granting an increase of pension to Martha Wallace; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12065) granting an increase of pension to William B. Cummins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12066) granting an increase of pension to William Allen; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12067) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Woods; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12068) granting a pension to Charles R. Burries; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12069) granting a pension to James M. Caldwell; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12070) granting a pension to David M. Bates; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12071) granting a pension to Bose Cox; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12072) granting a pension to Lafayette McFarland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 12073) granting a pension to Susan Fackler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12074) granting a pension to Ella Williamson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12075) granting a pension to Sarah Isabell Lowe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12076) granting a pension to William Apgar; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1090. By Mr. CAREW: Petition of Herman M. Biggs, M. D., State commissioner of health of the State of New York, urging Congress to continue the appropriation for the control of venereal diseases throughout the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1091. By Mr. GOLDFOGLE: Petition of the United Restaurant Owners of Greater New York, protesting against the treatment of the Jews of the Ukraine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1092. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of sundry presidents of life insurance companies of Maryland, urging speedy adoption of certain provisions in the Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1093. Also, petition of the Associate Congregational Church, of Baltimore, Md., urging certain legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1094. Also, petition of Gertrude E. Tucker, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against Senate bill 3317 and House bill 11430; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1095. Also, petition of the Hess Steel Corporation, of Baltimore, Md., relative to certain legislation now pending; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1096. Also, petition of the Bernheimer Bros., merchants of Baltimore, Md., urging certain legislation now pending; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1097. Also, petition of member of Maryland National Guard of Baltimore, favoring a citizen soldiery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1098. Also, petition of H. R. Appel, of Baltimore, Md., urging retention of railroads under Government control for a period of two years; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1099. Also, petition of Board of Trade of Baltimore, Md., urging amendment of Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1100. Also, petition of H. F. Willkie, protesting against peacetime sedition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1101. Also, petition of L. P. Dieterich, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against sedition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1102. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of the Brooklyn Lodge, No. 22, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Brooklyn, N. Y., urging certain legislation in regard to radicals; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1103. Also, petition of the United Restaurant Owners of Greater New York, protesting against the treatment of the Jews in the Ukraine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1104. By Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey: Petition of the Orange (N. J.) Lodge of Elks, for the banishment and otherwise drastic punishment of members of the I. W. W. and kindred organizations, and for the publication of foreign newspapers in the United States only with English translation in parallel columns; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1105. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the United Restaurant Owners Association of Greater New York, protesting against treatment of Jews in the Ukraine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1106. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Haines, Jones & Cadbury Co., of San Francisco, Calif., and L. H. Lopes, of Watsonville, Calif., indorsing the Madden bill for 1-cent postage in cities, towns, and rural districts; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1107. Also, petition of Sidney McVan Wyck, attorney, of San Francisco, Calif., indorsing Senate bill 3002; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1108. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of J. W. Vandenbrock, secretary Auxiliary Branch Henry County, Ohio, protesting against the rivers and harbor bill (H. R. 11892); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1109. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of employees and personnel of the Boston Navy Yard, urging the assignment of more new construction authorized in the naval program for the Boston Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1110. Also, petition of General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, protesting against the passage of House bill 4871, regarding the importation of lobsters into the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1111. By Mr. VARE: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade on railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1112. Also, petition of American Electrochemical Society of Philadelphia, asking adequate provision for Chemical Warfare Service in the Army program; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 25, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, look down from Thy throne of grace with kindly eyes and an approving heart upon us as we thus assemble within this historic Chamber to pay a tribute of love and respect to two men who by dint of their own efforts, inspired of Thee, left a deep impression upon the hearts of their countrymen and wrote in characters of gold a history upon their State and Nation. Long may their memories live in our hearts and on the pages of history, that they may be an example to us and to those who shall come after us; and we will ascribe all praise to Thee.

Comfort us, their colleagues and friends, their stricken families, with the truth that life is immortal, and sometime, somewhere, we and they shall meet again in a realm where love ties shall never again be severed.

When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills,
And the sunshine warm and tender
Falls in kisses on the rills,
We may read love's shining letter
In the rainbow of the spray;
We shall know each other better
When the mists have cleared away.
We shall know as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning,
When the mists have cleared away.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be deferred until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be deferred until to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RAGSDALE, OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first special order of the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That there shall be a session of the House on Sunday, January 25, 1920, for memorial services on the life, character, and public services of Hon. J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, deceased.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] will please take the chair.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 446.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, late a Member of this House from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, Messrs. WHALEY, NICHOLLS of South Carolina, and STOLL are detained and absent on account of illness. I therefore ask unanimous consent that they, as well as any other Members who are unavoidably detained, may have leave to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that his colleagues, Messrs. WHALEY, NICHOLLS of South Carolina, and STOLL, be granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, from time to time we are called upon to pause in our work here and set aside a day to pay tribute and respect to a deceased colleague. It is a time-honored and beautiful custom and one that should be always observed. With each recurring service we are all reminded of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death.

J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, of Florence, S. C., was serving his fourth term in Congress as the Representative from the sixth South Carolina district when he died in Washington on the 23d day of July, 1919. From his early manhood he always took a lively and active interest in public and political affairs, and soon after his admission to the bar of South Carolina, in 1898, he started his political career. He represented his county as State senator, and he soon gained a State-wide reputation by his work there. He was many times a delegate from his county to the State conventions, and one of the most dramatic incidents of his political carreer occurred at the South Carolina State convention of 1912 when the question of the indorsement of a candidate for President and instructing the delegates to the national convention came up. At that convention a resolution was offered instructing the delegates to the national convention to vote for Gov. Woodrow Wilson as the candidate for President.

Immediately a resolution was offered against instructing for any candidate, and there was a bitter fight. Before either of these resolutions could come to a vote a substitute was offered for instruction, and this substitute was defeated by a vote of 218 to 122. The resolution against instructing for any candidate was then adopted by a vote of 178 to 162. Notwithstanding this action on the part of the convention, WILLARD RAGSDALE obtained the floor, and after an eloquent and ringing speech pleading that some affirmative action be taken expressing the choice of the convention for a presidential candidate he presented another resolution indorsing the candidacy of Woodrow Wilson for the Democratic nomination and instructing the delegates to vote for him as a unit. The convention was held spellbound by the eloquent and forceful presentation of his views and the effect of his speech was electrical; but the resolution was ruled out on a point of order, and then, in the language of a newspaper report of the convention, "pandemonium reigned for a few minutes." RAGSDALE, with his energy and aggressiveness and sticktoitiveness would not give up his fight, but seeing his opportunity at once offered another resolution indorsing Gov. Wilson without instructions, shouting at the time, "They can't quibble over that." This resolution was carried and RAGSDALE had won his fight for Wilson—a fight that is memorable to those who were present at that convention.

He was elected to Congress in 1912 and served his people faithfully and well, and especially during the burdensome days of the Great War. So well did he serve them during those trying times that he was renominated and reelected without any opposition whatsoever. While he was a party man, he was not a partisan. He always wanted to be in accord with his party and party associates and vote with them, but at the same time, if his judgment was otherwise, he was independent enough and man enough to vote his own honest convictions, even if that vote was not in accord with his party associates. He was an able lawyer, a successful business man, a fearless fighter, big-hearted, whole-souled, sociable, companionable, and he would do anything in his power for his friends. The high esteem and affectionate regard in which he was held by his people could not have been better shown than upon the day of his funeral, when all business was suspended and a great throng congregated at the overflowing church and crowded cemetery to pay a last tribute of respect and to do honor to their able and distinguished citizen and their friend.

Mr. MANN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of regret, and also of pleasure, that I stand before you this morning and in my feeble way say a few words in memory of our friend whom the Grim Reaper cut down in the very prime of his life. I regret that it was not my honor to serve in your distinguished body with the late J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, but it was my pleasure to know him, and to know him well and intimately from the days of my boyhood to the day of his death, and it was my privilege to know that at all times he was my friend.

Mr. RAGSDALE was a man of great capacity, wonderful ability, indomitable energy and courage, and honorable ambition. He was close to the people, served well and faithfully his county, his district, his State, and his country while here as their representative in Congress. I do not attribute greatness to our departed friend, but usefulness and a common importance belonging to a useful life. He was one of the biggest-hearted men that I have ever known, and his kind deeds were manifold. It did not matter who it was that solicited his aid, it was always given and given gladly and freely. Many a young man in South Carolina who stands to-day as a living monument to his memory owes his start in life to the benefactions of J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, making true the old Latin proverb, "Who doeth a kindness to a good man doth a greater to himself." I might go on and extol his virtues, but lack of time will not permit. I have said that he was honest, faithful, brave, warm-hearted, true, and ever ready to serve. What more can be said of any man? His life was not lived in vain.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, death has reaped a large harvest among the Democrats of the House of the Sixty-sixth Congress—RAGSDALE of South Carolina, BURNETT of Alabama, VAN DYKE of Minnesota, THOMPSON of Oklahoma, WATSON of Virginia, HELM of Kentucky, and SULZER of Alaska—men all in their prime.

J. WILLARD RAGSDALE of South Carolina, one of the most robust men in the House, was taken in the twinkling of an eye. Anyone called upon to pick a dozen Members destined for long life would have placed Mr. RAGSDALE in the list. His sudden death in the very flower of his years teaches us once more what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue. He was not only robust physically but robust mentally. No man appeared to enjoy life more than Mr. RAGSDALE. He was intense in everything. His opinions on any subject with which his exceeedingly active mind concerned itself were positive.

There was in him no hesitancy in taking a position and in maintaining it when taken. Nobody ever had to go on a voyage of discovery to ascertain where he stood. He took orders from nobody. He did his own thinking, spoke out in meeting, and was unafraid. He was both a lawyer and a business man—successful beyond the average in two fields of human endeavor. He was a great practitioner of traditional southern hospitality and perhaps entertained more than any other Member of the House. No man enjoyed more than he to have his friends about his board.

I was fond of him and he was fond of me. While firm in his opinions, vehement in manner, bold in utterance, he was amenable to suggestions from men he deemed his friends. He conferred freely and frequently with me, and I am certain that he received suggestions from me in the kindliest feeling.

Sometimes he accepted them in whole or in part—sometimes he rejected them in toto. In turn he made many suggestions to me—some important and of great value.

He was not a frequent debater, but was always clear and forcible and honest in the expression of his views. At the time of his death he was one of the rising men in the House, apparently destined for a long and high career.

I was appointed by the Speaker to attend his burial at Florence, S. C. It was a lovely day in early summer. The little city was in mourning. A large concourse of people, old and young, high and humble, white and black, attended. I have never seen more evidences of love and sorrow exhibited at any time or place. He seemed to be universally beloved.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, WILLARD RAGSDALE was my neighbor. He was born in the county adjoining the one in which I have lived all through my manhood. Subsequently the county in which he was born was divided, and he fell in that part which did not adjoin mine; but his people and the traditions of his ancestry, a long and honorable line, have been wrought into the very woof of the people of my territory and of the district which I have the honor to represent. His characteristics, which have been very accurately referred to by the speaker who preceded me [Mr. CLARK of Missouri], were those which descended to him from the Virginia cavaliers, who constituted his ancestry on both sides.

The Ragsdales of the cavaliers who settled Virginia came to South Carolina during the eighteenth century. They were always distinguished for business capacity; for interest in public affairs, though not often seeking public office; for a determination of character which had always made them a leading force in the community in which they lived. His mother, a member of the distinguished Byrd family, was of the same family as the noted Byrd of Virginia, the wit and poet who died about the middle of the eighteenth century, who was the founder of the city of Richmond and the author of the "Westover" manuscript. They were a type of people not of the dominating and aggressive character of the Ragsdales, but nevertheless Virginia cavaliers who knew how to lead and who did lead in all the history of the great section of the country in which they lived.

It was my pleasure to know and frequently to be associated with Mr. RAGSDALE's distinguished grandfather, who for 20 years was a State senator in South Carolina, and who, up until 1890, was possibly the most influential senator from the Pee Dee section of South Carolina. From that side of the house Mr. RAGSDALE acquired his political acumen, which was so noted for the 23 years of his public life. I was first intimately associated with him when he came to the legislature in 1898. I came to know him not only as a politician but as a friend whose friendship could not be severed except by injustice or by improper dealing with him.

Politically he was one of the most aggressive men in South Carolina, a State in which politics is rather aggressive, but at the same time he was not only aggressive, and was frequently called impetuous, but he was one of the most alert and keen-sighted of politicians. What was frequently termed impulsiveness on his part, and was sometimes considered imprudent impulsiveness, was not action without principle, without consideration. The distinguishing characteristic of WILLARD RAGSDALE was that he could see and analyze a situation more quickly than ninety men out of a hundred, and reach a conclusion, which in a large majority of cases would be a sound conclusion, while many men were still considering, but when a conclusion was reached there was absolutely no swerving him from retaining the position in which that conclusion placed him. Consequently he became a leader of the men of his generation.

He was younger than I. I had been in the legislature some time when he came there, but that characteristic was one which always attracted him to me, and our associations for twenty-odd years have been of the closest. I can say that as a politician he was as true to his friends in politics as their principles would allow him to be, and he never deserted a man unless he was given just cause to do so.

I have come in contact with him a great deal, practicing for 30 years, as I have, at the same bars with him, he having begun, however, 10 years after I did. I learned to know him there, and what better place is there to find out whether a man is a gentleman than in the hot contests in the courthouse where great stakes are being fought for? He was not a plodding lawyer. His whole temperament was action. He could not rely upon the technicalities of construction.

It was the law of common sense, upon which the common law was based, upon which he acted, and in a majority of instances that is the best basis upon which to act. While he did not deal with the technique of the law, he threw his personality and all of the wonderful magnetism of his enthusiasm into a case in a way that made him almost irresistible before a jury of his countrymen, with whom he was always in close touch, because he was eminently a man of the people. He knew them and he stood for their best interest as he saw it. Trained at a bar that was overshadowed until his advent by some of the most eminent lawyers in South Carolina—yea, in the South—he soon came to measure up with them when it came to the contests in court, and he has left an impress upon the bar and upon the legal history of the Peedee country of South Carolina which can not be eradicated. His conclusions on questions of law and justice were reached very quickly and were reached apparently, frequently, by inspiration, though it was not that, but was a process of quick thinking out of a situation, and those conclusions were in a large majority of instances justified by the decisions of the courts of the land.

As a business man, in addition to his characteristics as a lawyer, Mr. RAGSDALE became a banker of standing and a successful financier of the territory in which he lived. Coming into public life and beginning his career at a time when the country in which he lived was depressed beyond anything conceivable at this day, at a time when money was almost impossible of acquisition, he embarked upon the career of banking within a few years, with the desire to build up his community by furnishing the capital so absolutely necessary to the development of the limitless resources of that country. He entered into competition with other bankers who had been for a lifetime in the business, and he left when he died an institution that stands as one of the assets of the community, and as one of the landmarks of the financial acumen of that country, one of the institutions which had enabled his city to become, as undoubtedly it is, the leading city of this eastern section of South Carolina.

I want to say just one word about Mr. RAGSDALE as a friend. Many of the members of this House knew his impulsive disposition, his affectionate disposition to those who enlisted his assistance, his demand for proper treatment by all, and yet his overflowing love for man as man, if that man were acting as the gentleman that he was brought up to consider himself. He could engage in any kind of a bout, in any kind of a controversy. He was a sportsman from the heart. He inherited it from his distinguished ancestry on both sides. He could give and take, but a mean thing done to him was something that would become ineradicable in his heart, because he would not tolerate a man who would do a mean thing to him or to anyone in whom he was interested. On the other hand, there is no man in this House or anywhere else with whom I have come in contact whose affection was more persistent, whose self-sacrifice was more readily given, whose aid was more readily extended for anyone whom he could call his friend, than Mr. RAGSDALE.

His taking away was one of the wrenches of my public life. I could hardly conceive that he was gone, and that leads me to close by saying that we are here to-day paying a last tribute to two of our comrades who went without warning, who went in the twinkling of an eye, who it seems to me just simply stepped through the invisible barrier that stands between us and an unknown eternity, leaving us remembering their virtues, their powers, their lovable qualities, and yet separated from them by this invisible barrier, wholly without knowing when it may come our time to step through the same barrier and be separated from our fellows and reunited with them.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, one of the sad duties devolving upon us as Members of Congress is to note the deaths of those whom we have learned to love and to respect here as our colleagues.

Our life is but a dream;
Our time, as a stream
Glides swiftly away,
And the fugitive moment
Refuses to stay.

The arrow is flown,
The moments are gone;
The millennial year
Rushes on to our view,
And eternity is here.

I have been particularly grieved, as I am sure the membership generally have been, at the departure of some of those whom we esteemed so highly. Mr. RAGSDALE had a strong physique, and he came here possessed of wonderful ability and of a geniality that soon won for him the friendship and admiration of his colleagues. I knew him quite well. I admired him in many respects, and when the sad news came of his taking off so suddenly it was to me a great shock as it was to the membership of this body. I join with you this morning, my colleagues of the great State of South Carolina and those of the other great States of our splendid Union, in paying tribute to his worth as a man and as a Representative of the people.

He was a true and genuine southerner. He believed in the great State that he in part represented. He believed also in the great Republic which he loved to serve here in Congress; and as we have become acquainted with men of that character and served here with them, their taking off is a great and irreparable loss. The greatest benefit that has come to me personally as a Member of the House in the more than eight years I have been here has been the acquaintance of the men with whom I have served. I believe that what little good I have been able to accomplish here has been achieved largely through the friendship of my associates, and I shall always esteem it a great honor and privilege to have served with men of the character and worth of our late colleague, Mr. RAGSDALE.

This morning we meet to pay tribute to the memory of another splendid, worthy Representative of the great South, Congressman BURNETT. I also knew him well. I had talked with him on many occasions. Our offices in the House Office Building were near each other.

Mr. BURNETT was a real gentleman and a real Representative, and to-day as we meet to pay tribute to his memory we deeply mourn his loss. This great Republic of ours is made up of men of different feelings, different aspects, different traits; but as we come together and meet here to work for the greatness and glory of our country I have found but little difference in our common desire to serve the Nation as well as the section from which we come. Those of us who have had the privilege of associating with men like Mr. BURNETT are proud that we have been able to serve with them. Their going is our loss. The American people lose greatly when such men as these go from public life, but their example encourages us who remain to renew our obligations and to be more faithful in the discharge of our public duties.

In former times the minds of the Members of this body were directed to questions that are no longer paramount and no longer of great interest. In former days men were bitter, but as the years have healed the wounds caused by the differences of the past we are all striving to be the better and the more worthy Representatives. I know that this Congress has not had in it abler or better or truer friends of this great Republic than the men whom we meet here to honor to-day, and I wish that I were able to express in words what I feel and what I am sure the Members of this House feel toward these two gallant souls whose lives have gone out forever.

Humbly I pay tribute to the memory of our colleagues who have gone, and I desire to record for the benefit of posterity and of the loved ones left behind by these two gallant men my appreciation of their personal worth and of the value of their services to their States and to the Republic.

And when earth's last picture is painted
And the tubes are twisted and dried;
And the oldest colors have faded,
And the youngest critics have died,
We shall rest, and faith we shall need it.
Lie down for an aeon or two,
'Till the Master of all good painters
Shall set us to work anew.
And those who were good shall be happy;
They shall sit in a golden chair,
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas
With brushes of camel's hair;
They shall have real saints to draw from,
Magdalene, Peter, and Paul,
They shall paint for an age at a sitting
And never get tired at all;
And only the Master shall praise us,
And only the Master shall blame,
And no one shall work for money,
And no one shall work for fame,
But each for the joy of the doing,
And each in his separate star,
Shall paint the thing as he sees it,
For the God of things as they are.

Mr. STOLL. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Hon. J. WILLARD RAGSDALE South Carolina lost a distinguished son and the Nation was deprived of the services of a conscientious and courageous public servant. He loved his native State devotedly, was proud of her achievements in the past, worked incessantly for her development, and hoped for her great things in the future. Likewise he loved the Nation, and his earnest desire was that our Government should indeed be a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people. From early manhood he was keenly interested in all public matters, and soon after being admitted to the bar he entered politics and served with distinguished ability his county in the State senate. As a lawyer he was very aggressive and as an advocate in the courts of South Carolina he had few equals and won many verdicts by his bold and eloquent pleas to the jury. His activities were not confined to his law practice or public affairs of the State and Nation, but he was also a progressive and successful business man, specializing in banking.

Mr. RAGSDALE represented the sixth congressional district of South Carolina for seven years, having just begun the service of his fourth term when the summons came that called him from his earthly labors. He was very popular in his district and his popularity grew with his service. He was an unusually forcible campaign debater and those who had the temerity to oppose him for his seat in Congress found in him an opponent of force.

One of Mr. RAGSDALE's most marked characteristics was his zeal for his friends. He never turned a deaf ear to those who sought his assistance and quite frequently he sought them and volunteered his services. Open and frank in manner, bighearted and courteous, he numbered his friends by the hundreds. He lived for his family, his friends, and his country, and when he died thousands mourned.

It was my privilege and pleasure to know Mr. RAGSDALE for about 15 years. Our relations were always pleasant and cordial. He was my friend, and I personally mourn his untimely death. His sudden and unexpected passing reminds us that death is but the gate between the lesser and greater life; that toward it all humanity travels, and through it we all must pass, and as we think on his life and character we recall the closing lines of Thanatopsis:

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, late a Member of this House from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. BLACKMON assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who speak or desire to print their remarks on the life, character, and public services of the late Representative BURNETT may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. ALMON, is absent on important business, and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed five days after his return within which to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this hour has been set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the services of JOHN LAWSON BURNETT of Alabama. He was truly a self-made man. He was one of the ablest and best members of Congress ever sent from our great State of Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, when the War between the States ended JOHN BURNETT was only 11 years old. He was a poor boy and the eldest son of a widowed mother. It fell mainly to his lot to support his mother and the younger children. In spite of the hardships and privations that the fortunes of war had placed in his way, this brave and determined youth succeeded. In the daytime he worked in the field and in coal mines in order to provide for those dependent upon him, and at night he studied that he might obtain an education. Mr. Speaker, he told me that it was a happy day in his young life when, by his industry and enterprise, he was enabled to attend the common schools of Cherokee County. He was educated in the common schools of his native county and in the Wesleyan Institute at Cave Springs, Ga. He studied law at Vanderbilt University, and when 22 years of age he was admitted to the practice of the law by the circuit court of his home county in Alabama. It was not long from that day until he was regarded as one of the very best young lawyers in his section, and at the time he was elected to Congress he had achieved the distinction of being one of the ablest and most successful lawyers in the State.

Mr. Speaker, the boy surrounded by hardships and privations can find inspiration and encouragement in the brilliant achievements told in the story of the life of JOHN BURNETT. The poor boy battling with the handicaps and hindrances of poverty will find help in the story of his successful and useful life.

When a very young lawyer he had developed into an attractive speaker, an able and convincing advocate. Through his open, frank, and friendly manner, he soon became exceedingly popular with the people. When 30 years old, he was elected a member of the lower House of the Alabama Legislature and two years later was elected to the State Senate. He made a splendid record in both branches of the Alabama Legislature.

He was remarkably well equipped with the attributes of mind and heart necessary to make him an effective and useful public servant. He was able and earnest in every cause that he espoused.

Mr. Speaker, he came here as a Representative in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and for a little more than 20 years he was the able and honored representative of the people of the seventh Alabama district. The good people of that district have in the past honored other distinguished sons with a seat in this body, but never in all its history has the district sent here a man more esteemed and loved by the rank and file of its people. He was democratic in his habits and manner. He believed in the doctrine of the Democratic Party and sincerely believed that the affairs of the Government could be more wisely administered by the great party to which he gave allegiance. He was an ardent Democrat, a strict and faithful party man. All during his life, in season and out, he championed the cause of the Democratic Party. He was a man of deep convictions and of strong personality, and he was truly a statesman in a high and useful sense. At times he was an aggressive, intense antagonist, but always as generous and forgiving in the aftermath of a bitter debate as he was brave and fearless in the conflict. He was a man of studious habits and of tremendous energy.

Throughout his long service here he was known as an active, hard-working member. He believed in the gospel of work as did Gen. Pettus, of Alabama. On one occasion some one asked Gen. Pettus, then 80 years of age, when he was going to quit work, and the grand old man replied, "A man should never quit work. A few years of idleness and he loses his health. A few years of idleness and his mind is gone. It takes activity to keep the mind alert and the body strong." JOHN BURNETT was an indefatigable worker. He was an enthusiastic disciple of the doctrine announced by Gen. Pettus. He ate no idle bread. From the time he entered Congress to his death he was truly a studious and hard-working Congressman.

Mr. Speaker, ours is a representative form of government, the wisest and best form of government ever devised by the genius of man, and when a man is elected to represent his people in this great lawmaking body it is his duty to study the questions that concern his district and the country and to strive to do that which will redound to the benefit of his people and the good of his country. And no higher expression of confidence and affectionate regard can come to a Member in his service here than that which the people themselves give through their votes of approval in each succeeding election. For 20 years the people of the seventh district of Alabama commissioned JOHN BURNETT to represent them in the Congress of the United States. They delighted to honor him. In 11 congressional elections they expressed with their votes their appreciation and love for him and at the time of his death he was strong in the esteem and affections of his people.

Mr. Speaker, it can be truly said of him that he loved and served his fellow man. He sprung from the ranks of a great common people and was himself a man of the people. He was the friend of the common man in the common walks of life. In his long service here he rendered distinct and signal service to his State and Nation.

He was one of the very first men in Congress to call attention to the evil and danger of allowing indiscriminate and unfit foreigners to be landed upon the shores of America, and as chairman of the Committee on Immigration he aroused the people of the Nation to the importance of keeping undesirable and dangerous foreigners out of our country. Year in and year out he stood here guarding, to the day of his death, American ideals and institutions against the influx of criminal hordes from foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, he was a man of superb intellect and fluent speech, and whether in debate in this forum or out on the hustings he was a foeman worthy of any man's steel.

He had the courage of his convictions and was absolutely fearless in the advocacy of any cause that he espoused. He was a painstaking and conscientious public servant, and all who knew him know that he performed his duty as God gave him the light to see it.

JOHN BURNETT was blessed with a bright and cheerful disposition, pleasing and amiable to a remarkable degree. All in all, he was rich in the attributes of a noble character.

When 32 years of age he was married to Miss Bessie Reeder, of Cleveland, Tenn.

His home life was ideal. He was fortunate in marrying one of the noblest and best women of his day. She was indeed his inspiration and helpful companion.

She sympathized with him and assisted him in his great life's work. He was devoted to her and their married life was a beautiful and happy life. He had only one son, a splendid and manly young man, and he was the idol of his good father's heart.

Mr. Speaker, just a few months ago the distinguished man whose death we mourn to-day was an active and influential Member of this body. Just a little while ago he was participating in the debates, answering the roll calls, and serving as we are now in the great Congress of the United States. But he has made his last speech, answered his last roll call, and ended his career of useful service here. He has gone the way that we must all one day go; but he is not dead. He has but entered into the joys of the higher life, the life that awaits the faithful at the end of the earthly road. I believe that all is well with his soul. He was a good citizen, an able and faithful public servant. He loved his State and contributed to its marvelous growth and development, and he served his country faithfully and well. His death was a sad blow to his loving wife and son and to his friends and people, and in his taking off the State and country have sustained a great loss.

Mr. McDUFFIE assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, JOHN L. BURNETT was my personal and political friend. As such I will cherish his memory so long as life lasts. He was a capable, clear-headed, industrious Member. He was a great chairman of two important committees. He wrought honestly, successfully, and patriotically for his country and his countrymen. He was one of the crack debaters in the House. He was exceedingly tenacious of his opinions. Above all, he was unafraid. His style of speaking was terse, luminous, nervous. His voice had a clarion quality and reached every nook and cranny of this great Hall. He injected just enough of wit, humor, and sarcasm into his speeches to render them pleasant to the ear.

He studied his subjects thoroughly and was master of the facts on any theme which he chose to discuss. He never had a sleepy audience.

Those who have practiced public speaking to any considerable extent know that it is more difficult to make an effective short speech than a long one. The correspondent of the London Times who wrote a note to that ancient paper that he was sending a long letter because he had not the time to write a short one was a great philosopher. Mr. BURNETT was particularly happy in short speeches, snappy, pointed, powerful. After listening for 25 years in this Hall to every sort of speech known among men I give it as my critical and solemn opinion that Brother BURNETT delivered the best short speech I ever heard at any time or place. Most people—including many Members—do not realize that the best debating in the House is under the five-minute rule, the study of which rule and practice under it I cheerfully and earnestly commend to the newer Members if they aspire to rank with the powerful debaters in the House. It is well worth their profoundest consideration. BURNETT was a master of this most difficult species of speech making.

In a five-minute speech you can not have an exordium and a peroration. You must grab the idea in the middle and ram into it as much language and thought as possible. I want now to relate a little experience which I had. The other night I concluded to hunt up John C. Calhoun's proposition to have two Presidents of the United States, one North and one South, nothing to be final as a law unless both of them signed it. So I got down Col. Benton's Thirty Years' View, one of the most valuable books ever published in America, and without which no gentleman's library is complete, to hunt up this Calhoun business. Benton talks about everything on the face of the earth in that book. I got to nibbling at it, and kept on until I ran into a chapter that I had forgotten he ever wrote—about the hour rule in the House. He denounced that as one of the most outrageous things ever committed in a free country. The majority of the Senate took the same view of it.

There is not a man in the House who would vote to repeal the hour rule. If we did we would never accomplish anything. Yet there was that great statesman, the greatest statesman the western country ever had, in conjunction with a majority of the Senate, denouncing it as a positive curb on free speech and free thought in this country. The history of that hour rule is very brief. When Henry Clay broke up with John Tyler he was not a political boss; he was a political czar. He would get a Whig bill through the Senate and they would send it here to the House, and Henry A. Wise, who had the most astounding vocabulary of all the children of men, with two or three others to help him, would kill Clay's bill—talk it to death. Clay was one of the most imperious of mortals, and he got very tired of that. He came over here to the House, where he did not belong at all, and got the House to adopt the hour rule, simply to put a bit in the mouth of Henry A. Wise, but when he went over to the Senate, where he did belong, and tried to get them to adopt the rule, they turned up their noses at him and they have been turning up their noses at such a thing ever since.

A few years ago there was a great uproar about cloture in the Senate. Finally they got a cloture rule in the Senate, and it is the most remarkable thing which was ever put into print. When two-thirds of the Senate petition the Vice President to put the question of cloture, he puts it, and then if they adopt it it is put in force, but each Senator, 96 of them, has an hour in which to discuss that same rule, and that amounts to 18 legislative days. I think the five-minute rule is the best rule on the subject of speech making that was ever devised by the wit of man, and there never was a man in this House in my time who knew better how to use it than Mr. BURNETT.

He rendered most valuable service as chairman of two great committees—Immigration and Public Buildings and Grounds—and was one of the most valuable Members of the House.

In private intercourse he was a delightful, cheerful, genial, entertaining companion. He is greatly missed and sincerely mourned by all who knew him.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, it is always more or less painful to reflect upon the life of a departed friend. Yet there is some satisfaction in recalling the memory of past associations when death, which is beyond our control, has taken that friend away. When I speak of JOHN L. BURNETT as a friend, I speak with a candor that emanates direct from the heart. Though somewhat separated in years, our association was always cordial, congenial, and companionable. I have missed his hearty and his whole-souled greeting, and to-day it is difficult for me to realize that JOHN BURNETT is not still one of and among us.

JOHN L. BURNETT was small of stature but big of heart and brain. He had a fondness for children that was genuine and spontaneous. For his fellowman he had the utmost, the kindest, consideration. It was these qualities of the heart that drew men to Mr. BURNETT, as he came in contact with them in the affairs of life. He had a clear, clean, and conscientious intellect. He was courageous, physically, mentally, and in politics.

He honorably served the State in which he was born as a legislator in both houses of that Commonwealth and in the halls of Congress. In the labors which he gave to his State and to the country he was always affable—a quality not to be scorned; he was always industrious—a quality never to be overlooked; and he was above all efficient—a quality always to be admired and respected. For 20 years he served the people of Alabama and the country in the halls of Congress with honor and distinction, gaining and retaining the respect and confidence of those with whom he was associated.

We mourn his loss, Mr. Speaker, but console ourselves with the reflection that his labors have not been in vain. I could say more—I could say much more. I could go into the details of his long and honorable career, but what is the use? His history is made, and he leaves behind him a record of which his family and his friends may well be proud.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, when I came here as a Member of this House for the first time at the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress, among the men I found here who had already demonstrated exceptional ability stood JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, whose passing we mourn to-day. I soon formed his acquaintance and I had not served long in this great body before it was my good fortune to be placed on the same committee with him, where we served together for eight years. This threw me into very close contact and association with Mr. BURNETT and I learned to know him intimately and well. A goodly portion of the time of our service here together we lived in the same hotel, and I was thus permitted to know him well both as legislator and as man. We became close friends, and when the sad news of his departure reached me my heart was saddened to the depths and I felt that I had lost more than a friend.

Mr. Speaker, JOHN BURNETT was as careful and as conscientious a legislator as it has ever been my pleasure to be associated with. He was constant in his attendance on committee meetings, and no question was too great for his alert and active mind to grapple with, nor was any question too small or insignificant for him to give it attention. He was as true and loyal a Democrat as ever graced this Hall, but in legislative matters he was first, last, and all the time an American patriot, who never allowed partisanship to swerve his sound judgment. He loved his country as a loyal son loves his mother, and probably his greatest work upon this floor was his magnificent effort to protect his beloved country from the flood of anarchistic aliens which threatened to engulf us. The greatest tribute we can pay to his memory will be to carry on the great work which he began and partly accomplished, until we shall reach the stage where no anarchist, Bolshevist, I. W. W., or other cattle of that stripe, by whatever name known, will feel at home in America. BURNETT was one hundred per cent American in his every thought, word, and deed, and had no patience with hyphenated Americanism, no matter from what quarter of the globe it hailed.

Mr. BURNETT was not only a hard working, conscientious legislator, but he was a safe counselor and a convincing advocate. He was not known in the House because of his speaking. In fact, he rarely addressed the House, and never did he do so unless he had something of importance to say. But, Mr. Speaker, I remember occasions when this House has been raised to its feet in approval by the convincing power of his logic. Great by virtue of his brain; great by virtue of his industry; great by virtue of his conscience; great by virtue of his patriotism; great by virtue of his honesty; great by virtue of his humanity, Alabama, rich in her numberless great sons, has sent to Congress no nobler soul than JOHN L. BURNETT.

A devoted, loving husband, a tender, affectionate father, an upright citizen, a faithful friend, a loyal patriot, an able legislator, an honest public servant, and "'the noblest work of God"—an honest man—with his head pillowed upon the bosom of his beloved Alabama, "he sleeps well."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to Members on these occasions it is not possible to attempt even a brief review of the useful life of our beloved colleague, the Hon. JOHN LAWSON BURNETT.

In Congress and elsewhere he filled many positions of great trust and responsibility, and his conspicuous service has embalmed his memory in the hearts of a grateful people, not only in his district and native State, but in the Nation at large. His memory is linked for all time with legislation of highest import and nation-wide in scope.

He was essentially a leader, one who accomplished results, and in the attainment of his objectives his record will disclose that he had no standard but honor, no watchword but duty, no purpose but the uplift and betterment of mankind. As citizen, lawyer, representative in both houses of the Alabama Legislature, in the halls of the National Congress, in the home, in the church, in the circle of friendships, he measured up to the ideal standard, and when he fell asleep just before the convening of this Congress in extraordinary session, there ended a physical life well spent and crowned with good works and noble deeds.

If you ask what phase of his life most impressed his friends, I answer—his great love, his keen interest, his warm sympathy for the poor and those in distress. He was proud of his humble birth among the hills of the good old county of Cherokee, and let me ask that some time you read again two remarkable speeches that he made early after he entered Congress. One of them will unfold to you his high devotion to his people—his broad humanity—qualities always present and so noticeable in his public and private life; the other will unfold his remarkable ability as a lawyer and his broad vision as a statesman. I quote the introductory of his first speech, made on December 14, 1899, just 10 days after he took the oath of office:

> I come fresh from the hands of the mountaineers of north Alabama, among whom I first saw God's sunlight, among whom I first breathed the pure mountain air, and with it inhaled the very inspiration of liberty itself. Among these people I first learned to hate tyranny and to despise the tyrant, whether it came in the form of some despot himself or that of despotic influence and interests, which step by step sap the lifeblood of freedom and bind her votaries hand and foot.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> In the cabins and in the cottages upon the mountain tops and in the valleys of my native heath lives the yeoman, surrounded by his toil-worn wife and his little flock. God grant that no act or vote of mine may ever add to the burdens which they now bear, and that in every word I utter and every vote I cast, while I stand as their representative upon this floor, I may have no higher motive and no loftier aim than to promote their best interest and alleviate their condition. Then, when I return to my home, I can look them in the face and say of a truth "Thy people are my people, thy country is my country, thy God is my God."

He passed away with the blessed consciousness that he had lived up to this high concept of duty to his constituency. The loss of a friend like this can but serve to deepen the views of life of those of us who remain and make us feel that we will not always be here. It is the great argument for immortality. For we can not believe that the living, loving soul of JOHN BURNETT has ceased to be. We can not believe that all those treasures of mind and heart are squandered in empty air. We will not believe it, and when once we understand the meaning of the spiritual life we see the absolute certainty of eternal life. We need no argument for the persistence of being. To appear for a little time and then vanish away is the outward biography of all men—a circle of smoke that breaks, a bubble on the stream that bursts, a spark put out by a breath. But there is another biography, a deeper and a permanent one, the biography of a soul. Everything that appears vanishes away—that is its fate—the fate of the everlasting hills, as well as of the vapor that caps them.

But that which does not appear is the only reality; it is eternal and passeth not away. So beneath the life of JOHN BURNETT, which has vanished away, there is a vital thing, the spirit. We can not locate it and put a finger on it, and that is why it is permanent. So friendship does not lose by a death like his. It lays up treasures in heaven and leaves the very earth a sacred place, made happy by holy memories. "'The ruins of time build mansions in eternity."

We do not ask to forget; we do not want the so-called consolation which time brings; we would rather that the wound should ever be fresh than that the image of a friend like him should fade. He has simply joined the choir invisible.

> Of those immortal dead who live again
> In minds made better by their presence; live
> In pulses stirred to generosity,
> In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
> For miserable aims that end with self,
> In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
> And with their mild persistence urge man's search
> To vaster issues.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the honorable gentlemen from Alabama who have just spoken have told us of the life and career of Judge BURNETT in his State and here. I only knew him as a Member of this House. I first met Mr. BURNETT early in the year 1913. From the very beginning of our acquaintance a warm friendship sprung up between us. He had learned that my mother was born and reared in north Alabama, and this fact seemed to draw him closer to me. He was a devoted son of his State, loved her people, and was proud of her history. Judge BURNETT was a man of splendid ability, and without the trappings of wealth or aid of a great family name he plunged into the vortex of popular rights and made for himself a name which reached beyond the borders of his State. Among the great and learned he did not claim to be supreme, but among his people, I am told, he was a conquering power and was loved and admired. He rose, so to speak, from obscurity to the heights of renown and died on the crest of popular esteem. His rise was not meteoric, but steady and sure. He reached the sun-clad heights of his ambition and passed away with the illumination undimmed and left his countrymen the record of his splendid life work. He was devoted to his family, his country, his political party, and his district which had so often honored him. He loved his fellow man. For poise of mind, eloquence, and concentration of thought he had few equals in the House. He was always manly and kind in debate and spoke directly to the question at issue.

For two or three sessions Mr. BURNETT and myself boarded at the same hotel in Washington, and with him there I learned much of his inner soul. He was a great lover of children. When you find one, Mr. Speaker, who takes notice of and loves children you can mark him every time as being worthy of your friendship and admiration. One of the joys of Judge BURNETT on winter nights was to congregate the children at the hotel and tell them Alabama and other southern stories of the "Uncle Remus" sort, and teach them to sing old-time songs with him. At these gatherings I often looked on with delight at the gladsome and wondering eyes and faces of these little people as they stood encircled around the knee of Judge BURNETT, who to them was a big man, and they were right. I often thought while looking on how beautiful and loving it was to see a statesman in Congress forget for the time matters of national concern and legislation that he might contribute with his whole soul toward cheering and making happy children assembled about him from many sections of this country. He may be forgotten by some, but these little ones will lovingly remember him through life.

I never saw the Hon. Mr. BURNETT manifest gloominess or become morose, but, on the contrary, in greeting his friends and fellow Members he was always cheerful and buoyant. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if the world was filled with JOHN BURNETTS it would be a happier and grander world within which to live.

When a giant carrying easily the loads of life in the fullness of his strength falls dumb and prostrate on the earth, heart stricken by the darts of death, we, his surviving friends, gather in confused agony around his unbreathing form and unavailing tears spring unbidden to the surface and baptize with sorrow's sacred streams the pale countenances of those who loved him while he lived. How utterly powerless, Mr. Speaker, do we feel in death's mysterious presence.

While acting on the stage of life down in Alabama the grim messenger with the inverted torch appeared and beckoned Mr. BURNETT to depart, and when he passed from this life those who knew him hoped for him, that—

> Somewhere the sun is shining,
> Somewhere the angels wait.
> Somewhere the clouds are drifted
> Close to an open gate.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I received no special invitation to speak to-day, but I would like to add just a word of tribute to the memory of my good friend, for whom these services are held to-day. When I first came to Congress, 13 years ago, I felt in as great need of friends and a kindly word of advice and encouragement as anyone who ever sat in this Chamber. There were a few of the older Members who manifested some interest in me, and I shall never cease to feel indebted to them. Among this limited number who won my lasting gratitude was our dead friend whose life and character we to-day eulogize. And may I say that I have since endeavored, as best I could, to pass on their good deeds by lending a helping hand to the new Member.

I recall that Congressman BURNETT was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and on the subcommittee which included my State in the Sixtieth Congress, my advent here. I was quite anxious to have an item in the omnibus bill for that Congress. Mr. BURNETT heard me patiently and sympathetically and reported favorably on my proposition to the full committee and it was accepted. When the bill was reported to the House, however, my item was not in it. I learned a political adversary from my district came down to Washington and overnight put the skids under my bill. I informed my friend. Then did the shortest man in stature in the House rise in height in my eyes and estimation until he seemed to tower above our old friend Cy Sulloway, of New Hampshire, who was the tallest man in the House, and who too has since passed on. He boldly called to the attention of the Chairman of the committee on this floor the mean trick served me and succeeded in getting my item back in the bill.

From that day on I was a fast friend of JOHN L. BURNETT. As our acquaintance aged my admiration for him grew until I looked upon him as one of my best friends here. I lived at the same hotel with our departed friend for a number of years. I knew him intimately and well. If he had any enemies here I did not know it, nor do I know why he should have, for he was one of the most lovable men I ever knew.

Congressman BURNETT'S activities in immigration legislation made his name almost a household word all over our country and the world. The Burnett Immigration Law is a lasting monument to his memory. He was a ready, forceful debater. Few men could acquit themselves on their feet as well. He was honest, conscientious, square, and fair, and commanded respect and admiration alike on both sides of the aisle. For over 20 years he served his district and country faithfully and well. Suddenly, and with little warning, in the midst of his usefulness, he fell like an autumn leaf, and I doubt not when his soul appeared, naked and alone, before the Great White Throne, that he heard the welcome words from the Just Judge, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, JOHN LAWSON BURNETT and I were intimate friends. We spent many pleasant hours together and I desire to pay tribute to his memory.

He was a high type of American citizenship, believing in the principles which the fathers handed down in institutions in which are centered our happiness, security, and destiny.

His idea of good government was one moralized and spiritualized with the principles of liberty, equality, justice, and opportunity, regulated by righteous law and inspired by a righteous people.

He believed that private virtue and public morality are the essential foundations of good government; and that the future of the republic depends upon the personal and political ideals of the people. He had faith in private virtue, commercial honesty, the energy of law and political honor—faith in their strength to give vitality and length of days to the Nation.

He knew that history teaches that mental power and moral principle must journey forward side by side; that the glory of a nation's life is in its character and manhood; and that the only way to develop civilization on the outside is to develop it on the inside.

He traveled the highway of life a friend of education, an advocate of the higher virtues, an ardent lover of the institutions of his country, never following after false political gods and never turning aside to the eccentric, the abnormal, the low, the base.

Believing in these principles, being inspired by the highest patriotism, he was a leader in the fight to restrict foreign immigration; and he left, as an everlasting legislative and political monument to his memory, the Burnett immigration bill.

Those who heard him can never forget with what intensity and eloquence he pleaded for the passage of that bill, for the protection of the institutions of the Republic against the invasion of aliens whose presence would constitute such a menace to all that we have been taught to revere and hold sacred.

Courage is one of the lordly virtues. Great souls are brave souls. That JOHN BURNETT possessed courage of the highest order no one will deny. He never measured his duty by the applause of the hour. No threatened unpopularity of his views ever caused him to withhold their expression when it was his duty to speak. No "word well smoothen" ever fell from his lips in order that he might curry favor.

Some men can stand erect only when wedged in a crowd. It was not true with him. He was willing to stand alone, supported only by his own approving conscience.

His courage, his ability, his eloquence gave strength to any cause he advocated; and these qualities made him a dangerous antagonist. When he believed that chastisement was merited by an opponent he did not hesitate to administer it, and he knew how to use the lash and make it cut deep.

He was acquainted with the common sorrows of mankind, and so, in joy and grief, he was prepared to enter sympathetically into the conditions surrounding his fellowmen. He had all the primary affections, the noble passions, the sweet emotions that make the true man.

Knowing him as I did, I am confident that he had learned the "Great Lessons" so beautifully phrased by the poet:

> So did I learn
> The first great lessons: mark ye them, my sons,
> Obedience is nobility; and meek
> Humility is glory; self alone
> Is base, and pride is pain; patience is power;
> Beneficence is bliss.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, for a time the BURNETT family and my own lived at the same hotel in Washington, and during this period I improved the opportunity to acquire an intimate knowledge of the softer side of the Congressman's nature. His heart was as gentle as a woman's. His hand was ever open and ready for generous deeds. He loved children and organized a club of little folks, and under his guidance this club had weekly meetings, at which its members sang songs, told stories, gave readings, and rendered programs consisting of a wide variety of literary exercises. These children loved Mr. BURNETT and he loved them. It is a delightful habit of a strong nature like his to unbend now and then, to forget the affairs of state, to revel unselfishly in the innocent pleasures of little people, to teach them, and to train them, as he did, for a useful future. Not one of these tots, now that this man is gone, but will remember the kindly touch of his vanished hand; not one will forget the cheerful sound of his pleasing voice now stilled by death.

The dead statesman was dwarfish in stature, but he had the soul of an eagle and the heart of a lion. He was active on the floor of the House, and instead of avoiding debate he rather courted controversy. In truth he was strong in argument, was a tireless worker and loved a fight. This David with sling and pebbles never shirked an encounter with any Goliath of Gath who challenged him to combat in the forum or on the hustings, and usually the fight terminated as did the one described in I Samuel xvii between the handsome shepherd lad, David, the son of Jesse, and the bulky Philistine measuring 6 cubits and a span in height.

Our friend told me that when he was first elected to Congress he expected to remain here but a short time, yet he was elected 11 times, served for 20 years, and died in harness. He stated also that he never failed to have opposition, and this fact accounted in a large measure for his long service. His combative disposition asserted itself here again. He often affirmed that if he could be elected one time without opposition that he would retire from the House to private life. He looked forward with keen pleasure to the time when he could retire and spend the evening of his days in peace and quietude. Like most of us he was beginning to tire of the lure of political life with its noisy phantoms, its paper crowns, and its tinsel gilt.

JOHN LAWSON BURNETT was born at Cedar Bluff, Cherokee County, Ala., January 20, 1854. He lived, died, and was buried in the great Commonwealth that gave him to the country. And he so lived that Alabama, his mother, thrilled with pride when sorrowing friends placed his sturdy little body to sleep forever in her brave and generous soil. Alabama, glittering jewel of the old South; rich, flashing, glorious gem of the new South! Alabama is the calla lily of the South, a land of orchard and grain, a land of cotton and corn, a land of mines and factories, a land of hazy Indian summers, a land of glorious sunsets—and the moon sails through the blue seas of her glorious nights like a ship of pearl. Alabama, a land of enchantment and variety, here a stately country home, there a big plantation with its broad fat acres laughing forth a harvest of good things. The mocking bird sings until midnight among her purple apple blossoms. Here the tall and fragrant pine, there the cedar, dusk and dim; here the virile oak, there the branching elm; here the stately mountain range, there a lake of silver; here by the roadside a bubbling spring ever holding up its pouting lips to be kissed by the thirsty traveler, there the model farm where

> We hear tinkling in the clover dells,
> The twilight sound of cattle bells.

Alabama has given to the country a thousand patriots and a thousand great men, and she gave to this generation JOHN LAWSON BURNETT, clean, brave, manly, possessed of a chaste honor that felt a stain like a wound, possessed of the unpurchasable graces of life and character, such as sterling honesty, spotless purity of soul and conduct. We need more of the fine audacity of honest deed, more of the homely old integrity of soul such as he had and cultivated.

Mr. BURNETT died suddenly and without warning, but he was prepared for death and did not fear it. This was his creed:

> I do not fear to tread the path that those I love have long since trod,
> I do not fear to pass the gates and stand before the living God.
> In this world's fight I've done my part and God is God, He knows it well.

JOHN LAWSON BURNETT wore the white flower of a blameless life. His conscience was his king. A long good night to this rare spirit.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Congress I was placed upon the Committee on Immigration, of which the late Judge JOHN L. BURNETT was chairman, and during my service on that committee became intimately acquainted with his fine qualities as a man and his marked abilities as a statesman. The passage of the Burnett immigration bill was the crowning achievement of his legislative career, and the most conspicuous accomplishment of his long public service.

The history of that legislation is somewhat unique in the proceedings of Congress. Beginning with the veto by President Cleveland in 1896, for more than 20 years one of the storm centers of congressional debate and action, in party platforms, and in national campaigns was the literacy test as applied to immigration, the principle of which was to make our immigration selective and as finally adopted in the Burnett bill. The final passage over the veto of the President, in 1916, of this bill, which had received the approval and indorsement of both branches of Congress on six separate occasions in a period of 20 years, and halted by the vetoes of three Presidents of the United States, is a striking instance of the triumph of public opinion in America as reflected in the Congress.

The brilliant and effective work of JOHN L. BURNETT in connection with this measure won for him a fame that was national and a reputation that was international. During the consideration of this and other problems assigned to us the committee was often astonished at the complete grasp of every phase of the immigration question shown by Chairman BURNETT, and the scope and exactness of his information relating thereto. In my opinion the final passage of this bill over the last presidential veto was due largely to his fine leadership and superb ability.

Judge BURNETT was a man who attracted in close attachment and esteem those who knew him intimately. He was always frank, open, and aboveboard about everything, courteous and kindly in speech and action. He was a man of courage and independence, and had the fortunate quality of being able to bring all his fine intellectual powers into action instantly upon every question which he chose to champion. This made him a ready and effective debater upon this floor. He enjoyed the respect, esteem, and confidence of the Members on both sides of this Chamber. In his death his State, the Congress, and the country sustained an immeasurable loss.

Shortly before he returned to his home the members of the Committee on Immigration, of which he had been the honored chairman, and upon his retirement from that position, presented him a token of their love and esteem, and in his parting words mingled with tears he left an impression which will never be forgotten by the members of that committee who admired and loved him.

As a friend who has been intimately associated with him I deem it a great privilege to add my humble tribute to his memory, which we all honor and revere.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is a mournful, but nevertheless a tender privilege to speak a few words of eulogy in memory of the admirable character and accomplishments of our late colleague and comrade in service, JOHN L. BURNETT. Knowing as I believe I did the absolute sincerity of the man—his abomination of sham and pretense—any attempt at fulsome praise of his talents or his services on this occasion would be repugnant to my conception of the words he would have us say.

Although Mr. BURNETT had been a conspicuous public man in Alabama for many years, it was not my good fortune to know him intimately until I began my service in the Sixty-fifth Congress. Two of the counties of his old district now are a part of mine, and being my geographical neighbor as well as the dean of the Alabama delegation, when I began my service here I naturally sought and always secured his counsel, advice, and unreserved admonition.

It was not a formal, perfunctory, superior kind of interest he took in me, but genuine, sincere, disinterested, helpful. It was characteristic of the man—a helping hand extended to another who needed it.

I shall not attempt any biographical reference to our departed friend. That duty has been admirably and fully accomplished by my colleagues who have already spoken.

If I should be asked to designate the outstanding characteristic of this man's makeup, the immediate response would be "courage of conviction." He did not rush to a conclusion upon grave public questions. He always wanted to know the facts, he desired to hear the argument, he sought a just and logical conclusion, and when he reached a conclusion convincing to himself he declared it, and fought for it to the end.

He was not only courageous in conviction, but he was preeminently combatative to sustain his conception of the right position. He did not believe in the soft and vacillating methods of attack or defense. He despised ambush warfare. For him the open field and the onslaught direct. He believed in giving hard blows. He knew equally well how to take them.

That was his method on the hustings and his method here. He seemed to glory in drawing the fire of an adversary because he had the consciousness that he could always return it "in full measure and running over."

I heard Speaker CHAMP CLARK once say that he regarded JOHN L. BURNETT as the best "rough and tumble" debator on either side of the House of Representatives.

While the people of his district and State loved and admired our lamented colleague, he did not belong to them alone. He was a servant of a larger constituency—the whole American Republic! He was recognized as the highest authority here on the great problems of immigration and naturalization in his lifetime and now of paramount importance. He stood for the doctrine "America for Americans," and his earnest and invaluable efforts for a decent restriction of undesirable immigration not only have been transcribed into our statutes, but go marching on in the quickened and awakened consciousness of millions of Americans of the menace of the unassimilated mob.

His death was not therefore a local or sectional loss alone, for this Nation suffered a blow when JOHN BURNETT died.

It is no small thing for any man to be elected once to the House of Representatives. It is a position of honor and high responsibility. But when a man comes here for 20 years in succession, despite the enemies he makes in politics, despite the disappointments of opposing ambitions, despite the errors of judgment he may make, and dies in harness still serving his people, that man has achieved a great career. And when coupled to that long tenure is the record of a high position with his colleagues, the unstinted respect and confidence of his political adversaries, and the knowledge of those who survive him that he rendered conspicuous and outstanding service to his country, and who passes away "surrounded by the proud and affectionate solicitude of a great constituency," has indeed left to his family and friends a career to be admired and cherished forever.

Friend, neighbor, comrade, rest well.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I can not refrain from adding my tribute to the memory of our departed friend.

When I first entered Congress Mr. BURNETT was the dean of the Alabama delegation, the senior in point of service among the Alabama members. As was proper, I showed him the respect and confidence due a senior by conferring with him frequently about matters touching our delegation and the interests of our section and State. He gave me his counsel patiently and kindly. I went into his office one morning and playfully hailed him as "Daddy," because of his seniority in service, and he in the same spirit replied by calling me "son." After that he was always to me "Daddy" and I was always to him "son."

I saluted him in that way the last time we met, which was only two days before his death. He had just come through a political campaign. He showed the marks of it. Though apparently in good health there was something about him upon second look that indicated that the strenuous contest through which he had just come had left its impression upon him, had wearied him more than the usual campaign. Two days later I heard of his death.

I went to his funeral. It was attended by thousands. People had come from all over his district, a large and rugged district, to pay him their final respect. Many of those who came were not men who ordinarily attend such occasions. They were chiefly of the people. Many of them were common men, who did not have fine clothes, men with hard hands and with the marks of toil upon them.

The friend of poor and humble men had gone. They stood about with tears in their eyes. It was a tribute such as is rarely paid to the memory of any man. It is such as I would like to have when my time comes to go.

JOHN L. BURNETT was born in Cherokee County, Ala., in the seventh congressional district, which he had the honor to represent in the House for over 20 years. He lived all his life in that district and died there. His district at the end was composed of the counties of Blount, Cherokee, Cullman, Dekalb, Etowah, Marshall, and St. Clair. There is a small city in the district, Gadsden, in which he lived in his later years. In that city there are a few who do not have their origin in that section, and there is occasionally one who was born overseas.

In the county of Cullman there is a small old-time colony of German settlers, of which there remains perhaps three or four hundred who were born overseas. Aside from these the seventh district is composed wholly of what might be called "old-fashioned Americans," that is, people of old British stock, whose ancestors came to this country so long ago that they have lost track of when they came, whose ancestors were the hardy pioneers who carved this Republic out of its original virgin wilderness.

No finer people live in America than those of the seventh congressional district of Alabama. If there are any real Americans, these are they. They are hospitable, intelligent, alert, patriotic, brave, but above all, liberty-loving. They are not strongly partisan in the political sense. Politically, the district may be said to be independent in a large respect. The elections are always close. The opposition is not so much partisan as it is independent. It is a division of opinion, a real opposition.

Representing this people, JOHN L. BURNETT came to Congress for over 20 years, worthily representing them, truly and accurately representing them—representing them at their best, at their noblest, at their highest. That they loved him, that they honored him, was mete. He was one of them, he loved them, he understood them, and no noble impulse they felt but he responded to; his heart beat in answer to their every aspiration.

We honor ourselves in honoring his memory.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my tribute to the memory of Mr. BURNETT. With the rest of you I do not believe that any man can be more deeply stirred than by an appreciative sentiment in honor of a really good man. I have listened to the encomiums that have been paid, and I know that they are not formal—they are every one heartfelt and spontaneous. They are tributes that are gladly paid, and most certainly warranted by the type of life of the man to whom they are paid. Mr. BURNETT was one of the first men who attracted my attention when I came to the House. It was largely by his manner of presenting a case from the floor of the House, his character in debate, that my attention was attracted to him.

Some men, when they arise, will drive you from their position, but Mr. BURNETT was a man who was convincing. He compelled the reason, and although you might not agree with him, you always respected him. However much he was appreciated on the side of the aisle where he always sat, I do not think he was more greatly appreciated there than he was on this side of the aisle. I noticed him in the manner of the presentation of the immigration bill. I was in entire sympathy with his position. There were others on both sides of the aisle very pronounced against his position. At times in the running debate it would appear to me that the opposition was quite powerful and sometimes was winning the debate, but that fear always was allayed whenever Mr. BURNETT took the floor to clean up matters. He was more than an advocate. He was an expositor, and when he spoke he always added information. He was one of the men the House was always glad to see arise to address it.

I want to pay this brief tribute to him as a man who never was found fault with by the Republican side because he was a Democrat. He was always more than a party man. There are those who speak on political lines who always command respect from those who differ with them, because they are beyond mere partisan advocates. Mr. BURNETT was from the sunny South, and yet his impulses and passions were for the whole Nation.

I rise on the Republican side of the aisle to speak my tribute to the memory of this beloved colleague. Attention has been called to that quality of his which was so wonderfully displayed about the hotel where he resided with respect to children. That was the feature about him that seemed to impress me more than anything I have known in the life of this good man. I lived at the hotel with him for quite a while, and Saturday night was always a gala night with the children of the hotel. They were to be found in one room, and Mr. BURNETT was the center of attraction and was directing their activities. From Saturday night to the next Saturday night they were planning, and would go through the dining room and speak to individual members—"Come to our entertainment Saturday night." I want to indorse what one gentleman has said, that if a man, no matter how lofty his position, will always hold himself ready to sympathize with the interests of childhood he will write upon his career the word "great."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, we have met to-day to acknowledge the universal and inevitable sway of death. Since the time sin entered the garden the shadow of death has darkened the pathway of man. It knows no class and favors no clime. It is a penalty that must be paid alike by prince and pauper. To-day the stern monarch invades the hut of the humble and poor to put an end to misery and want and woe; to-morrow he walks with dauntless tread up the stony pathway to the gilded mansion and hushes forever the revelry of the rich. By one stroke he removes the derelict, whose departure disturbs not nor hurts the welfare of humanity, by another he closes a great career at the hour of its highest honor and opportunity.

When JOHN LAWSON BURNETT passed away there came to its end on this earth a life which all the way from childhood to its close was spent in useful toil and noble service. We can not understand why he should be called from among us in the hour of his greatest usefulness when his rare ability and ripe experience are most needed by his fellows. Such a decree of Providence can not be fathomed by human wisdom.

When Mr. BURNETT was a child 4 years old his father died, leaving the widow and three small boys, poor and unaided, to take up the battle of life. In early boyhood Mr. BURNETT began to contribute to the support of the family. He worked on the farm, and as a miner, and studied at night under the instruction of his mother. She was a woman of education and culture, and began early the cultivation and training of the son, which in large part formed the foundation for his career. When he entered the common schools he divided his time between his work and his educational pursuits.

During this period of trial he was in constant contact with the stern realities of life, developing a common-sense understanding of affairs and an attachment to the plain people. When he had made sufficient progress to enable him to secure a position as teacher he taught and attended school, alternately. Finally, by his own efforts and at his own expense he took a course of law at Vanderbilt University. The habits of industry formed in boyhood characterized his course as a student of law, both before and after his admission to the bar. In the practice of his profession, as before, obstacles encountered were met with a determination and purpose that only brought development and progress. As a lawyer his growth was steady and continual. He achieved no sudden nor unsubstantial successes. Every step forward was reached by patient toil and earnest effort, to be followed always by further progress.

> The heights by some men reached and kept,
> Were not attained in single flight,
> But they while their companions slept
> Were toiling upward in the night.

From the time of his admission to the bar to his election to Congress his growth was without interruption. He was industrious, high-minded, conscientious, and held a high place in the front ranks of the lawyers of his State.

His first political activity was as a member of the House of Representatives of Alabama, in which position he served one term, taking high rank among the members of that body. Some years later he was nominated when not a candidate and elected State senator from his senatorial district. Again, he soon won an enviable place in the highest legislative body of his State, serving with marked credit to himself and to his constitutents. Mr. BURNETT was always modest and unpretentious. He never made the mistake, too common among men, of taking himself too seriously. He seemed never to think of the things he had accomplished, but was always seeking opportunity for some new service. He was ever ready to meet responsibilities that arose, never lacking the courage to follow where duty and conviction pointed the way. He was a brave and stubborn fighter, yet always considerate of others, maintaining a moderation and modesty that commanded admiration.

An incident typical of his character occurred in the convention in which he was first nominated as the candidate of his party for Congress. Several names were before the convention, but he was not a candidate when first presented for the nomination. It was well understood that the nominee would have a stubborn contest that would be hard to win. Mr. BURNETT was a delegate in the convention, and when his name was offered arose immediately and insisted that a stronger man might be found to lead his party. But his protest only served to deepen the impression that he possessed the qualities and attainments essential to successful leadership. He was nominated, and accepted the mandate of his party and won a triumphant victory. He established himself in the confidence of his people in a way that for twenty years made him invincible in a district torn by partisan strife seldom surpassed in any congressional district in the Union. He was a man of strong convictions and without fear in following them. He was not the type of politician to follow the line of least resistance. His sense of duty constituted his guide. Such a man was, of course, bound to meet with opposition, but he soon established a reputation for courage and common honesty which many times commanded the support even of those who did not agree with him.

During all the changing issues and vicissitudes of his 20 years' service in Congress his hold upon the confidence of his constituents was unbroken and the people of the entire State of Alabama regarded him as one of their ablest and most valuable public servants. There had been for years before his death a desire throughout the State that he should become a candidate for governor, but his work in Congress was too important and the need for his service too unceasing for him ever to turn loose.

I have known no Member of the House more suited to service here, no one of deeper devotion to the interests of the masses, no one who possessed in higher degree the courage needed in this body. I shall never forget a conversation had with him when the war resolution was pending. No one knew better than he that the resolution would be adopted and that the feeling and excitement to follow would be productive of great resentment against those who saw fit to oppose the passage of the resolution. But he believed that the honor and welfare of the Nation could best be protected and promoted by declining to enter the horrible conflict, and, so believing, he voted against the passage of the resolution. I voted with the majority of the House, but I have always honored him for his courageous course.

No Member of this House was more loyal than he to the cause of the Allies in the struggle to beat back the invading hordes of the German military machine and save the civilization of the world. Mr. BURNETT measured up to the highest standard in this great body. He was an untiring worker and allowed nothing of importance to escape his painstaking attention. He was one of the ablest debaters who ever sat in this House. He was loyal always to the true principles of his party, but he never allowed partisanship to supplant his patriotism. Few men on either side have ever commanded deeper or more genuine respect among the members of the opposing party. He sought always to find the truth and to serve his country. He was a true representative of all that is best in our national life—the highest type of American patriot.

It was as a member and as chairman of the Committee on Immigration that he rendered his greatest service. For years and years he fought to arouse public opinion to an appreciation of the dangers involved in the admission of millions of foreigners unfitted for American citizenship. A deep student of this subject, he saw with clear vision the wisdom of protecting the Nation against the vast hordes of irresponsibles whose presence among us has proven so great a menace. The dastardly attempt to accomplish his death by a bomb sent him through the mails was in itself a tribute to his patriotic effort to protect the Nation against those who would destroy American institutions. Could he have had his way we should not now be confronted with the difficult task of dealing with the undesirables who have been admitted within our borders. He well foresaw and sought industriously to prevent the disease that others are now undertaking to cure. Real statesman that he was, he grasped the importance of correcting the evils inherent in our national life and preserving an electorate devoted to true Americanism.

He understood that the real danger to the perpetuity of this Republic lies not in the invading army of any possible foreign foe; that our safety depends upon our ability to preserve the sacred principles and ideals upon which our Government was founded, and he knew that these institutions can never be safe, except in the hands of men schooled in our scheme of government and devoted to the principles of liberty regulated by law.

His great work was unfinished, but he won high place in the Nation's history. He has left an impress on legislation and public thought that will last through succeeding years. He served well his party and his country. He devoted his life to the uplift of humanity and the betterment of the world. He was too reverential and unpretentious to parade before men any profession of piety, but if it be true, as I devoutly believe, that we reap as we sow, rich, indeed, must be his eternal reward! A good father, a devoted son, a faithful husband, an able, courageous statesman, a great Democrat, an unsullied patriot, a noble, knightly, unselfish soul, his death is a loss to his country and the world.

Mr. HEFLIN assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, having served in the House with Mr. BURNETT for nearly 17 years, I necessarily became acquainted with him, and I deem it a high privilege to join now in paying tribute to his memory.

When we realize that nine-tenths of the legislation in Congress is really nonpartisan, it is easily explained that in the course of time men engaged in legislative duties, especially those who are active workers, must necessarily become pretty well acquainted. I had occasion to appear before the two committees of which Mr. BURNETT was chairman, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Immigration. All Members, especially those from the country districts, like to appear before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and during his chairmanship we always received a courteous and considerate hearing.

I was present at several meetings of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization during his chairmanship, and at hearings before the Committee on Rules on the immigration bill, which he championed; and on these and various other occasions I learned to admire him greatly.

As has been said here, few Members on the other side enjoyed more friendships on this side of the aisle than he did. He was admired for his splendid abilities, and especially for his brilliant oratory. It has been pointed out here that he was unexcelled in debate under the five-minute rule, and that was true. He commanded the art of oratory to a high degree, but he never employed it for a base purpose. When he played upon the emotions of his hearers it was to arouse them to a realization of the cause which he sought to further and explain.

There was one characteristic about the man, and I regard that as the chief distinction of his nature. That was his love for the genuine, for the real, and his hatred of sham and pretense everywhere. He believed in what he advocated, and he advocated it because he believed in it. He was not a slave to partisanship. It may be truly said of him that he carried his sovereignty under his own hat, but so far as it did not conflict with his view of right and wrong, of course he was loyal to the party to which he belonged.

Another distinguishing feature of his character was his intense love of his country and its institutions. He believed in representative government, and he believed that representative government implies confidence and faith in your fellow men. I often talked with him about this question of immigration. He believed that in order to preserve our free institutions it was necessary to exclude not only the illiterate and defective, but also those, however well educated, who professed hostility to all government, or to our form of government. Obviously, he was right. The principles of the Constitution of the United States, embodying as they do the best form of representative government, have gone forward until they have achieved the admiration of the world.

But that has been possible only because of the character of the people of the country. The people must have high ideals, must believe in progress and in justice and in law and order, and, above all, they must have faith in their fellow men before representative government can be a complete success; and because we have had faith, more love and fellowship among our people, our Government has produced the wonderful results which entitles it to the good opinion of the world. A man who professes and preaches the doctrine of hate and envy or whose life principle is selfishness and distrust can not become a part of such a government. The success of representative institutions is itself a refutation of the age-old slander that man was incapable of self-government. Mr. BURNETT, as has been so eloquently stated, rendered valuable services in the advocacy of a stringent immigration policy on the part of our Government.

There is no doubt but that if his views had been listened to and observed and earlier recognized we would not now have the difficulties that we are having as the result of a too liberal and indiscriminate policy on this subject.

Mr. BURNETT is dead. His friends shed tears of love at his bier. But his works live, and will continue to be a potent influence for good and the advancement of civilization and the welfare of mankind throughout the world forever.

There is no death—the thing that we call death
Is but another, sadder name for life,
Which is itself an insufficient name,
Faint recognition of that unknown Life—
That Power whose shadow is the Universe.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who is unavoidably called away to-day, may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That permission has already been granted.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I have always heard it said and I verily believe that "To live in the hearts of those we leave behind is not to die." And so, though his flesh and blood have passed from his scene of earthly usefulness, the spirit and memory of JOHN L. BURNETT will remain with us throughout our lives.

Unfortunately for me, and I have always deemed it unfortunate, I did not intimately know Mr. BURNETT. The first and only time I ever saw him was on this floor on the 3d of March, 1919, when he invited me to sit by him during the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and the last hours he spent in this Hall. And, while my acquaintance was not intimate, yet I have always known him by that reputation he bore in Alabama and in these United States as a man, an affectionate father, a tender and loving husband, a splendid statesman, and the highest type of American citizen. And, believing so well all that has been said of him this day, I am sure that on the final day his spirit heard that voice which said: "Well done, thy good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

And, while we miss him and mourn his loss, we can but find some consolation in the thought of him, that the world was made better that he lived in it. I am reminded of him when I recall that "he has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul, whose life was an inspiration, and whose memory a benediction."

A bright, brave memory, his the stainless shield,
No shame defaces, and no envy mars.
When our far future's records are unsealed
His name will shine among the morning stars.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it had been my purpose to dwell somewhat at length upon the life, character, and public service of my distinguished predecessor, Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT. I, along with the thousands of people in the seventh congressional district of Alabama that he served so faithfully and well, honored and esteemed him.

I recall the last conversation I had with him. It was shortly before he passed away. The next time I saw him he was in his casket.

It has been well said that in the midst of life we are in death. The moment we begin to live, that moment also we begin to die. A few short days ago upon this floor you heard the voice and felt the presence of him in whose honor and memory we have assembled here to-day. Though his lips are sealed in the eternal silence of the grave, and he sleeps the last long sleep, yet he still lives in the hearts of those who loved and honored him in life, and now in death pay tribute to his memory. I speak not for myself alone, but I voice the sentiment of the people of my district. Through me as their Representative they, too, pay tribute and homage to his memory and honor to his name.

I have known Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT from the days of my youth. Indeed, he was the first man for whom I ever cast a ballot upon attaining my majority. He was the invincible victor for more than twenty years in every political campaign in which he participated in the seventh district of Alabama. For more than twenty years he was the standard bearer of his party, and never did he permit that standard to trail in the dust. As his successor in Congress and as his political opponent in two campaigns, I can well say of him that in battle he was fearless and valiant, quick to repel an assault, strong and aggressive, and yet when the contest had concluded he was equally as prompt to forgive and forget. For him no scars remained and, like a brave warrior, when the battle was over he sheathed the sword.

It was this magnanimous spirit that contributed to his power and aided in maintaining his prestige throughout a long and useful career. Born in Alabama, he sleeps beneath the sod of his native State. His feet came to the end of life's toilsome journey. He laid down his burden by the wayside and, as befalls the common fate of man, succumbed to the universal dominion of death.

In his youth JOHN L. BURNETT lived in the days of the Civil War. He felt the pangs of poverty, beheld the sufferings of those he loved, and endured the hardships of those dark days. To his eternal credit be it said that he braved all these, and from a poor plowboy he went into the mines as a laborer, then into the schoolroom as a teacher, worked his way through the law department of Vanderbilt University, gained admission to the bar, and soon became recognized as a lawyer.

JOHN L. BURNETT not only rose from obscurity to State renown, but ultimately, through his vast work as chairman of the Committee on Immigration, his fame spread over the Nation. It is a striking and a tragic thing that in life his great ambition was to write upon the statute books of the Nation a perfect immigration law and that his fatal illness came upon him while he was delivering a speech on that subject. He fell in the line of his duty; he died bravely in the harness. His work on the great problems of immigration stands as a monument to his memory. The love and the loyalty enshrined in the hearts of his thousands of friends constitute yet another memorial. These shall endure during the years to come. His name thus engraved, the corrosive hand of time shall not soon efface.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, it would be easy to write a long biography or make a lengthy eulogy on the life and character of our loved and lamented friend and colleague, Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, but to tell the story of a life so full of love and loyalty, sacrifice and service, unselfishness and devotion to duty in a few words or a few lines even is a difficult thing to do.

There is so much of praise and appreciation that could be said that I am going to add just a few words to say that I, too, loved him and honored him. I regret exceedingly that it was not my privilege to be present at the memorial service which was held for him last Sunday in the House of Representatives, to mingle my voice with the voices of the men who stood there to pay tribute to the memory of this grand and good man, to recount with them his splendid attributes, attainments, and achievements, to express with them our sorrow, our deep sense of loss, and the shock we felt at his sudden death.

I have read with great interest and intense pride every word that was spoken in eulogy of him, and I rejoice in knowing that no meed of praise could be too great for him.

His passing seemed to some of us most untimely, but some very wise man has said, "He lives longest and best who has acquired and ministered to the greatest number of friends and loved ones." Measured by this standard, Mr. BURNETT had lived long and lived well, for wherever he went he gathered around him a host of friends and admirers. He was himself a true and faithful friend, a man of the highest type, for he was a Christian, a gentleman, a statesman, a devoted husband, and loving father.

Every day we miss his cordial greeting, his wise counsel, his manly courage, his influence for good in all things, and we shall miss him more and more as the days go by. We shall always cherish his memory. With bowed heads and heavy hearts we reverently say:

Father, in Thy gracious keeping
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I presume there was no Member of this House who enjoyed a more cordial personal relation than that which existed between myself and the late lamented Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, to whose memory we are to-day paying tribute. I knew Mr. BURNETT as a lawyer. He possessed all the qualities that go to make a good lawyer. I knew him as a Member of Congress, and all who served with him are glad to testify to his splendid ability as a legislator. In the death of Mr. BURNETT the United States of America suffered a distinct loss. Mr. BURNETT believed that in the admission of a certain class of foreigners the happiness and welfare of this country was seriously menaced. Those who took an opposite view to him on this subject and fought his untiring efforts and energy along this line all now agree that he was right. Mr. BURNETT paved the way for ridding this country of the anarchists, Bolsheviks, and the reds. That he could not have lived to see the fruits of his untiring labor and energy is to be lamented.

In his private life among his friends he was as gentle and lovable as a woman. I shall never forget the many kind things he did for me when I first came to Congress. It seemed to give him genuine pleasure to give me the benefit of his long experience here.. He carried me to a number of the places in the Capital where it was necessary for me to get my different assignments and otherwise familiarize myself with the different departments with whom I had to subsequently deal. It seemed to give him a great deal of pleasure to do this, and I was not the only beneficiary of the many acts of kindness which Mr. BURNETT extended to the new Member of Congress.

Mr. BURNETT was devoted to my children—not only to mine, but to all children, in fact. I lived with him for several years at the Congress Hall Hotel, and "Uncle Johnnie," as he was called by my children and the other children in the hotel, loved him with that devotion which was to me remarkable. On Saturday nights, even after he had gone through a strenuous week's work, he would give the children concerts, and in that way made hotel life to the youngsters worth while.

It is impossible for one in a short space of time to point out the many splendid traits of character which this truly great statesman possessed, and in his death I lost a real friend, his family lost a true and good husband and father, and the country lost a statesman of the highest order.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Unfortunately, being ill, he had to leave the Hall. He suffered a good deal last night. I saw him this morning and he came here, but was unable to stay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HEFLIN]. I know that he came here from a sick bed to attend these services to-day. Without objection the request of the gentleman from Alabama will be granted.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution already adopted, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 26, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 26, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with the duties and responsibilities of this high and honorable Senate pressing upon us, and lift our hearts to God for His guidance and blessing, that we may be men of vision, that we may understand the course of divine providence, that we may interpret the questions of the day in the light of Thy law and Thy ancient dealing with Thy people, and with the present manifestation of Thyself to Thy children. Grant that we may so work out these problems that it may redound to the honor and glory of Thy name and the welfare of millions of Thy people. Bless us in the discharge of the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, January 23, 1920, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the 24th of January, 1901, the Senate entered an order—

That unless otherwise directed, on the 22d day of February in each year, or if that day shall be on Sunday, then on the day following immediately, after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate by a Senator to be designated for the purpose by the presiding officer, and that thereafter the Senate will proceed with its ordinary business.

In this year, 1920, the 22d day of February falls upon Sunday. For the purposes of carrying out the order of the Senate the Chair designates Hon. ATLEE POMERENE, a Senator of the United States from the sovereign State of Ohio, to discharge that duty on the 23d day of February of this year.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Harding	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	Nugent	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Overman	Sutherland
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Wadsworth
Curtis	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Kirby	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Lenroot	Robinson	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Watson
France	McCormick	Sherman	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Simmons
Gerry	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Md.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family. I wish also to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, ratifying the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States, extending the right of suffrage to women, which will be filed.

FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in response to a resolution of October 3, 1919, certain information relative to the promotion of the foreign commerce of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to the rents received from the properties located on sites of proposed public buildings purchased in Washington by the United States Government, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to the law, a report showing the number of documents received and distributed during the calendar year ended December 31, 1919, together with the number remaining on hand January 1, 1920, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3331) authorizing the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. J. WILLARD RAGSDALE, late a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

The message further transmitted resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram in the nature of a petition adopted at a meeting of the 50 commissioners representing the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the United States, relative to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany and the League of Nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, favoring the ratification of the League of Nations covenant, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, praying that relief be granted to needy European countries, especially Poland, Austria, Hungary, and Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, remonstrating against the official representation of any religious organization in the League of Nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Federal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial of the Common Council of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the suspension of the work of widening and deepening the River Rouge, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a memorial of the Michigan Central System Federation of Railway Shop Employees, of Jackson, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins railroad bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Fairbanks Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to further increase the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the American Legion, of Harper, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of Bolshevism and punishment for disloyal utterances and acts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Post No. 81, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Parsons, Kans., and a petition of sundry citizens of Coffey County, Kans., praying for the speedy enactment of pending pension legislation for the relief of Civil War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Jordan, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide seed grain for 1920 planting to drought-stricken farmers, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DIAL. I present a resolution adopted at a meeting of the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its annual meeting in Baltimore, Md., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SENATORS: I have the honor to convey to you the following action taken by the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its annual meeting in Baltimore, Md.:

"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing 31 evangelical denominations with more than 20,000,000 communicants and a constituency of not less than 35,000,000, earnestly protests against the official representation of any religious organization in the League of Nations."

Sincerely, yours,
CHARLES S. MACFARLAND,
General Secretary.

Presented by—
E. O. WATSON,
Secretary Washington Office.

Mr. DIAL. I also present resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1920.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SENATORS: I have the honor to convey to you the following action taken by the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its annual meeting in Baltimore, Md.:

"Whereas when the United States entered into the Great War it did so with a solemn declaration that it took up arms to end war and establish a new world order, based upon justice, righteousness, and good will;

"Whereas as the war progressed the religious and moral leaders of all the allied and many neutral nations proclaimed the League of Nations as the one political expression of this new idealism and as the end for which the youth of the allied nations were laying down their lives;

"Whereas the heads of Government in both America and Great Britain have constantly held the league before their soldiers as the great consummation of their sacrifices;

"Whereas it is an earnest endeavor to establish the principles of the Kingdom of God among nations, and since its covenant demands the same high and honorable standards of conduct in their mutual relationships as those which pertain among high-minded, honorable men, and makes provision for those things for which the church has long contended, namely, the settlement of international disputes by friendly and judicial methods, the guaranteeing of rights and security to the smaller nations, and the gradual and simultaneous reduction of armaments;

"Whereas it has been unanimously accepted by the peace conference as the one hope of conserving the fruits of victory and creating a world order where the events of 1914 can never happen again and has been unanimously indorsed by both the Anglican and free churches of Great Britain;

"Whereas it has received the indorsement of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at its last meeting and by many denominational bodies during the last year:

"Resolved, That the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, assembled at Baltimore, reaffirms its faith in the League of Nations and earnestly calls upon the ministers and churches of the Nation to exert every possible influence upon the President and Senate of the United States to secure the immediate ratification of the covenant of the League of Nations with such reservations only as are necessary to safeguard the Constitution of the United States and which shall not substantially alter the character of the covenant and shall not require its submission to the Allies and Germany and shall not in any way hinder the full and equal participation on the part of the United States in all the activities of the league."

Sincerely, yours,
CHARLES S. MACFARLAND,
General Secretary.

Presented by—
E. O. WATSON,
Secretary Washington Office.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here two resolutions adopted by the Washington State Horticulaural Association with reference to two matters of very great importance, which are now being considered by the conferees of the two Houses on the railroad bill. These resolutions, in my judgment, express the sentiment of the public generally as to what they would like to have done and what they think ought to be done upon the matters referred to in the resolutions. I ask that the resolutions may be read, and in this way I call them to the attention of the conferees on the railroad bill.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolution 11.

SPOKANE, WASH., December 3, 1919.

The fruit industry of the Pacific Northwest, being far from its principal markets, is absolutely dependent for its existence on efficient and economical railroad transportation. Our experience with Government operation and our observation of other Government activities do not lead us to expect such efficiency and economy under Government ownership or operation. The Plumb plan for disposal of the roads seems particularly obnoxious, being an attempt by the railroad workers to exploit the general public.

The Washington State Horticultural Association therefore favors the return of the roads to private operation. We call upon our lawmakers to settle the matter in such a way as to give the best possible service to the public. We realize that this can not be done unless the railroad employees are given just and fair treatment. We realize that it can not be done unless the railroads are given an opportunity to make a sure and reasonable return on the investment. But we hope that the return may be made certain without Government guaranty of such a nature as to remove the incentive for the economy and efficiency in management which generally characterizes the operation of a business by its owners. We further urge that in the settlement of the railroad question provision be made for compulsory arbitration of all disputes between railroad employees and the roads. We wish to have entire justice done to the workers, and we believe this can be better accomplished in a judicial way. But we assert the supremacy of the interest of the general public in disputes involving public utilities.

Resolution 12.

The members of the Washington State Horticultural Association, as loyal American citizens, wish to raise their voices in warning against certain aspects of the social unrest which is menacing the country. We instinctively sympathize with labor in any fair and lawful attempt to secure justice. But we fear that organized labor is in numerous instances using the power of its organization to make unreasonable demands which could only be met at the expense of the general welfare. Unreasonably high wages and unreasonably short hours can only lead to underproduction and to a further increase in the cost of living. The present coal strike and the ever-threatened strike of the railroad workers are instances of an attitude antagonistic to the general welfare. We call upon organized labor to join with the agricultural population and all other good citizens in increasing production, in making all demands reasonable, and in allaying the social unrest which is threatening our civilization.

A. G. CRAIG, East Farms.
JESSE C. CHILDS, Wapato.
FRED N. KEELER, Route 8, Spokane.
R. T. REID, Bellevue.
J. R. EVERTS, Wenatchee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present to the Senate resolutions passed by the Savannah Board of Trade, the Savannah Greater Commercial Club, the Savannah Cotton Exchange, and the Brunswick Board of Trade, all in the State of Georgia, urging the use of Government vessels in certain trade routes. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present also a resolution passed by Georgia Division, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, urging the President and the Senate to exempt all farmers in agricultural work from the effect of the international labor congress control provided by the proposed covenant of the League of Nations. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. It is short.

There being no objection, the resolution was refererd to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA,
GEORGIA DIVISION, ATLANTA, GA.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

A resolution by Martin F. Amoreus, president the Cobb County Farmers' Union, Marietta, Ga.

"Whereas the treaty of peace with Germany contains a proposal to create an international labor congress, which, when ratified by the United States Senate, limits labor to '8 hours a day, 48 hours a week, and 24 hours' rest each week,' and also taxes landowners with old-age pensions, disability pensions, and unemployment wages; and

"Whereas the enforcement of these conditions will be ruinous to the farming industry of the country: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Georgia Division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, in convention assembled in Atlanta, Ga., this 26th day of November, 1919, does hereby request the President of the United States and the United States Senate to exempt all farmers and agricultural workers from the international labor congress control. Be it further

"Resolved, That the president and secretary of this convention mail to the President of the United States and each Member of the United States Senate a certified copy of these resolutions."

The above resolution is a correct copy of the original resolution, which was read to the convention, discussed, and unanimously adopted.

J. H. MILLS, President.
ANDREW J. FLEMING,
Secretary and Treasurer.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am charged with the very agreeable duty of presenting this morning a petition from a very large number of women of California—20,000—whose names are attached to this petition, requesting the Senate to ratify the treaty of peace with Germany and the covenant of the League of Nations. I do not know any better method of ascertaining the sense of the people between elections than by a resort to the constitutional right of petition, and whereas many petitions have been sent to this body urging action by the Senate, there is no petition more formidable than this one which I have the honor to present this morning. Mr. President, I ask that you receive it and lay it before the Senate.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at the same time the remarks of Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, president of the Mills College, California, a representative woman of my State, who, in tendering the petition to the California Senators for presentation here, urges the purpose and the sense of the petitioners in eloquent language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REMARKS OF DR. REINHARDT.

On Saturday, January 24, Dr. Aurelia H. Reinhardt, president of Mills College, Oakland, Calif., representing the petitioners, women of California, made the following address in the presence of the Vice President and many Senators in the room of the Vice President:

"I thank the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] for his courteous introduction and the Vice President of the United States for his hospitality to the women of California in permitting them in this historic room to present to their Senators this memorial in behalf of the peace treaty and the League of Nations for presentation to the Senate.

"The great clock which I am facing reminds me that if America's ambassador to France had met with the allied statesmen in the clock room of the French foreign office on Friday of last week I would not be here using the time of Senate Members with my words of explanation and appeal.

"It was a Frenchman visiting our young Republic a hundred years ago who remarked upon the propensity of Americans to talk much and leave little time for thinking. Would his witty allegation bring condemnation on the head of one who has had five days of thinking, in crossing mountains and prairie, as a preface to these five minutes of speech to which I limit myself? However, it is not in my words, but in the silent suffrage of thousands of California citizens that this petition which I bring has value. These multitudes of signatures, bound together with the colors of our country, ask that action be taken for the immediate ratification of that agreement reached by delegates of 14 nations assembled last winter in Paris—that agreement which is called the treaty of peace, including the League of Nations covenant. These signatures speak for no party but for individual Americans who base their request not on policy but on principle, not on personal interest but on righteousness and justice. As individuals they ask that our Nation shall fittingly close the war by effecting an organization with our allies to make permanent the blessings of present peace.

"Individual and Nation! America's history has been the evolution of right and justice for the individual, in local government, and the federation of that individual and local right into national magnitude and potency.

"To the citizens of Western States more easily than to older Eastern States, perhaps, is visible this progress and hopeful possibility. Their vision of a nation has never been limited to one ocean. To workers in the field of education, who touch at all times the growing, expanding life of youth, is kept fresh this fundamental faith in individual merit and individual potentiality.

"As a westerner and a teacher, I rejoice in the belief of my fellow citizens that is silently voiced in this memorial, asking that the great privileges of American democracy—the privilege of individual responsibility, of local self-government, and of federation—be championed in peace by America as applicable to those allies with whom she joined in battle for triumph over democracy's enemies.

"Armistice day is a year and a quarter past. Yet the departments of our Government are not agreed as to America's relations to her late enemies and to her allies in war. Into half a dozen camps they are divided, questioning the motives of the treaty, the practicability of the covenant, the definition of words, the contradiction of articles, the spirit of allies abroad and citizens at home. Surely the world will be nearer the millennium when war becomes as hard to make as peace.

"The petitioners from California beg that action rather than discussion be now your part. The treaty and covenant make a point of departure for a new era, a working basis for 30 nations and uncounted millions who need American political examples as well as her materials and money. In human institutions nothing is complete or perfect.

"The last word of democratic definition will never be written, for self-government must ever be built up anew in changing conditions. The final democratic constitution can never be finished, for it will grow with the growing greatness of individuals and nations. But always will the keynote of democratic constitutions be intelligence and good will, cooperation and participation, not ignorance, malevolence, and suspicion.

"Gentlemen, exactness of wording is less important than rightness of spirit. American prosperity and liberty depend to-day, and will always depend, on you—the kind of men you are, the kind of beliefs you hold, the kind of governmental conduct to which your beliefs bring you.

"'We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union.'

"That was a hundred and fifty years ago. And from that resolution the world learned much, as the nations at the peace conference proved, not only by their words but by their deeds. Lord Robert Cecil, Leon Bourgeois, Venizelos, Orlando speak in words we know, act in that cooperating and high-minded way we like to call American.

"And yet in America we have lost time, our greatest asset as former or reformer, as constructor or reconstructor. We have lost men's faith in democratic freedom, and our own internal distress marks this loss as does the increasing misery of nations across the sea. Are we not demonstrating that Americanism has little to do with democratic ideals? American patriots, living and dead alike, protest. Well, then, let us come to an understanding with ourselves, with our various branches of government.

"Participation in the World War by Americans was for ideals which are the breath of democracy. And now we ask for peace, and the peace is all we have out of our sacrifice in humanity's cause. Let us make it a great, a good, and enlightening peace. To be sure, our material interests demand it, but so do our moral interests; so does our Nation's past and our Nation's future. A nation—that group of human beings made one by a unified experience and unified faith. Faith, not fear. Democracy is government where duties are the foundations of rights, intelligence the basis of safe citizenship, participation the only earnest of stability. And internationalism, that federation of coordinate nationalities, is America's next proof of the virtues and practicability of democratic government.

"Let us have peace, an organized peace, a stable peace, for the sake of America, of the world.

"'With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.'"

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from California whether this is a petition for the ratification of the treaty of peace and the covenant of the League of Nations without change, without reservations?

Mr. PHELAN. It is for an unqualified ratification of the treaty of peace. In petitioning the Senate I understand that while the women of California favor unqualified and unconditional ratification, they are quite willing to leave it to the judgment of the Senate. It is more to direct their attention to the importance of action than any specific action at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to ask another question before disposing of the matter, in order to understand just what it is. It is quite voluminous evidently, and I have not had an opportunity to read it. Is there any expression in the petition as to favoring or disfavoring the attitude of a number of Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber in voting against the ratification of the treaty of peace with certain reservations for the preservation of the independence of the United States?

Mr. PHELAN. The petition, Mr. President, is a simple memorial to Congress favoring the ratification of the treaty. The representative of the petitioners, Dr. Reinhardt, in addressing a group of Senators and the California delegation on this subject last Saturday, dwelt entirely upon the general principles of the Government of the United States, the individual independence, the local self-government, and the confederation of States in order to protect and guard the rights which pertain to every citizen; and by a logical process she showed that a union of the States of the world would subserve the interests of humanity and liberty, just as the confederation of the States has served those purposes within our dominion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then, as I understand the petition, so far as the Senator from California states it, it would approve the ratification of the treaty of peace and the covenant of the League of Nations with the reservations that have been denominated the Lodge reservations?

Mr. PHELAN. No; the petition has no reference to the Lodge reservations or any other reservations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not oppose them, however.

Mr. PHELAN. There is no word of opposition in the memorial. It is simply a memorial to the Senate in behalf of the ratification. I am sure that the ladies will yield to the good judgment of three-fourths of this body, and I construe it to be more a petition in favor of early and prompt action.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as far as I know, there have been no petitions delivered to the Senate of any moment asking for the ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations. All the petitions have been of another character.

PRINT-PAPER SHORTAGE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a letter from the editor of a country newspaper who asks that the matter he refers to in the letter may be called to the attention of the Senate. It is in the nature of a petition. It suggests a way to take care of the print-paper shortage. I think it is a very valuable suggestion, and one which, if followed, will meet the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator give an idea as to how that end can be reached?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The writer of the letter suggests that if they cut down the extra editions of the great daily newspapers in the cities to not more than two anyhow a day it would meet the situation very largely.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator if he makes any suggestion as to what action is necessary on the part of Congress in order to bring that about.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know what we could do in that respect yet, but I think we might be able to devise some way to take care of it.

I wish to add that it is the suggestion of the writer of the letter that if there is some way by which we can cut down the size of these Sunday editions of these papers it would also take care of the situation. I remember that the Senate, I think very wisely, a year or two ago voted viva voce to cut down the size of those newspapers, but when a roll call was had they beat a retreat in a way, and it was defeated. I think the newspaper people themselves, irrespective of legislation or what we can do, ought to take this situation into account. They could well afford, temporarily at least, to cut out a lot of these extra editions in the cities, and to cut out a lot of the printed matter in the daily papers, so as to increase the supply of print paper for entirely proper and legitimate ends.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the subject of which my colleague has just spoken I desire to say that there is a bill pending, which I introduced, and which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, providing for a survey of the pulpwood resources of the United States. There has been a report asked for from the Forestry Service on the matter; I am not sure whether that has yet been returned or not; but the bill was introduced upon the basis of the assumption that one way of meeting the shortage of print paper is to produce more print paper in the United States. At the present time the United States is dependent very largely upon pulp which is imported from Canada. We have in the United States vast resources of pulp wood, but the exact location and character of those resources are not known. It seems to be the consensus of opinion of many of those who are interested and informed on the subject that if more definite information were had as to the locality of the pulp-wood forests, their character, and the availability of water and water power in connection with the establishment of pulp mills, this industry could be more largely established in the United States.

I take advantage of this occasion to urge upon the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that some action be taken on the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I entirely agree with what my colleague has said, and I join with him in his request; but his suggestion would not meet the present and immediate situation. The suggestion made in this letter, in the nature of a petition, is intended largely to meet the immediate situation. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD. I shall not read it.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MORTON MIRROR,
Morton, Wash., January 20, 1920.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: With no expression of your own, if you so choose, will you kindly bring this letter before Congress, so that it may receive the widest publicity, in order to learn the sentiment of the country elsewhere, to the end that a fearful waste may be turned into productive channels?

I have just returned from attending the eighth annual meeting of the Washington State Press Association Institute at the University of Washington. While in the city I noted what I believe to be the principal reason for the shortage of news print. It is the many editions of the city dailies.

The people in the country get one edition a day. Why are the people in the city any better than those in the country, that they should receive from 2 to 10 editions a day?

But, you say—"you" not being personal—the reason for the several editions is to enable the publishers to reach certain districts according to train schedule, along with meeting the requirements of the city readers.

My opinion is that one, and in no case more than two, extra editions are enough for any city daily newspaper under present conditions. I believe if this policy is followed by all the daily newspapers in the United States that we shall have no trouble in securing all the news print we need at a very reasonable figure.

Yours, very truly, V. H. HONEYWELL.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I will say to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] that at his request the bill to which he has referred has been submitted to the Bureau of Forestry of the Agricultural Department, but up to this hour we have had no report upon it. I assure the Senator that as soon as the report is received the matter to which he has referred will have immediate and due consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thank the Senator from North Dakota.

COMPENSATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 383) thereon.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11606) to authorize the county of Fountain, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind., and I submit a report (No. 382) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Fountain, State of Indiana, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Wabash River, from a point in the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind., to a point in Warren County, in the State of Indiana, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at a place near a bridge now in operation and heretofore constructed by said Fountain County at said point, all in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3722) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, and I submit a report (No. 381) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "the consent of Congress" and insert "authority"; in line 4, after the words "Bridge Co.," to strike out "a partnership, to be composed of the following members, namely: A. N. Alford, H. I. Alford, and H. B. Alford, of Hart County, Ga."; in line 9, after the words "Haileys Ferry," to strike out "which is about 1½ miles from Harpers old ferry above and about 1½ from Sadlers Ferry below, both of which ferries have been abandoned"; and on page 2, after line 3, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the right to erect any other bridge or ferry between Harpers old ferry above and Sadlers Ferry below Haileys Ferry is hereby prohibited.

And insert:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the Alfords Bridge Co., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Haileys Ferry, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the west, and the county of Anderson, State of South Carolina, on the east, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia subsequently said: Mr. President, there was a bill reported this morning from the Committee on Commerce to give authority to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, and it was passed. Two amendments were placed in the bill that are not material, but which it would be preferable not to have in the bill. One is striking out the designation of the names of the firm, upon the theory that it was a corporation. It is really a partnership, and the names of the firm ought to remain in the bill. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action of the Senate in passing the bill, and that these two amendments may also be reconsidered. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] reported the bill, and it is entirely agreeable to the Committee on Commerce that these amendments should be disagreed to. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendments I ask to have disagreed to are in the third line, striking out the words "the consent of Congress" and substituting therefor the word "authority," and in the fourth, fifth, and sixth lines, to strike out "a partnership, to be composed of the following members, namely, A. N. Alford, H. I. Alford, and H. B. Alford, of Hart County, Ga." I ask that those amendments be disagreed to.

The amendments were rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was rejected.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3797) to prevent the nullification of State anti-gambling laws by international or interstate transmission of bets and betting odds on horse races and other contests; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3798) for the reinstatement of Henry Cronan in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3799) for the relief of N. Thomas; and

A bill (S. 3800) for the relief of Charles Hurst; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3801) to repeal such portion of the act approved April 21, 1904 (33 Stats., 211), as relates to the exchange of certain lands; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3802) granting an increase of pension to William E. Cornwell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 149) authorizing the erection in Potomac Park in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to those from the District of Columbia who served their country in the armed services of the United States in the Great War; to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $536,927.37 for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

ADMIRAL WILLIAM S. SIMS.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an article in yesterday's Washington Times, by James B. Connolly, on the naval controversy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object in this instance, but I simply wish to say that every day or two some Senator arises and calls attention to the fact that there is a scarcity of print paper, and suggests certain means of remedying that condition. I am having prepared now a statement showing the number of speeches that have been printed as public documents at the request of Senators. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there was one request made, simple as it appeared upon its face, for the printing of a speech as a Senate document, but the result shows that there have been 48 tons of print paper used in the reprinting of that speech that was carried free of cost of postage to the sender.

As soon as I have the information in tabulated form as to the number of speeches and documents, I am going to present it to the Senate of the United States, and then I am going to find out whether or not the Senate wants to save paper. I think the saving ought to begin with the Senate and the House of Representatives, and if it will begin there, then we will have clean hands in asking the newspapers of this country and everybody else to save paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIMS, SPOTLIGHT LOVER, WAS BRITAIN'S CATSPAW, ASSERTS NOTED WRITER.

[By James B. Connolly, Boston's noted writer of sea tales, who spent eight months with American naval forces abroad during the Great War and whose comments on Admiral Sims are based on personal observations.]

"BOSTON, January 25.

"Our Navy, according to Admiral Sims, was something of a slacker during the war. Too bad, of course, and yet, as a British born, shouldn't Sims be more grateful? Only for that slacker Navy of ours there would be no British Empire to-day, and with no British Empire and its dire needs there would be no Sims.

SIMS IS COLONIAL BORN.

"Sims is a natural development. First, he is colonial born, and colonials of English descent will fight for empire and royalty long after such things have become a joke in the old country. Secondly, he is a politician; and thirdly, he is a publicity man—publicity for Sims. He is an admiral to-day, one of what they call the indoor admirals; yes; but it is the other three that are and have been the working influences with him.

"It was at a banquet in London in 1910 that Sims arose and said that he, a captain, in the United States Navy, could assure all present that in the event of that war which could not be much longer postponed England's great backer would be the United States.

"They need have no fear when the time came, America's last man, last dollar, last pound of steel would be at England's call.

"This started something. Sims was reprimanded—not too severely—by Washington. Other naval officers wished that somebody would get up a little manual on professional ethics and good taste for the shouters of the Sims type—either that or choke them before they got to the third class, and the laity wanted to know who was this new politician in their Navy, and so on.

"Sims got it right and left, but he knew what he was saying and why he said it. The English propaganda was going good then. There was a German propaganda, too, but as against the force of the British it was as a little brooklet to a great river.

"Students of history speak of England as old and senile, and military men rate the English Tommie a first-class specimen of a dub on the firing line, but they all must hand it to England for one thing: The finest job of propaganda in the world's history, and put out by England prior to and just after our entry into the war.

"Sims knew what he was doing. Men who could tell him better than anybody in the world just what effect England's propaganda would finally have in this country were right there at that dinner in London while Sims was talking, and Sims was making no mistake.

"All over the English world that speech was quoted, and the name of Sims established as the one American naval officer who could be depended upon to play England's game when the time came.

"And when the time came and English influence put him where he could play it, he played it. And he is playing it right now when he is depreciating the work of our Navy in the war, because to say we did the less is to prove that England did the more.

"Except as an instrument for somebody else's purpose we need not take Sims too seriously. He is a subtle politician and has always been crazy for publicity. We have in our Navy scores of officers who are constantly doing fine things to better the service. The public does not hear of this type, because it is against the ethics of the service for naval officers to tell the public about themselves.

"But the Sims type does not work that way. Some years ago he was one of a group of younger officers who were insistent on the adoption of certain British ideas in gunnery matters. Later the naval battles off Chile, Falkland, and Jutland tended to show that we should have paid more attention to what the German ideas were; however, every officer I spoke to at that time said the British ideas were good and they were for them.

WHISKERS AND PRESS AGENTS.

"Quite a few of our officers worked hard for better gunnery in our Navy at that time, but the only officer's name that I ever saw in print about it was that of Sims. Even in those days I saw Sims's name so often in print that I once asked two naval friends of mine who his press agent was.

"Later he did have press agents on his staff—I know one of them quite well—but at this time I doubt if he had one regularly with him. He wore a fine set of whiskers, which is all I can remember of his looks then—whiskers when every other naval man in the place was clean shaven—and behind the whiskers an expression as of a man who would wear a nose ring, if need be, to win notice.

"He wore the nose ring later; he is wearing one now.

"The next time I met Sims was in London after he went to war. There were officers who ranked him, and among them several who were better qualified than Sims for the billet for commander in chief of our naval forces in European waters; but the publicity for Sims had been framing up for just this crisis, and it was Sims that Washington sent over.

"Daniels has no use for Sims, nor Sims for Daniels, and naval officers generally are not in love with Sims; then how did he come to get that billet? Somebody could tell that.

GORGEOUS FLUNKY AT DOOR.

"When I first went into the American admiralty in London in 1917 and the door was opened to me, I stepped back on the porch and took a peek up, to make sure it was the American and not the British flag that was over the door.

"Sims's quarters were handy to Buckingham Palace, and I thought for a moment when I was faced by this gorgeous British flunky at the door that I must have gotten into the palace grounds somewhere. Sims heard so much about that gorgeous doorkeeper that later he put an American marine in his place.

"However, there Sims was in London, with a press agency working double tides for him. He was the greatest fellow over there; yes. He had once been in command of the combined British and American fleets, which turned out to be all bunk when I got over there; but it is interesting now, because Sims himself censored American naval news from London, and the bunk about his commanding the British great fleet must have passed through his own hands.

"However, I did think he held some naval authority over there. But the English may tell a man what a great reinsman he is, but they hold the reins themselves always.

"I came with all the needful credentials as a naval correspondent to cruise with the destroyers, but Sims had to tell me—he confessed this in the presence of a witness—that he had no power to put an American correspondent aboard an American destroyer for a cruise in war time. The British Admiral Bayly only could do that.

THE GREAT ADMIRAL BAYLY.

"This Admiral Bayly, who was then in charge of our naval forces, was certainly a fine specimen to put over anybody. It was of Bayly they told the story that early in the war he was called into conference on the U-boat threat. 'U-boats?' said Bayly. 'Gentlemen, it is foolish for anyone to say that the U-boats will ever amount to anything. Disregard them utterly.'

"Fine. It was because the U-boats had them all on the run that our destroyers had to hurry across. But there was old Bayly running our naval show and Sims subordinate to him.

"I have always discounted Sims's professional batting average about 100 points because of the press bureau behind him, but he surely had more brains than Bayly. When an American correspondent arrived at the naval base and Bayly's aid came around to look him over it was not of his professional qualifications that the aid inquired; what the aid wanted to know was how he stood on the Irish question. A fine old mossback, Bayly, but he was the boss.

"No American destroyer could so much as shift her moorings in Queenstown Harbor without first securing permission of Bayly. When Admiral Wilson took over the command of our naval forces in French waters our fellows took their orders from Wilson and nobody else. Why not from Sims, too? Is it that they did not trust us, or is it that they did not take Sims seriously as an admiral; they made him, yes; but not to be any commanding admiral. Then what?

THAT FAMOUS U-BOAT BATTLE.

"All naval press censorship was in the hands of the British Admiralty, of course, though naval matters from American sources over there were supposed to go through Sims. Early in the Sims régime came the famous attack on Secretary Daniels's so-called Fourth of July story of the U-boat attack on one of our early convoys. That story was meant to bring Daniels into ridicule, and without stopping to ask where it came from and what was the motive behind it, most of our papers printed it. It is no use for Sims to say to-day that he never saw the dispatch.

"It came to the press in the regular way and no member of Sims's staff would dare to pass it without the boss seeing it. In letting that dispatch go through Sims was disloyal to Daniels, his chief, and disloyalty in wartime is bad business, but somebody over there must have wanted it to go through, so through it went.

"Sims put many a thing through for them over there. A naval officer is supposed to steer clear of political questions. Admiral Bayly devoutedly hated the Irish. He ordered an American correspondent to be held two weeks in London one time, because he bore an Irish name, and he did not think it safe to allow a man with such a name to be in Ireland while there was an Irish convention going on there.

"From Queenstown, where Bayly presided, came a fine lot of propaganda against the Irish. It was pure bunk that our gobs did not get along well with the Irish people. The trouble was that our gobs and the Irish got along altogether too well.

IRISH GIRLS LIKED OUR BOYS.

"Five months after our first destroyer steamed into Queenstown 48 American bluejackets had taken out licenses to marry Queenstown girls, which is pretty good going for a small force in a few weeks. Gobs on liberty could be seen waving Sinn Fein flags.

"I didn't know that they were all so strong for the Sinn Feiners. It may have been they wanted to show that they had no use for the 'Limie.' There was but little mixing it up in Queenstown between our gobs and the British sailors, the Limies not being in sufficient numbers there to give battles; but elsewhere, with the British predominating, there were constant mix-ups.

"Our gobs may have brought but they did not use knives in fist fights; and more than one of our fellows was found in the gutter with a knife in his back. The American gob loved the English 'Limie' about as well as the American doughboy loved the British Tommie—ask any doughboy how well that is—but according to Sims our fellows and their fellows were the lovingest ever.

"Propaganda always, and Sims always on that job. The British gang of politicians, who were running the British Empire, had every now and then to prove to the public that their selections for big jobs were great men.

SAYS JELLICOE WONDERFUL.

"Sims says Admiral Jellicoe was a wonderful man. Jellicoe was put in command of the British great fleet about the same time that the politicians put that other flivver, Gen. French, in command of the British Army in Flanders.

"Jellicoe replaced Admiral Callaghan. I do not know who Callaghan is or was, but his name sounds as if he might at least fight. Didn't Jellicoe fight?

"He has written a 600-page book of what he did in the war. It is a 600-page alibi for 'safety first.'

"He came within range of the enemy with a tremendous superiority of ships, men, and weight of metal over the Germans; and what did he do when he found himself within range? Did he close in and clean up? He did—not.

"What did he do? To put it in his own delicious phrase, he 'opened the range.' To put it in the language of the laity, he increased the distance between himself and the enemy. To put it in the language of the American gob, he beat it. Ran away? Well, what do you think?

"According to tradition, the British Navy is wonderful. Invincible; yes. But here was a mess. Well, they had educated up the public before, and could do it again. And they did. As a result of the propaganda which followed the Jutland fight, there are people over here who think that the British won that fight.

"Every naval man knows that the Germans gave the British an awful walloping at Jutland, and that Jellicoe's part in it was a disgrace, but our Admiral Sims boosts him, and why is that? Does he have to do things like that to hold his place, or what is it?

"'Let Jellicoe run away, let French have his joy parties in Flanders, but keep our own gang in power'; that seemed to be the war cry of that London gang. 'Let everything happen, we'll fool the public after it happens.' And they were fooling a lot of them, too.

THE BRITISH WERE LICKED.

"Six months before we were drawn into the war they were licked, and were hanging on by their toes till we got going, and yet when our fellows went over there they heard on all sides:

"'Now, that we've won the war the Yankees 'ave come.'

"Was it any wonder that wherever any of our fellows were camped in the British Isles they took to going around and beating up 'Limies' and Tommies?

"In England, while the armistice was pending, Sims gave out figures tinctured with that same spirit with which he is now depreciating the work of our Navy in the war. He gave out figures in London in October, 1918, to show how many millions of troops the British escorted safely to France. Great! Across the narrow British Channel, with a solid line both sides to protect them.

"We took our ships across 3,000 miles' stretch with U-boats working both sides without losing a man. Two hundred and odd of our soldiers were lost on the Tuscania, but she was under a British, not an American, escort.

ANOTHER BANQUET FOR BRITISH.

"Sims gave out figures to show that we were beholden to British ships for getting 66 per cent of our men across. (Incidentally they put in a bill for $160 per man for that service, which price we cut in two when we settled the bill.)

"But where is the 66 per cent when Washington has officially declared that our own ships took over 46 per cent and that French and Italian ships also took some?

"Why does he say such things? He told in print of the hundreds and hundreds of British—war craft he calls them—engaged in the war defense, and compares the magnificent total to the few scores we had over there—ours amounted to 3 per cent, or something like that, of theirs.

"But he does not say that every ship we sent over was a live unit, and that hundreds and hundreds of the British craft were ridiculous little things that could not leave the harbor in any kind of blow. Mounted with 1-pounder guns in the bows many of them were, and with a sea chop 3 feet high they could not fire a shell and say, half the time, would it hit the sky or be dumped in the swash alongside.

SIMS DISLOYAL TO DANIELS.

"He does not emphasize the fact that the great lines of sea traffic converging in the Bay of Biscay, the English Channel, and the south entrance to the Irish Sea were guarded by our fellows, and that that work, combined with the work of laying the great mine barrage in the North Sea—80 per cent of it laid by our Navy—was what broke the U-boat back.

"No; he does not say that, and why not?

"Sims was disloyal to Secretary Daniels in war time and he is disloyal to him now. His admiralty headquarters in London were rotten with the backcapping of Daniels.

"He says now that Daniels should have taken more destroyers from the guardiancy of our own coast and sent them over to help him. He says that notwithstanding that it was the London gang behind Sims who spread the propaganda early that if we did not go over there and help lick Germany, then Germany would be over here to lick us. But now he says there was never any danger to our shores.

"Perhaps there never was, and yet at this time when Daniels thought a few destroyers would do no harm along our own coast, the U-boats were working, had been working, and it was a fair judgment to say they might continue to work for another while on this side.

GRAVE PERIL IN ARMCHAIRS.

"Sims right now is telling the public that our seagoing Navy did not do so much. The great work was done by him in London. Of course, our men did fairly well at sea, but what is that? And they probably did that because they did not know any better; if they knew better, they would have got billets where their greatest danger would be of getting splinters in the seat of their trousers from revolving too carelessly in office chairs.

"Distinguished-service medals for the commander of a destroyer which was torpedoed with a loss of 60 of his 100 men in two minutes. Tut, tut; pooh, pooh!

"Such things are accidents. No matter how well he behaved afterwards? No matter; still an accident.

"But D. S. M.'s. Oh, yes! for the brave chaps who were dining with the King, running around to music halls in London, and posing, sometimes an hour at a stretch, for the movie cameras.

"Why does he say and do those things? Well, he is British born. Have you ever met the kind of British born who never becomes a good American? It is pretty hard to shift a real Englishman. His sense of racial superiority is his religion. Our Army and Navy saved England from being a German Province, and she knows it and will never forgive us for it.

"But it is not the British born alone. We have with us right now some American born who are something else first and American second. And they are a real menace.

"I was over there when Sims brought to a big dinner in London one of our best-selling little novelists as his guest. Winston Churchill is his name, and at the proper moment Mr. Churchill arose and said:

"'Let me assure you gentlemen here to-night that there is not one American citizen but who stands ready to shed the last drop of his blood before he will see the British Empire go down.'

THE GLORY OF BRITAIN.

"How is that? Does it sound like an echo from Sims at a dinner in the same place in 1910? It was printed with acclaim in the London daily papers next day.

"It may be fine reading for the gob at the naval base, too. I was in Our Men's Club in Queenstown when some of them read it.

"'Great! We thought we came over here to make the world safe for democracy, but it is to save the British Empire, is it? Great!'

"The glory of Britain—that's the game. And every belittling of what we did in the war is a magnification of what Britain did. And Britain having done it all, why should she not by and by grab all she cares to grab? Why not? Hasn't she earned it? And planted away in nearly all our big dailies and many of our periodicals are advocates of that idea.

"And they are the one biggest menace to Americanism to-day. With them it is the knife—sometimes openly, sometimes from out of the dark—for whoever dares to advocate otherwise. But, hallelujah for those who talk right.

"And so to hell with the American Navy! To hell with American prestige! All up for the empire! Hallelujah for the Simses!"

ADDRESS BY JOHN J. MAHONEY.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of the remarks of John J. Mahoney, supervisor of Americanization work under the department of education of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, before a group of educational workers.

Massachusetts has already been undertaking this work very vigorously and has appointed an enthusiastic and able young man as State supervisor of this work and appropriated a substantial sum of money for the same. The views of Mr. Mahoney on this question are most interesting, and I deem them worthy of insertion in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Remarks of John J. Mahoney, supervisor of Americanization work under the department of education of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, before a group of educational workers.]

PUTTING AMERICA INTO AMERICANIZATION.

"The teaching of English to immigrants is the first step in the Americanization of those immigrants. But what is Americanization? Stripped of all beclouding verbiage, it is simply the business of making Americans. It is the business of instilling into the heart of everyone who inhabits American soil those ideas and ideals, those attitudes, convictions, and points of view that the real American believes in and swears by and reveres. But what are they, these things of the American spirit? Americanization is the business of making good citizens. But who is the good citizen? Americanization is the business of making these United States safe for democracy. But what is democracy?

"Very, very hurriedly and with the most abject apologies for the doctrinaire tone that this haste compels me to assume I am going to answer these question for the purpose of pointing out things that teachers, in my experience, give little evidence of knowing, but which they must know if they are really to Americanize.

"Democracy is a state of human relationship which, generally speaking, does not exist in the world to-day. It is only approximated. For the purpose of clearness we make speak of it as having three aspects; three fields in which it operates:

"(1) Political democracy is best set forth in Lincoln's phrase—a government of the people, by the people, for the people. It carries with it the connotation of rights and opportunities, duties and obligations. We have a considerable measure of this type of democracy in the United States.

"(2) Social democracy—I use the term as the best that occurs to me—is an affirmation of Burns's stirring challenge, 'A man's a man for a' that.' It denies an aristocracy either of birth or wealth. It recognizes an aristocracy of worth and fineness of spirit only. We can stand in actual practice considerably more of this type of democracy in the United States to-day.

"(3) Industrial democracy is a demand that wealth, which is produced by the cooperation of capital, labor, and the skill of the 'entrepreneur,' be distributed more equitably among those several agents. Unrestrained capitalism is answered by unrestrained Bolshevism. Industrial democracy, the doctrine of the economic 'square deal,' is the safe middle-of-the-road policy which points the way to the economic uplift and the enduring happiness of society as a whole.

"And what are our American ideas, ideals, and points of view? Despite the fact that our America is yet an imperfect thing, despite the fact that thousands of American citizens give the lie in their lives and in their practices to the principles we profess in moments of exaltation, there are certain things that America stands for foursquare to the winds of the world. We know this country for the land of opportunity. We believe that citizenship means duties and obligations as well as rights and privileges. We believe that equality means not a leveling, but the right and the chance for every man to develop the utmost that is in him for the common good. We believe in a representative form of government and in a wise choice of capable leaders. We are committed to the principle of majority rule. We stand for voluntary obedience to lawful authority. And we hold to the conviction that while we keep God in our hearts America endures.

"Do our teachers teach these things? Hardly. In our advanced classes we teach history and citizenship, indeed. But practically every text in civics or citizenship is either a story of the functions of our Government or a dry-as-dust catechism on our Federal Constitution, which does not touch the immigrant's daily life by the margin of a 10-foot pole. And our history is taught as in the day schools, the concatenated story of past events, as if a knowledge of history or a knowledge of civics, either, ever made a good citizen.

"Do not misunderstand me. Knowledge of history and of civics is an important factor in the teaching of Americanism. But the inculcation of an enthusiasm for Americanism is better; and this enthusiasm is not engendered by the type of the texts now used. Better even than enthusiasm is the opportunity for participation. I liked what Mr. Goldberger said yesterday about the socialized evening school. A man learns to be a good citizen by being a good citizen. The socialized evening school gives him a chance to exercise those habits and traits and attitudes of citizenship which mark the citizen worth while; and I offer the suggestion that if history were taught in the evening schools in this same dynamic fashion it would approximate more closely the end it is supposed to serve. History is a subject that surely more than all others should be the medium for instruction in citizenship, but it can not fulfill this function until schools everywhere and evening schools in particular cease teaching history merely as the record of past events. History is valuable mainly for the light it throws on present-day problems. It should be taught not for its facts but for its values. If I were a director of evening schools, as I was for a good many years, I should begin a course of study in history for advanced classes not with the year 1492 or 1776 but with the year 1919. My classes would study, for instance, 'The meaning and worth of liberty.' Consider the investigation of this problem, beginning, if you please, in the year 1919 with an analysis of liberty, autocracy, license, Bolshevism as these concepts can be interpreted in the light of the student's reactions and opinions. The past is then called upon to tell the story of liberty—just that—how it was won for America and what it has cost us in blood and sacrifice and treasure. The lesson would be the incalculable value of it and the sacredness of the gift handed down to the citizens of a present-day generation. Similarly an investigation of 'Democracy and its problems,' illumined by the story of the slow advance that democracy records, would give students a background for understanding not only the ultimate inevitability of democracy but its perils as well. Such treatment, in my opinion, makes history a very purposive study indeed; and the purpose, the goal, is the teaching of citizenship. No other purpose is worth the time expended.

"I must stop. Have I made clear what I mean by putting Americanism into Americanization? Boiled down, it means that after the language barrier has been swept away the teacher must be able to interpret America to the immigrant in terms not of information alone but in terms of ideas and ideals, of convictions, attitudes, and points of view. To do this properly she must know her America, its lights and shadows, its successes and weaknesses, its groping yesterdays and its promising to-morrows. To do it properly she must know how to use her teaching materials in a dynamic way. Teacher trainers for the problem of Americanization must look upon this as their most vital task. If you get this thought from what I have tried to say this morning, then my discussion has not failed too abjectly."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

PREVENTION OF INFLUENZA.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration Senate joint resolution 76, Order of Business No. 199. It is a joint resolution which I think it is imperative to have passed at once.

I ask that the joint resolution be read, together with a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relating thereto.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask whether the joint resolution is on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. FRANCE. It is Order of Business No. 199.

Mr. KING. Let it be read, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that that is the joint resolution which appropriates a million dollars for the investigation and prevention of influenza.

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; it is.

Mr. KING. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. FRANCE. I hope the Senator will allow the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to be read before he objects. The Public Health Service is entirely without funds for meeting a very serious situation, a threatened epidemic; and I feel that the Senator should at least hear the joint resolution and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read before objecting. Will the Senator kindly withdraw his objetcion?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will withhold the objection until I hear the letter to which the Senator refers; but I think we ought to proceed with the calendar before taking up this bill. This is Calendar Monday, and we should not displace the calendar. Upon the conclusion of the hour devoted to it, I shall not object to the Senator moving to take up his measure.

Mr. FRANCE. I appreciate the feeling of the Senator; but we may not reach this joint resolution to-day on the calendar, and I think it would be very unwise to let several days elapse before we take action upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 24, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH IRWIN FRANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FRANCE: From all indications a recrudescence of last year's epidemic of influenza is now imminent. Influenza is already present in epidemic form in New York, Chicago, and other large centers of population. Its rapid spread from these centers to all parts of the country seems highly probable in view of the natural history of influenza epidemics.

Owing to the seriousness of the situation allow me to invite your attention to the urgent necessity for providing, at an early date, funds for the investigation of the cause, mode of transmission, and means of prevention of influenza and allied diseases, as provided by Senate joint resolution No. 76, now on the Senate Calendar. Some action is urgent at this time because up to the present time we are without specific knowledge as to preventive measures. The epidemic fund, in which influenza is included, is practically exhausted because of the expenditures made in controlling the outbreak of bubonic plague in New Orleans.

May I ask you, as chairman of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine of the Senate, to take such steps as you may deem expedient to meet the situation?

Cordially, yours,

CARTER GLASS,
Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not understand the particular need for the appropriation that has been suggested, but I do know that this is a matter that has been under discussion for some time. Early in the summer I wrote to the Surgeon General, asking what steps had been taken or what means were being employed to prevent a recurrence of the epidemic of the "flu." I can conceive of nothing of more importance than the application of all proper means to the prevention of this disease. The Surgeon General informed me that they were working at it as far as the funds that were appropriated for that purpose would permit. I think it would be a crime to refuse this appropriation if in fact it would prevent the spread of this disease or mitigate its ravages.

I am not familiar with the particular needs of the Health Service. I know it asks for aid. I am not sure that good will come from the expenditure, but I hope it will. I must necessarily rely upon men who are familiar with this matter. We can not well afford to neglect a matter of this importance, because we all know the devastation which was wrought in this country last year and what now threatens. It would be wiser to err in expending money than in neglecting human life.

As I said, I am not prepared to speak with authority as to the necessity of an appropriation of $1,000,000. I think I am prepared to support any measure which may reasonably promise relief or safety in the present emergency, which is serious. The object, of course, is to benefit men and women instead of hogs or cotton, although I submit that ought to weaken its support.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this joint resolution. I have been one of the victims of the influenza myself, and just got out of a sick bed to come to the session to-day in order to vote against the so-called Americanization bill.

I do object to the constant encroachments of the Public Health Service organization. It has bureaus, not one dozen but several dozen, which are attempting to invade the States and usurp their powers and authority and discharge the responsibilities resting upon them. A mighty army of employees has been created, and a Nation-wide plan is being developed under which the lives and health of the people will be placed under Federal control. We will soon have the United States furnishing doctors and nurses and hospitals for all the people, with the consequent result of hundreds of millions of dollars being taken annually from the people.

I picked up on a Senator's desk a moment ago the Christian Science Monitor for January 23, and I read in the editorial—and let me say that I have found the statements of this paper to be reliable, and it is one of the best newspapers in the United States—these words:

> At the invitation of the State department of health, it seems, the United States Public Health Service is to make a State-wide survey. One of the first steps in the investigation is to be a house-to-house canvass. A physician and a public-health nurse are to call at each house where there are children who have not yet gone to school. School children will also be examined so thoroughly that a card index of their health histories can be made. The whole crusade is for the purpose of inducing each community, not only in Missouri but everywhere else in the country, to make this work permanent. In other words, this one State is to be made, for the present, a great experimental laboratory for the purpose of suggesting to the populace the latest theories. Truly, parents and children alike will need to keep wide awake in order to avoid being imposed on.
>
> This modern imposition and inquisition shows how all the seemingly slight and harmless encroachments of schemers for this sort of thing are now being coordinated and extended as people 10 years ago would hardly have dreamed would ever be possible.

And so on, through a very interesting editorial.

That merely illustrates what the Federal Government is doing. The so-called Americanization bill is simply one of the symptoms of this deadly and destructive disease which is taking possession of the country. The Federal Government must go into the States; if there is a little outbreak of so-called un-Americanism, the Federal Government must interfere; if there is a little illiteracy in some precinct, the Federal Government must interfere; if there is any ill to which flesh is heir or society is subject, the Federal Government must interfere; if some disease manifests itself which physicians are dealing with in a scientific and rational way, the Federal Government must interfere. You will always find cranks and faddists in the Federal Government service, and ambitious persons holding Federal positions, anxious to extend their authority and augment their prestige and power, who will seize upon these sporadic conditions as an excuse for demanding immense appropriations and creating additional Federal machinery.

Here we have in the editorial to which I have referred an exemplification of this powerful tendency. The Federal Government, through this health service, is to go into the States, take a card index of the children, ascertain their infantile complaints, find out whether they are teething or whether they have the croup, how the teeth may be best cut and the croup may be best avoided. It assumes the utter incapacity of the people to deal with their own affairs or the States and local communities and the doctors and hospitals and the people to meet the duties and responsibilities resting upon them. The people are to be treated as hothouse plants and a heavy-handed bureaucracy is to control and direct their lives and activities. Of course, the program calls for hundreds of thousands of additional Federal employees. Soon there will be but two classes—those working for the Government and those paying taxes to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this joint resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland is in line with this theory that the Federal Government must put its hands into the States, control their health, control their schools, control their public welfare, and discharge the police functions of the States themselves. I do not know how many millions of dollars have been given to the Public Health Service. I do not know how many bureaus or agencies or divisions there are within it. I know that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] gave some attention to that matter some months ago and obtained figures as to the large appropriations made. Millions of dollars have been given to this organization, and it still wants more, and if you give it this million dollars it will want five million. Indeed, the joint resolution, as I see, called for $5,000,000, but the committee recommended an amendment reducing the amount to $1,000,000.

If we were to leave to executive agencies the question of the amount to be expended by them, they would tax the people to the point of destruction and provoke a revolution. There would be no limit to the inordinate demands and the ambitious schemes which they would make and project. The Public Health Service Bureau of the United States has become a huge organization and a powerful bureaucracy; it is crying for more power and larger appropriations; it is becoming an oppressive paternalism, and will soon be a meddlesome, offensive, and, indeed, dangerous force in the Nation.

I see no necessity for this measure. I shall not object to its consideration, but at the appropriate time I shall move to cut down the appropriation to $500,000, and unless further reason appears for its passage shall vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland what amount of money was appropriated last year?

Mr. FRANCE. I think it was about $1,500,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, can the Senator state what good was done with that money, what advance in science was made by the use of it?

Mr. FRANCE. The officers of the Public Health Service feel that a considerable amount of information was gained with reference to the nature and spread of influenza. Unfortunately the causes have not been fully determined, nor has the nature of the disease been fully ascertained; but the study of the disease, I think, should go on. I feel that it is most important that at least some sum be placed at the disposal of the Public Health Service at this time to pursue the investigation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that when we come to the matter of spending a million dollars, after having expended a million and one-half last year for the purpose, we ought not to vote until we know what was done with the million and a half and what was accomplished. It is too important a matter for us to expend another million dollars on without knowing what results were obtained from the expenditure of the first million and a half. Of course, this disease will be studied; it is being studied; but it is easy enough to waste a million or a million and a half dollars if it is not carefully looked after by Congress, and it is not being carefully looked after by Congress if it simply votes the money without knowing what has been done with what was appropriated last year.

Mr. NORRIS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not able to give the Senator the information directly that he has asked for, but I believe only a portion of the money that was appropriated last year was used for the study of the "flu." I understand it was under some such general term as "contagious diseases," and a great deal of it was used for the investigation of other diseases. However, I may be wrong about that.

Mr. FRANCE. A very large proportion of the fund was used for the prevention of the spread of the bubonic plague in New Orleans.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I so understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the Senator if the joint resolution could not go over for a few days until he can procure from the Public Health Service a statement, for the benefit of the Senate, as to what they have done with the money and what they have accomplished by its use?

Mr. FRANCE. I must say, in answer to the Senator, that I sympathize very much with the position which he takes. If I had my way I would insist that every department to which an appropriation was made for investigation purposes should make a report upon the findings at the time of asking for an additional appropriation. I think that is sound public policy.

At the same time, I do feel that this is an emergency measure, and that some sum of money should be placed immediately at the disposal of the Public Health Service, even though the sum may be smaller than that provided in the joint resolution, in order that the work may go on; and then we could ascertain more fully as to the uses to which the fund was put last year before appropriating a larger sum. I hope the Senator will allow at least some appropriation to be made by the immediate passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The trouble is that the money is put at the disposal of this bureau to use practically in its own discretion. It has made no report as to what it did last year, as far as I can ascertain, and I think that is a very reckless way for Congress to legislate. We should at least first have a definite report as to what was done last year and what was accomplished by the use of the money.

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on Appropriations appropriated $400,000, not only for an investigation into the causes of the "flu" but of other diseases of an epidemic nature.

During the meeting of the committee in which this request was made, Gen. Blue, of the Public Health Service, made a statement to the committee as to how the money had been spent. It was spent in the different States of the Union, and a portion of it went to Alaska. They sent experts, as they claimed, into the principal cities of the country in which the "flu" was raging. I think I am well within the bounds when I say that nothing particular has been discovered as to the cause of the disease by those investigations, but they have at least instructed the people that the patient must keep warm and must be properly fed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say, for the benefit of those who are making this investigation, that I was told by a judge of a superior court that in the mountain country of North Carolina they have discovered a remedy for this disease. They say that common baking soda will cure the disease; that they have cured it with it; that they have no deaths up there at all; and they use common baking soda, which cures the disease.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, Mr. President, that the joint resolutions originally introduced proposed to appropriate $5,000,000. The committee saw fit to cut the amount to $1,000,000, and I think perhaps the suggestion is a good one now made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] that a smaller amount be made immediately available, so that they can begin the investigation of the causes and prevention of the disease in some of the large centers that are at present afflicted with the "flu." I believe that $250,000 is all that the Senate ought to appropriate at this time, and in the meantime perhaps we can find out something about what the result of the past investigation has been.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, I would like to ask my colleague, that to-day in the medical laboratories of our country there is being made a study of influenza, as there is of cancer and of other diseases, and that the most far-reaching results are being obtained by the scientific study which is being made by the devoted men who are giving their lives to the study of these questions, and that without aid from the Federal Government?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it, Mr. President. I can not see why the Public Health Service can not do this work and pay for same out of the original appropriation as well as to pay for the work referred to by my colleague. What Senator or what Representative thought that he was voting for an appropriation authorizing the Public Health Service to go into the State of Missouri, as was just referred to by my colleague, and referred to by me on the floor of the Senate over a month ago, to care for the teeth of every school child in Missouri and to see if their ears need attention and if their eyes are affected in any way? Mind you, it is not only to make an investigation, but they are to remain there, and the school children are to be treated by the officials of the Government of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Missouri is only to be an ensample. It is to spread from Missouri to every State in the Union, and nobody can tell what the appropriation will be if that is undertaken.

So if we are going to do this work at all, I hope that the Senator having the joint resolution in charge will not insist upon an appropriation of more than $250,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has indicated that he would assent to such a change in the joint resolution, and I suggest that we get it out of the way.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I am willing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall not object to whatever the Senator from Maryland, who has charge of the joint resolution, may consent to, but when I consider that here was an unknown disease which destroyed in a very few months more men and women in the United States than were lost in the Great War on the part of the United States during the time we were engaged in it, when I think of the appalling condition which threatens us to-day, and then consider that we are asking for a million dollars that the department of the Government with which we have trusted at least the health condition of the country may make this investigation, I think that we are now haggling, as laymen, as to whether they can accomplish anything or not, or whether possibly they have proceeded as we, as laymen, would ask them to proceed. It seems to me that we are entirely technical. I shall not argue and spend the time of the Senate, if these wise gentlemen want to stop this appropriation, because we ourselves have neglected to provide the means for reports from the Public Health Service in the past. If you want to do it, I shall not object to it, but as far as I am concerned, sir, I think it is a duty we owe this country to take advantage of such means as can be employed to preserve the public health from this great scourge which, I repeat, has killed more people than were killed in the Great War so far as America is concerned.

I would like all the information that Senators desire. I took this matter up early, because I felt then it was the duty of the Public Health Service to investigate and see what could be done. I think they have been reasonably active. It may be that they have not accomplished direct results—that is, results which have ended the plague—but they have made some advance, and the Senator from Utah, I imagine, if he could preserve his own life or the life of one of his children by the Government spending a million dollars would not object to its being done. I do not know whether it can be prevented or not, but I think this is a sensible thing to do, when the Secretary of the Treasury and the Public Health Service ask that it be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my experience is that the activities of the Federal Government are never very valuable, either along the line of public health or anything else. The fact that some Cabinet officer or some other official of the Government has made a recommendation for an appropriation never comes with any very appealing force to me. I know the incompetency and inefficiency of many of the men in high official position, and I know the grasping desire of officials of the Government in executive departments to extend their authority and their power. It is anything for appropriations, and they will talk about the old flag and an appropriation as long as they can get appropriations out of Congress.

Mr. President, on the 1st of October, 1918, we appropriated a million dollars for this particular purpose, "to enable the Public Health Service to combat and suppress Spanish influenza and other communicable diseases by aiding State and local boards of health, or otherwise, including pay and allowance of medical and sanitary personnel, medical and hospital supplies, printing, and clerical services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere." Of course, you must take care of the new offices that will be created and the new rooms that must be furnished. We appropriated a million dollars. What became of the million dollars? What is there to show for it? What benefit has been derived? Where is the report?

Those questions, Mr. President, have not been answered, and I doubt whether they can be satisfactorily answered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in my own State during the prevalence of the influenza last year, when, on account of the conditions of the war, a great many of our physicians had been taken into the service, leaving almost an inadequate number, the influenza, when it struck our State, struck us unprepared, because of the fact that we did not have a sufficient number of men trained and of medical skill, and the doctors themselves, as the Senator knows, were among the first victims of the disease.

When it reached its acute stage in my State, I stand here to-day to testify that the Federal medical service was of incalculable benefit in providing the means of abating it. They cooperated with the local authorities in getting physicians, in providing nurses, in giving directions as to isolation, and in what little treatment was given, because the Senator knows none of them knew exactly what was the ætiology of the disease. The germ had never been isolated. The disease was of such national character and the scourge was so great and appalling that I think it justifies the Federal Government in taking cognizance of it and doing all that it can to stamp it out or even to ameliorate its ravages.

I do not know how much money is needed; I do not know whether or not the Public Health Service have been in a position where they could make a report as to what they did with the other million dollars, but I do know that in my State they were of great benefit to the people. This scourge, as was indicated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], is so appalling in its nature that if it regains its virility it means that which is equivalent to the devastation of war.

I do not know whether a million dollars or two million are needed, but I do know that in the face of the suffering of the people throughout the country it can not be absorbed by local communities.

I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that where there occurs an unfortunate condition the local communities ought to be allowed to absorb it if possible. I deplore this tendency to run to Congress for relief from every little misfortune that may occur, but when it is as national in scope as this, and as terrible in its effects, if there is anything that justifies cooperation in the work of the whole United States in a governmental capacity to meet it, this is one. There is hardly a home that is not visited now by this miserable disease, and I do not think it is a time for us to question the experts who come and ask that we do something to help the public at large.

Some of those who are on the committee may have heard the evidence; I do not know what disposition was made of the other money, but I do know that it is our duty to meet this situation as we may. Whether the present joint resolution is the correct one or not, it is the best information we have. The committee has already cut the appropriation from $5,000,000 to $1,000,000, and it seems to me it is our duty to put the funds at the command of the Public Health Service, so that they can do the best they may in the appalling circumstances that confront us.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is undoubtedly a great deal of wisdom and sound sense in what the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said in regard to the control of appropriations and in regard to the method that is often pursued in coming to the Federal Government for assistance when States or localities could take care of the situation; but the "flu" does not pay any attention to a State line nor to the line of a municipality. You can not expect any State to accomplish the proper results by stamping it out within any particular locality. The Government ought to prevent its spread.

It is true that much money has already been spent and perhaps not very great results have been obtained. I think they have obtained some, but it is something that neither the medical fraternity nor anyone else understands; it is something new, and we are confronted with the condition and are helpless. If we want to do anything we must go somewhere and trust somebody with the power and authority and equip them with the money to carry out what men who have studied the question think is the proper method to pursue.

It is true, also, that the entire million dollars might be spent and no result come from it; but that is not any reason why we should remain idle when people are dying all over the country. Mr. President, when a child gets sick and you employ a physician, you do not expect him to guarantee a recovery before you employ him to go and see the sick child. We are more or less helpless; the doctors are more or less helpless. But because they have not found a definite and sure remedy or cure for this disease, is that any reason why we should remain idle and allow it to sweep the country with its death-dealing effect in every community and in almost every home? We can not say that anything definite is going to come out of it, but is there any other course that we can pursue that is better than the one proposed here? We have to rely, as we always do in case of sickness, upon somebody who is probably better able to understand conditions than we are.

It seems to me that in this case, where there is a national epidemic, where there is a great danger of an enormous death rate, we ought not to expect localities to handle it. They are doing all they can. The cities are doing all they can. It has been stated that a good many doctors worked hard and devoted a great deal of time without pay. They will do that again. They are doing that now. They are all studying the question. If we can help anywhere by Federal aid we ought to do it in a proposition that is not local but national; yes, Mr. President, it is world-wide. We know what happened in the past, and we are confronted again now, right at our doors to-day, with a proposition, it seems to me, which demands that immediately we shall do all we can in every way that we can, and I do not know of any other way that we can do our share except the way that is proposed by the joint resolution.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee that considered the joint resolution, I desire to say that the committee did come to the conclusion that a million dollars was the minimum amount which should be appropriated for this purpose. Of course, rather than have no appropriation at all I would prefer to see the joint resolution amended so that only $250,000 might be made available, but I do feel that a million dollars is immediately needed for carrying on the work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the regular appropriation bill, which would naturally carry an appropriation for this purpose, will be considered by the House of Representatives very shortly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The epidemic will be over by that time.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, then they can not spend $1,000,000; $250,000 would be all that could be spent before the regular appropriation bill is under consideration. In the meantime there is no question but what an appropriation for this purpose will be included in the regular appropriation bill, while this $250,000 is an emergency matter. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] knows that the Public Health Service can not, within the next two months at least, get any kind of an organization together and spend more than $250,000. It was for that reason that I said I think, this being an emergency matter, there should not be any more appropriated than enough to carry out the emergency requirements. That is why I suggested $250,000 to the Senator. I think that will be all we ought to appropriate at this time under conditions as they exist to-day. If the Senator has no objection, I shall offer an amendment to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. FRANCE. I think that at least half a million ought to be the minimum, but in view of what the Senator says I would rather have $250,000 appropriated than none at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in justice to the Public Health Service, I desire to make a statement. It has been stated that the Senate would like to know how the former appropriation has been spent. I hold in my hand the annual report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service of the United States, which is very interesting and a very able report, showing how the money was spent and some of the great work that was done by this service. So it will not do to say that we have no report.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does the report show what work was done during the influenza epidemic?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly. It is a very interesting report, undoubtedly, although I have not had time to read it; but I say that it is here, filling a good many pages, showing how the money was spent. It is accessible to anyone who desires to read it. It has been said that there was no report, and I merely wished to correct that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PHELAN. I object.

Mr. FRANCE. I think the joint resolution was before the Senate. It is my understanding that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] withdrew his objection, and that the joint resolution has been before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Maryland is right. My recollection is that the Chair submitted the matter, and upon assurance, as I understood it, from my friend the Senator from Maryland that an amendment reducing the amount would not be opposed, I withdrew the objection, and it has been considered by the Senate. It is my understanding that the joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. I move the reference of the joint resolution to the appropriate committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has just been reported from the committee.

Mr. PHELAN. I think the Senate is without exact information that the money appropriated last year was not spent in a manner to accomplish any result, and that the epidemic was not stayed by any action on the part of Congress; that the hospitals of the country through their laboratories are seeking a remedy and have not found it, and I can not conceive how the epidemic may be stopped by the methods of the Public Health Service, which consisted, I am told, of sending physicians to different States. Of course, physicians are available without the aid of the Public Health Service.

I had some experience with the epidemic last year, and the only means of helping those who are suffering was by giving them nursing. How an appropriation can create a nursing corps adequate to meet the emrgency I am not aware. All the nurses available were employed during that epidemic, and I think that without reference to the appropriate committee, with some definite plan proposed by which the epidemic could be stayed and the Senate so advised, that it would be vain and purposeless to make this appropriation at this time.

Of course, there is no question of retrenchment if the service can be rendered; but I am much concerned in knowing how the appropriation of last year was expended. The committee could also report to us upon that subject.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask the reference of the joint resolution to the appropriate committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was just about to ask the Senator what he considers the appropriate committee? This is the report of a committee. The joint resolution has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. PHELAN. I was not advised that it came from a committee. I thought it was a motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been reported and is on the calendar now, having been reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] on the 1st of October, 1919.

Mr. NORRIS. And it has been upon the calendar ever since.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been upon the calendar for a long time.

Mr. PHELAN. Then had the Senator anticipated the epidemic?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that if the Senate had anticipated it, as we ought to have anticipated it, the epidemic probably would not have come. We ought to have passed this joint resolution before the epidemic was on us. It is on us now; and it seems to me the appropriation ought to be made to assist the staying of it, if possible, and to find some remedy for it.

It has been charged here that the Federal authorities are incompetent to deal with this or any kindred subject. As a matter of fact, the Federal authorities discovered the origin of yellow fever; they found an antidote for it and a cure for it; and they have prevented a terrible disaster visiting the American people every year, because they have ascertained a way to stop it.

Mr. President, I have an idea that the influenza is due to some germ, just as the yellow fever is due to some germ, and when that germ is discovered that it will be possible to abate that terrible disease. I have seen Congress, without batting an eye, appropriate $500,000 for the eradication of hog cholera, but whenever it comes to the protection of human life there is always a fight and an assertion that we ought not to appropriate money for such purposes.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that a few days ago I read in the newspapers a statement given to the press by a Government doctor who is connected with the Great Lakes Training Station, in which he asserted without qualification that he had discovered the germ of influenza. That being true, I do not doubt that in a comparatively short time the remedy also will be discovered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I feel there is no question about it, Mr. President. It is true that the local physicians do their best to try to cure the influenza. I called on a physician this morning to go to see a young friend of mine who has the influenza, and he told me he was absolutely overwhelmed with calls and that it was impossible for him even to accept an invitation to see an additional patient.

The bureau, established for the purpose, can devote its entire time not to visiting patients but to the discovery of the cause of the disease, while the local physicians are compelled to treat the individual patients, without much regard to the source of the epidemic.

I think, Mr. President, the joint resolution ought to be passed, and, if possible, some antidote found for the disease which carried away so many hundreds of thousands of people during the last year and which was more disastrous to our troops in the United States who were in the cantonments than were the bullets of the Germans in Europe.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate I understood that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] had made a motion to appropriate $1,000,000 to be disbursed by the Public Health Service. I see now that the joint resolution which was introduced as long ago as July 24, 1919, by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] was reported by the Senator from Maryland favorably providing for an appropriation of $1,000,000. The joint resolution provides that the several universities and hospitals of the country be encouraged by the distribution of the fund in their efforts to discover the germ of influenza and, possibly, to protect the country from future epidemics. I think that the great universities of the country and their laboratories have been at work, without any aid from Congress, because there are great endowed funds for this purpose.

This is an emergency measure. The best way of rendering immediate relief would be some method by which the fund could be made available for the employment of nurses. There is no way of meeting the emergency by doctors' prescriptions, and the doctors themselves admit that nursing is essential for the cure of the disease. I think the joint resolution should be so amended as to give some practical utility for such a large expenditure. I think a million dollars for the employment of nurses, distributed throughout the States where the infection exists, would be too small. I should be in favor of a larger appropriation if its use is wisely planned. There was $5,000,000 appropriated in this joint resolution as originally introduced. If that money is used in research, I think it would be of no present value. If it shall be used for a practical purpose, it might be of very great service. I therefore move to recommit the joint resolution to the committee in order that they may report some adequate and proper plan for the expenditure of the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported to the joint resolution by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Health and Quarantine was, in section 1, page 2, line 18, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000,000" and to insert "$1,000,000," so as to read:

That to enable the Public Health Service to investigate influenza and allied diseases in order to discover their causes and to prevent their spread, and for allotment of sums to universities, colleges, or other suitable research institutions, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury are qualified for scientific research, for the purpose of discovering their causes and methods of prevention, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and including pay and allowances of regular and reserve commissioned medical and sanitary personnel, and for medical and hospital supplies, printing, clerical services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, transportation, freight, and such other expenses as may be necessary, including the dissemination of such information to the public, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, available until expended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Maryland, when I withdrew my objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, to consent to a reduction of the proposed appropriation to $500,000.

Mr. FRANCE. The Senator from Utah is correct. I did consent to that reduction. I consented to the reduction of the sum to $500,000 in order that that sum might be immediately available. I shall not oppose such an amendment.

Mr. KING. Then I move that the committee amendment be amended so that the sum appropriated shall be $500,000. I shall be very glad to vote for a small appropriation if some other Senator will move an amendment to my amendment. In not objecting to the consideration of the bill I did not commit myself to its support or to oppose a reduction of the $500,000 appropriation to a smaller sum.

Mr. SMOOT. Such an amendment would not be in order, because it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. KING. I will withdraw my amendment if some other Senator will offer an amendment reducing the sum below what I have proposed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Personally, I agree with the Senator from Maryland that $1,000,000 is not too much for the proposed purpose; I am in favor of the appropriation of $1,000,000; but I am willing to carry out the understanding of the Senator from Utah that he withdrew his objection, when he had an opportunity to prevent the consideration of the joint resolution, on condition that the Senator from Maryland would agree to reduce the sum proposed to be appropriated to $500,000. However, it also seems to me that the Senator from Utah now should stand by his agreement, the same as the Senator from Maryland has done, and should assist us in retaining the appropriation of $500,000, and should oppose any amendment to reduce the appropriation below that sum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And if he does not we can then make a fight for an appropriation of $1,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that he would prefer to have $250,000——

Mr. NORRIS. He would prefer that to nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. I intended to finish my sentence. Of course, I do not want to be understood as trying to misrepresent the Senator from Maryland, because I had no such thought in my mind. I was about to say that the Senator from Maryland said he would rather have an appropriation of $250,000 than not to have an appropriation at all, if by reducing it to that amount it would insure the passage of the joint resolution. I wish to move an amendment making the amount $250,000, for the reasons already stated by me. A greater amount can not be spent before the regular appropriation bill comes along. If the "flu" should cease within a short time, there would be no necessity for any further appropriation; but I will assure the Senate of the United States that if $5,000,000 were appropriated, even though the "flu" should subside and there should not remain a single case of it in the entire United States, the entire $5,000,000 would be expended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Even though the "flu" should cease at once, and even though there were no cases of it now, I should be in favor of this appropriation, although the necessity for immediate action would not be so great, because it is worth that amount if the cause of the disease can be discovered and a remedy provided, whether we have the "flu" at the particular time or not. We never will be able to find a remedy unless the work is carried on and the disease is studied and investigated.

Mr. SMOOT. Do not be deceived into thinking that this money is going to be spent simply for investigation into the cause of the disease and to ascertain a remedy for it. The appropriation will be used just as a similar appropriation was used heretofore, for employing doctors all over the United States, taking them away from their regular practice, and having them visit the different cities to which the Public Health Service may send them. Nine-tenths of all of it will be expended for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, that may not be the right way to proceed, but I confess I do not know as to that. I am going to be compelled to take the judgment of those who have authority in the Public Health Service. They know more about it than I do, I confess, and I think they even know more about it than the Senator from Utah or the Senator from California. We have got to trust somebody to do the work. If they decide that the way to proceed is to spend the money to send doctors from one city to another and to stop the ravages of the disease in that way, I am going to abide by their decision, because I do not know of any better way. It may be that that is the right way, and, if they think it is the right way, that is the way they ought to proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the joint resolution provides two things, first, to discover the cause of the disease and then to prevent its spread. Those are the objects of the bill. They were also the objects of the original appropriation made by Congress, but I know that physicians were taken from different parts of the country and sent to Alaska and never spent one minute trying to discover the cause of the "flu." They did go to Alaska and other places, however, to assist the local people in trying to prevent its spread. I repeat that nine-tenths of this sum will be spent to prevent the spread of the "flu," and the $250,000 which I suggest as an appropriation will be all that can be spent before the regular appropriation bill comes along. In the meantime, if the "flu" subsides in the United States, then we will save the amount of money by which the appropriation is reduced, because I know as well as I know that I stand upon the floor of the Senate that if this appropriation were $5,000,000 and the "flu" should subside in the United States in 30 days and not a case should exist anywhere in all the country, every cent of the $5,000,000 would be spent before June 30, 1920. So I am trying to save some money to the Treasury of the United States and at the same time provide a sufficient appropriation until the regular appropriation bill comes to do just what the Senator from Maryland wants done.

Mr. PHELAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator observes that the joint resolution was proposed last June and that its main purpose was to enable research work to be carried out in order to determine the cause of influenza. That was a very wise purpose; but now that the epidemic is here, does the Senator think that any of this money should be spent for research work? Should it not be spent to stay the epidemic by other means?

Mr. SMOOT. So far as I am personally concerned, I would rather have the money spent for research work, and such work can be carried on with a very small appropriation. It does not require a great expenditure of money to enable the scientist to go into his study and investigate this disease, try to ascertain what the germ is and how to destroy it, as has been done in the case of other diseases in the past. I do not think anybody would object to an appropriation for that purpose; but I say this money is not primarily for that purpose. It will be spent, no matter what amount we appropriate, largely for preventing the spread of the disease. That is why I am in favor of appropriating $250,000, which I think is all that this special measure ought to carry. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that he and no other Senator need be afraid, even though the "flu" is only slightly prevalent in the United States at that time, that when the regular appropriation bill comes along there will be an appropriation in that bill for this purpose; there is not a question of doubt that there will be. All I am trying to do is to play safe and guard the Treasury of the United States and at the same time allow this work to proceed, and I know that it can proceed until the regular appropriation bill is passed by Congress with the $250,000 that I propose.

Mr. President, if my colleague has withdrawn his amendment, I first will offer an amendment striking out "$1,000,000" and inserting "$250,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not prevail, and that the Senate will make at least $500,000 immediately available for this purpose—a sum which, I think, is very small, considering the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I do not think we ought to appropriate less than a million dollars for this purpose.

In order to get the judgment of the other Senators upon the matter, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I think it is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	McNary	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gronna	New	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hale	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Harding	Nugent	Spencer
Capper	Harris	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harrison	Phelan	Townsend
Colt	Hitchcock	Phipps	Trammell
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	King	Sheppard	Wolcott
France	McKellar	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The names of the absentees will be called.

The reading clerk called the names of the absentees, and Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called.

Mr. MOSES, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. WATSON, Mr. NELSON, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for a division on the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. KING] is out of the Chamber, and I understand there was an agreement——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have agreed to pair with the Senator's colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of a pair; it is a question of the amount. In behalf of my colleague, I move to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000," to which the Senator from Maryland has agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the acceptance of the amendment by the Senator from Maryland does not bind the other members of the committee. The appropriation asked for was $5,000,000, and as introduced the joint resolution called for an appropriation of $1,000,000, and that was the least possible amount that could be used for this purpose.

Influenza caused more deaths in 1918 in two months in the United States than all our soldiers who were killed and died in the war against Germany. It was the worst scourge we have had in this country in many years, and it is the duty of Congress to appropriate the necessary money to prevent its recurrence.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Utah has stated that this appropriation is solely for the purpose of making laboratory investigations or investigations of that nature. I find that the joint resolution carries a great deal more than that. It provides, in the first place, for the pay of medical officers and military forces under the Public Health Service; it provides for hospital expenses; it provides for the purchase of medicine; and it goes even further than that, and says "any other expenses."

If the joint resolution went no further than the Senator from Utah has stated, I would thoroughly agree with his amendment; but a careful reading of the joint resolution will convince Senators that it does not stop there. If it did not go any further than he stated, I would be inclined to vote against the whole joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator refer to the junior Senator or the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I was referring to the senior Senator from Utah.

M. SMOOT. Then I think the Senator has certainly misstated my position, if I understood what he said.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I did, I am sorry.

Mr. SMOOT. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could hardly hear the Senator's statement. Did he say that I had stated that this appropriation was for the discovery of the causes of the "flu"?

Mr. PITTMAN. I stated that I understood the Senator to say that the reason why a large appropriation was not required was that the bill provided principally for some laboratory work, or work of that nature.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, the Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very glad, then, to be corrected.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had been in the Chamber, he would have heard me make the statement that nine-tenths of the money that was to be appropriated would be spent for preventing the spread of the disease. I stated that if the appropriation was only for laboratory work, then they would not want the $250,000, for nine-tenths, or more, in my opinion, of the appropriation that was made a year ago was used for the preventing of the spread of the disease, and very little of the appropriation that was made last year was used for laboratory work. I think the Senator will agree with me in that statement.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no difference of opinion, then. I misunderstood the Senator, and the only reason why I rose was because of that misunderstanding. But I feel the seriousness of the necessity of fighting this disease, and I would feel that it would be absurd to appropriate $250,000 in a great campaign against a disease of this character. As far as I am concerned, it is either a useless appropriation or we should appropriate enough to combat the disease.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the trouble we find ourselves in in the Senate is that when a bill is under discussion there are but few Senators in the Chamber to listen to what is said for or against the bill. A quorum is suggested, and we can get 48 Senators, just a quorum, into the Chamber. Then the question of what we are going to vote upon comes up, and some Senator will get up and accuse another Senator of taking a certain position when it is contrary to all that he said and to his position.

To the few Senators in the Chamber now I want to say again—and I repeat it—that the regular appropriation bill which carries items of this character will be in the House of Representatives for consideration within the next two or three weeks. There is not any question but what if the "flu" is prevalent throughout the country at that time there will be more than $500,000 asked, and there will be more than $500,000 appropriated for the purpose of investigating it. This is an emergency measure, and I say that $250,000 appropriated at this time can not be expended between the day when it passes Congress and the day when the appropriation made in the regular appropriation bill will be available.

I said that if this joint resolution carried $5,000,000 and the "flu" should subside in the United States 30 days from now, and not a case appear from one end of the country to the other, every dollar of the $5,000,000 would be spent before the end of the fiscal year. All I am asking is an appropriation to do the very work that this joint resolution provides for, giving them all that they can possibly spend before the regular appropriation comes to the Senate, and then at that time, if the "flu" is prevalent in the United States, give them all that we feel is absolutely necessary toward not only the discovery of the causes of the "flu," but to prevent the spreading of the same. Nobody is fighting the appropriation if it is necessary, but this joint resolution is an emergency matter, and whenever we appropriate more than $250,000—I want to say that it will make no difference in the end as to the appropriation that will be made if the "flu" continues. But if the "flu" does not continue, then the Treasury of the United States will just save the difference between the $250,000 and the amount asked for originally, because I know just as well as I live, and every Senator here knows, that no matter what the appropriation made is, if the Public Health Service, or any other department of this Government, has an appropriation, it will spend every dollar of it.

That was my position, and that was why I made the motion to reduce the amount to $250,000, not that I thought that was all that would be necessary if the "flu" continues its ravages throughout the country. I know that $500,000 will not be sufficient in such a case.

I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall vote on the appropriation of $500,000 in place of $1,000,000 at this time, and that was the understanding that was had between the junior Senator from Utah and the Senator having the bill in charge. I shall say no more until that vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator having the joint resolution in charge whether it is his purpose to ask for more than $500,000? When it came up for consideration I stated that I would object to its consideration. The Senator from Maryland approached me, and, as I understood him, stated that if the objection were withdrawn the amount would be reduced, as far as he was concerned, speaking for the committee, as I understood, to $500,000; and with that understanding—that is, that the demand by the committee would be reduced to $500,000—I withdrew my objection to immediate consideration, stating, however, that I was opposed to the joint resolution in any form. I felt that there was no necessity for the appropriation; that it would be utilized almost wholly to create new positions for hungry office seekers and that nothing of scientific value would result to the country. Moreover, I saw in the measure an opportunity for further Federal interference in the affairs of the States.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, in view of the exigency of the situation and in view of what I consider to be the necessity for an immediate appropriation, I did agree that, as far as I myself was concerned—not, however, attempting to bind the committee—I would be willing to accept an amendment reducing the appropriation to $500,000; and I hope that the Senate will adopt that amendment and pass the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there is going to be any question about it, I shall take some time to give my views in extenso upon this bill and kindred measures proposed by executive agencies of the Government, and it will take longer than 2 o'clock for me to conclude.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is unduly alarmed about it. I think that all the Senators who voted against the $250,000, while most of us believe it ought to be a million, are willing to carry out the agreement and are willing to vote for $500,000.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I shall pretermit any observations which I was ready to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "expended," on page 2, line 19, the committee report to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however, That any allotment of funds to universities, colleges, or other suitable research institutions as hereinafter provided, shall not be limited to any one school of medicine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, last week a bill was reported by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which had reference only to an Indian reservation in my State. It is agreed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who at that time thought it affected some of the Indians in his State, that the bill may be taken up. I have a letter from the department which will show that it does not affect the Indians in Nebraska, and I have submitted that letter to the Senator from Nebraska. It will lead to no discussion.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4382), to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States, be taken up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator quite sure that it will lead to no discussion?

Mr. GRONNA. I am quite sure of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is Calendar Monday, and we have not yet reached the calendar.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand; but there are only a few minutes left of the morning hour. All the time has been taken up on the Senate joint resolution 76.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the letter of the department read.

Mr. GRONNA. I send to the desk the letter from the Secretary of the Interior and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 26, 1920.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your informal inquiry of January 20, 1920, with respect to H. R. 4382, now receiving consideration in the Senate, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

The preamble of the bill clearly limits the tribes of Indians who are to take their claims against the Government to the Court of Claims, and names them as the Arickarees, the Gros Ventres, and the Mandans. The enacting clause embraces "all of the tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak."; and section 2 of the bill specifically provides that the said tribes or band or bands thereof are to submit their claims; and that, inter alia, "any band or bands of said tribes the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order."

This proposed legislation, if enacted, would be inclusive and exclusive, and would not embrace the claims of any Indians of Nebraska, nor would it permit the court to join any other Indians in the suit.

Should any of the tribes of Indians in Nebraska have claims against the Government which have not been nor are being adjudicated, they, in my opinion, should be given ample opportunity to submit such claims to the Court of Claims for final determination, as in the case of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak.

Sincerely, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the committee amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 23, strike out the word "units" and insert the word "suits," so as to make the bill read:

Whereas the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in the State of North Dakota, including the tribes known as the Arickarees, the Gros Ventres, and the Mandans, and the individual members of such tribes make claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which, it is alleged, have not been complied with, and on account of various encroachments upon the appropriation by said Government of territory of said tribes of Indians: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which any or all of the tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribes or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff of plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by a petitioner or an attorney employed by said petitioner, tribes of any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribes or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3315.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] striking out the words "for stationery, printing, illustrative material, $75,000."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not think it would be fair to proceed in the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. He does not seem to be in the Chamber. Therefore I will have to call for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The roll will be called.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Spencer
Calder	Gronna	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Hale	New	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harris	Norris	Townsend
Colt	Harrison	Nugent	Trammell
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Sheppard	Watson
Dial	Kenyon	Sherman	Wolcott
Fernald	Lenroot	Smith, S. C.
France	McKellar	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. PHELAN, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland answered to their names when called.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. PITTMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MOSES. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have sent for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I called for a quorum in order to have him present, and I dislike to take up the matter without him. I am going to take my five minutes, or a portion of it, in the hope that he may get here within that time.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri seeks to strike out of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah the words "for printing, stationery, illustrative matter, $75,000." The Senator from Missouri made the point in his speech on Saturday that the Government should do nothing along the line of printing.

The proponents of the measure have raised no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Utah. It cuts the appropriation about $170,000. It cuts the officers for administration that the Department of the Interior thinks necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill, but we have recognized the necessity of economy, and I believe that we have gone as far as we ought to go in cutting on the administrative features of the bill. I do not myself believe that the country is going to applaud any effort to cut down the sums that may be needed in this Americanization proposition.

After we have done this and conceded cuts from $500,000 to $336,100 the proposition is made to cut it still another $75,000 by striking out the provision I have stated. The money is necessary to print charts and primers and devices for teaching, easy methods of teaching language to be sent to the teachers of the country, simple statements on the Constitution, simple stories of the lives of Americans who are dead—none of it to be used in anywise to boom any living Americans, as I understand it—descriptive pamphlets about the country, the issuance of a little paper, such as has been called the Americanization paper, being a means of communication between the different parts of the country. If something good has been done in this line in the East this carries it to the West, and if in the West this carries it to the Middle West and the Middle West carries it back to the East, and so forth. This is the general purpose of the article.

The Senator from Missouri intimates that it will be used to spread propaganda. We have got to have some faith in this Government in our public officials. I think one of the greatest troubles in the country to-day is the lack of confidence in the American Congress by the people of the United States. They seem willing to believe evil of their public men rather than good. They seem to think we are not doing our duty here no matter how hard we may work. If we are not willing to trust other branches of the Government, and if we insist that through the executive administration of the Government wrongs are to be purposely done by men in power in the executive branches of the Government, how can we hope to escape condemnation from the people as to our motives? To me it is a very bad thing and very unfortunate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator if a document similar to the one I have in my hand would be prevented from being printed by the bureau here in case the amendment of the Senator from Missouri prevails? This document is entitled "Americanization Letter No. 2," gotten out by John J. Mahoney, State supervisor of Americanization, division of university extension, Massachusetts department of education. It is addressed to the superintendents of schools and directors of immigrant education, and consists of 15 points for workers in Americanization, being a "suggestive platform of principles, convictions, and points of view," a very instructive document.

Mr. KENYON. I have seen that document.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Would such a document be prevented from being printed and issued by the Bureau of Education?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it could not be printed. There could not be any printing done, and further, let me say, these printing houses will not print unless there be a demand, and these new documents may have to be printed in different languages and have to be printed by the Government, because printing houses will not do it until there is a large demand.

My five minutes have expired, and I am sorry the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is not yet here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was under the impression that the amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah was agreed to, and then to accommodate the Senator from Missouri we reconsidered it. There is no objection to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that in the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah provision is made for the pay of one at $5,000 and four at $4,000 each, in lines 2 and 3 on page 3 of the reprint of the bill. I notice that in the law creating the Bureau of Education and the offices under it, there is one commissioner at $5,000, and the highest paid official next to the commissioner receives $3,500. I recall that at past sessions of Congress there has been an effort made to increase the pay of those $3,500 men to $4,000.

They have been unable to procure that increase. In this amendment the work of the Commissioner of Education, as I understand, is duplicated. He is already getting $5,000 a year, and there is created by the amendment another place at $5,000, and four places are created carrying a salary of $4,000 each. Does not the Senator think we might reduce those appropriations somewhat?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I called upon the Interior Department when the Senator from Utah made his suggestion as to lump-sum appropriations to furnish the list of the necessary officers to do this work and the amount of their salaries. The department furnished that list. I do not know whether the Senator from Mississippi has seen it or not. I then sat down with the Senator from Utah and we sliced that list almost to pieces. We cut down the number of officers that they wanted. This is much less than they asked for.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the intention that the Commissioner of Education shall hold this $5,000 office?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. It is a separate and distinct office?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. The department will have to secure experts; they will have to have men who could command much higher salaries than those provided in the bill. One man of whom I know who probably can be secured for the work, and who has been doing the work for practically nothing, has now taken a position at $10,000 a year. He might come back to that office; we should like to have him; but you can not secure men for this kind of work at such salaries unless they are stimulated by patriotic motives.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wished to call attention to that matter.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that we cut out about 15 of the positions the department asked for.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KENYON. I yield the floor; but will not the Senator let us vote on the proposed substitute?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the Secretary state the question which is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending question.

The READING CLERK. Mr. SMOOT proposes to strike out section 3, as printed in the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That of the amount appropriated by section 2 above, $336,100 may be deducted and used for the following purposes:

Administrative officers, specialists, and field officers in Washington, D. C.: One at $5,000, four at $4,000 each, three at $3,500 each, five at $3,000 each, four at $2,750 each, five at $2,500 each; total, $70,000.

Clerks, stenographers, and messengers in Washington, D. C.: One at $2,000, 3 at $1,800 each, 6 at $1,600 each, 10 at $1,400 each; 5 at $1,200 each; total, $37,000.

Regional officers: Four at $3,500 each, eight at $3,000 each; total, $38,000.

Clerks and stenographers in regional offices: Four at $1,400 each, four at $1,200 each; total, $10,400.

For printing, stationery, illustrative material, $75,000.

For traveling and subsistence, $30,000.

Rent of regional offices, $5,000.

Part-time expert help in preparing material for teaching, $50,000.

Ten short-course training schools for supervisors and directors and those who will train teachers, $20,000.

Incidentals and contingencies, $7,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what is the necessity for making appropriations for regional directors or regional organizations? I am not sure that I caught the language accurately.

Mr. KENYON. The thought is that the country will be divided for this work into different regions; somewhat similar to the plan of the regional Federal banks.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that that is unwise? With this organization which functions here in Washington, with the personnel which it will have, with the purpose to have a nation-wide plan in dealing with this matter, and in view of the fact that appropriations are to be made directly to the State where they themselves make corresponding appropriations, is there any necessity for any intermediary organization?

Mr. KENYON. I do not feel that way about it. This is a part of the national organization; it can not all be done here. I will state to the Senator that what I object to is cutting it down as it has been cut. I think that is a great mistake; I think the full amount of $300,000 was none too much to be used for all of the work of section 3; but I was persuaded to consent to that by the Senator's colleague.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I should like to see it cut still more. I think we are building up too much machinery for every appropriation which we make. There seems to be too much of a desire to look after the machinery and rather too little desire to look after the things to be accomplished by the machinery. The result is we too often have more sound and more noise than we have results. It is machinery and still more machinery; Federal organizations and still more Federal organizations; bureaus and still more bureaus; divisions and still more divisions; functionaries and still more functionaries; until the land is filled with representatives of the Government of the United States. It is not any longer a Government of the States, a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people; it is a Government of officeholders, for officeholders, and for the benefit of officeholders. When they can not get enough out of the municipalities and out of the States then they come to Congress and get it out of the Treasury of the United States. There is a vast amount of solicitude manifested by Senators and by Representatives for officials and for officialdom, for functionaries, and for a paternalistic, autocratic bureaucracy.

I am getting tired and disgusted with the whole system of Federal interposition in the affairs of the States which leads to the creation of an army of Federal employees which will fill Washington and take possession of the States and eat out the substance of the people. If we must appropriate for the States to aid them in performing the functions placed upon them, it would be far better to do so directly than to have the funds filter through the hands of a multitude of Federal officials. I do not know where the end is going to be, Mr. President.

A moment ago I called attention to something which I thought at first must be a mistake, but when I read it in a reputable paper, such as the Christian Science Monitor, and when my colleague stated that the matter had come to his attention as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I was convinced, of course, of the verity of the report. The effect of the report is that the Public Health Service of the Government is going into the States and going to make a survey of every home, examine every child, classify the children of the people, find out their infantile diseases and their ailments, and, of course, their physiological idiosyncracies. Then will come an examination of their mental status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. KING. Are we operating now under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The five-minute rule applies to the discussion of amendments.

Mr. KING. I can only appeal to the good sense of the American people to repudiate the wild, fantastic, and un-American policies which we are adopting and which in the end will culminate in the overthrow of this Republic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to insert as an independent section the following:

In the administration of this act the laws of the several States providing for the separation of the races in the schools therein shall be conformed to and observed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer that amendment on behalf of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], who is ill at his home. The amendment as read is a modification of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Tennessee on January 22, and in its modified form, as I understand, it is entirely satisfactory to the chairman of the committee. So I merely ask for a vote.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator showed me that amendment, and I see no objection to it, but I should like to have it again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. KENYON. That amendment applies only to the separation of the races in the schools.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose that the law providing for race separation also provided that a certain percentage of the appropriation so made should be allotted to one race and a larger percentage to the other race?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KENYON. That is in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment provides that the laws of the several States shall be conformed to.

Mr. KENYON. As to the separation of races. There may be some objection of the kind referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin, but I think the whole bill is broad enough to let the Secretary of the Interior govern that question, because the bill provides that if the fund is not used justly he may refuse to permit the apportionment to be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin and to other Senators that my understanding of the amendment is that it is not intended in the slightest degree to cut out anybody in any State from the benefits of the bill. The only purpose of the amendment is to provide for observing the laws separating the races in some of the States, like California and a number of the Southern States.

Mr. KENYON. Personally, it seems to me it is not necessary now, because we are not going into the States under this proposed law and try in any way to interfere with education within the States. It is purely a stimulating proposition. I think that error has crept into this debate and has aroused a good deal of opposition to the bill that should not have been here. I can see no substantial difficulty in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to ask a question, and the Senator can answer it in my time. I have not been able to understand why the amendment was offered, for it seems to me that it is entirely unnecessary; and I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think, even without the amendment, that the laws of those States providing for separate schools would be conformed to without interfering in any way with the carrying out of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not say about that. They have the separation in a number of the States—the Southern States, and California, probably, and one or two other Western States—and my colleague, Mr. SHIELDS, after an examination of the law, thought it would be wisest and safest to put this kind of a statement in the bill. I can see no objection to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator in offering the amendment, and his colleague in proposing it, have no such thing in mind as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, I suppose?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever. I have none, and I am sure my colleague had no such thing in mind. We merely wish to conform to the State laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That such charge as prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior be exacted of each person attending any school maintained in whole or in part from any funds provided for under the provisions of this act as will reimburse the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this bill as it was originally drafted would have cost the taxpayers of the country $85,000,000. It has been gradually brought down until upon its face it will take out of the Federal Treasury $6,500,000; but the law will be upon the statute books, and each year it will be up to Congress to say how much will be appropriated. There is no limit as to how much can be appropriated when the law is once upon the books.

In 1918 we passed legislation giving to the Bureau of Naturalization the right to educate people applying for naturalization in this country. They put on a great scheme of education. There are now practically 3,000 communities in the United States where aliens are being educated so that they can become naturalized, and all that work has cost the Government of the United States nothing, although they have performed a great service in educating the foreign population. Instead of costing the United States anything, that bureau has turned into the Treasury over $500,000. They charged a fee for naturalizing these people, and a part of the fee went toward the purchase of copies of a book called the Student's Textbook, that dealt with the subjects that are provided for in the Sterling amendment, adopted on last Saturday.

Here is what the report of the Commissioner of Naturalization says touching this matter:

FEDERAL FINANCIAL SUPPORT UNNECESSARY.

It is only by supporting this work that has been so successfully inaugurated and carried on, at no national expense but through the expenditure of millions of dollars annually by the various communities throughout the Nation, that their desires may be made possible. The Federal cost of administration is borne by the seekers after citizenship; all other costs are maintained by the communities in which the schools are organized. This seems to be the proper distribution of this financial burden; those who are to derive the benefits should bear the expense.

This can not be contradicted. This bill provides for the education of aliens in this country up to 50 years of age. Some of those men are making as high as $10 and $15 a day, perhaps. Why should the Federal Government, if the bill should pass, bear the expense of teaching those people how to read, write, and understand the English language? This work is now being carried on through the Department of Labor, and to pass this bill will be but a duplication of that work.

Whatever cost is involved in the present plan is paid by the beneficiaries who are seeking naturalization; and so, if the amendment I have proposed is adopted, it should not cost the taxpayers of this country this enormous amount. The cost ought to be paid by the men who are going to get the benefits of it. They are able to pay it, and why should they not?

I heard the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] say in his speech that up in the works of the United States Steel Corporation there were thousands of these foreigners who had been brought over, I believe, by the United States Steel Corporation. Ought the Treasury of the United States bear the expense of teaching those people how to read and write? They are making money; they are abundantly able to bear it; and so, if this amendment is adopted, this charge must be paid by them. It will be figured out by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Treasury of the United States will be reimbursed to that amount.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have a clipping from the New York Times of this morning, dealing with this subject, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the article will be read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Times of Monday, Jan. 26, 1919.]

TO EXTEND SCHOOLS FOR ALIENS.

Americanization work of the League of Foreign Born Citizens is to be greatly enlarged soon by the establishment of additional branch schools in The Bronx, Harlem, Brooklyn, and Richmond Hill, Long Island, according to announcement yesterday by its president, Nathaniel Phillips. The league now operates two branches, at 407 East Seventy-third Street and 95 Second Avenue, where foreigners are taught cardinal American principles and prepare for naturalization. To discuss present-day problems of naturalization and plans for widening the scope of the work of the league, Mrs. Vincent Astor, member of the executive committee, has issued invitations for a meeting to be held in her home, 840 Fifth Avenue, February 5.

Mr. CALDER. I simply want to add to the statement just read that this work is being done without any cost to the Federal Government. Part of the expense is paid by those seeking education in the English language and the rest by private subscription. I commend the article to the Senators interested in this subject.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

It seems to me that by the charge provided for in his amendment we would defeat the very purposes of the bill. Of course our general system of common-school education is a free common-school system, where the student attends without the payment of any charge or any tuition fee whatsoever. If there is reason generally for a free public-school system, I think there is added reason why, considering the class of people that we are seeking to educate by this bill, it should be a free school system; I mean free from the standpoint of any charge or any tuition fee. It seems to me quite inconsistent that we should have a compulsory school system and charge the pupil for attending that school, which the law compels him to attend. From the very nature of things, it seems to me it must necessarily be free. We can not compel a man to go to school and then pay a tuition fee for his attendance.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Does it not seem to the Senator from South Dakota rather inconsistent that certain States in this Union do not provide for compulsory education, and yet in this bill you do provide, for those States, compulsory education between the ages of 16 and 21? Is not that a rather inconsistent position?

Mr. STERLING. No; it is not an inconsistent position, Mr. President. This is for the special purpose of Americanizing persons who are to be citizens of the United States. Of course, the education provided for will pertain for the most part—and that is the main object of the bill, I suppose—to the alien element in our population who are either illiterate or who can not read, write, or speak the English language. For the most part it will pertain to those persons. It is not a State matter alone. It is a governmental, a national, matter, quite as much, if not more, than it is a State matter.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I believe.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the committee ever have before it the head of this educational training bureau of the naturalization department of the Department of Labor?

Mr. STERLING. I am not sure; not at any time when I was present at a meeting of the committee, and I think not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the committee give any consideration to the great work that that branch of the Government is doing?

Mr. STERLING. I am not sure as to that. The chairman of the committee can answer better than I can in that regard. I think there were two or three meetings of the committee at which I was not present. Whether or not there was any hearing of that kind I am not quite sure, but my belief is that there was not.

Mr. HARRISON. In forming his conclusions, did the Senator give any consideration to the work that that department was doing?

Mr. STERLING. Not particularly; no.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was not aware, then, that they had established these schools in 3,000 communities in the United States to educate these foreigners?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, well, I think that is aside from the question.

Mr. HARRISON. Why is it aside from the question? It is doing exactly the work that the Senator proposes in this bill to do.

Mr. STERLING. It is aside from the question involved in the Senator's proposed amendment, which is to impose a charge on all those who attend the school or who avail themselves of the school facilities provided in this bill. It would not do, I think, if I may say so.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator thinks that in the case of one who is 45 or 50 years of age, a foreigner in this country, who is making good wages, five or ten dollars a day, it would be an undue burden upon him to pay the tuition required to go to school in order to help himself?

Mr. STERLING. No; I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not think it would be an undue burden upon the foreigner who is earning his $8 to $10 a day; but there are thousands upon thousands of them who are not earning that. There are more who are not earning over $4.65 a day than there are who are earning more than that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], of course, destroys the purpose of the bill, and its adoption would be equivalent to defeating the bill. I do not know whether that is the intention of it or not.

I have noticed in the debate that those who are opposed to the whole proposition continually refer to the work being done by the Department of Labor as being exactly the same work, and this being a duplicate of that. Some of these gentlemen, I think, opposed that provision for the Department of Labor—a $200,000 appropriation for the Department of Labor for 2,000 schools, it is claimed. That would be $100 a school. What kind of a school are you going to have with a $100 appropriation for the payment of the teachers for a number of months? Of course, there is a general impression that you can employ teachers for about nothing. That work is confined solely to preparing men for naturalization. It has been attempted to take over this entire matter by the Department of Labor, but it is now being used solely as an argument, by those who are opposed to this bill, to destroy the bill. It is not a duplication of work. It is carried on there in a small way. There is no great, broad purpose as in the case of this bill, and it ought to be entirely in the hands of one department, and that ought to be the Bureau of Education.

It seems to me the mistake the Senator from Mississippi makes, in compelling these men to pay for their education and to pay for attending school in a land where we pride ourselves upon free schools, is that this work is not entirely for the benefit of the men who are learning the English language, or are being educated. This bill is on the theory that ignorance and illiteracy is a danger to this country, a danger to us, a danger to our institutions, the greatest danger that we have, a greater danger than any danger from the outside; and the purpose of this bill is to protect ourselves and our country, not to educate these men merely for their own gratification or their own advancement. That is the error, it seems to me, in the argument as made by the Senator from Mississippi.

It seems to me that if this is adopted we may as well abandon the whole proposition. It is contrary to the genius of our institutions; it is contrary to our great system of free schools; and while there are plenty of foreigners who can pay for this education, they can just as well pay for the education of their children, and we do not require that of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harding	Lenroot	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Harris	McKellar	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Nugent	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
France	King	Pittman	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Sheppard	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. SIMMONS answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCNARY, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. PHELAN, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WALSH of Montana, Mr. CALDER, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. LODGE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I wanted to use a little time on this amendment for the purpose of explaining another feature of the bill. I may say, incidentally, regarding this particular amendment, that it seems to me if it were adopted it would practically nullify the purposes of the whole bill. Therefore I shall oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

However, I desire, Mr. President, to call attention to some other provisions of the bill. I am a member of the committee which reported the bill. Previous to its being reported I called attention to certain conditions which might make it necessary to amend the bill, and it was understood at the time that some amendment would be necessary in regard to the matters which were then discussed.

I am very much in favor of the bill, but, in my judgment, unless the bill is amended there will not be one dollar of the money used under the bill in any State in the Union, if the provisions of the bill are enforced. In other words, in my judgment the bill will prove to be inoperative, and it is for the purpose of putting life into it and making it operative that I am going to suggest an amendment which I will offer when the bill comes into the Senate. The bill requires under section 7 that—

> The Secretary of the Interior shall (a) withhold the unpaid portion of an allotment to any State whenever he determines that any portion of the sums allotted are not being properly applied for the purposes of this act, or may (b) deduct—

And so on. Under section 9 it is provided that—

> The Secretary of the Interior shall annually ascertain whether the several States are using or are prepared to use the money allotted to or received by them under this act, and shall certify, on or before the 10th day of August of each year, to the Secretary of the Treasury (a) each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith—

And so on.

Mr. President, let us turn to page 5, subdivision (e). Under that provision before any State can receive any money at all it shall "require all resident persons, whether citizens of the United States or aliens, 16 years of age or over and under 21 years of age, who are not physically or mentally disqualified and who are illiterate," and so on, to attend school for a definite period of time. That makes that provision as inflexible as the laws of the Medes and Persians. There are two exceptions—where a person is suffering from a physical or mental disability. No others are provided for. I will venture to assert that there will not be a State in the Union which will require all its citizens who are not physically or mentally disqualified to attend and receive that amount of instruction.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, they must be illiterate or unable to speak, read, or write the English language.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that, but I mean all those illiterates who are unable to read and speak, except those who are physically and mentally disqualified. The Senator knows that in many of the States of the Union there are laws to compel the attendance of all children of certain ages, and the Senator knows that those laws do not result in securing the actual attendance of all who come within their provisions. It is easy to imagine many circumstances which might temporarily or during the whole year prevent people who are illiterate and who are not physically or mentally disqualified from receiving instruction in the schools, and we can not frame a law in a State which would bring about that result. Moreover, we do not want to attempt anything here which is either impossible or impracticable, and therefore, when the bill comes into the Senate, I shall propose to amend by inserting after the word "require" the words "as far as possible and practicable." That would still leave it within the control of the Secretary of the Interior to say whether proper provisions had been made or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator talking on the amendment or on the bill?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am talking on the amendment at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and vote "nay."

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call resulted—yeas 4, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—4.

Dial	Harris	Harrison	King

NAYS—37.

Ball	Hale	New	Sterling
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Phelan	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
France	Kirby	Pomerene	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gerry	Lodge	Sherman
Gore	McKellar	Smoot
Gronna	McNary	Spencer

NOT VOTING—54.

Ashurst	Dillingham	Henderson	McCormick
Bankhead	Edge	Johnson, Calif.	McCumber
Beckham	Elkins	Johnson, S. Dak.	McLean
Borah	Fall	Jones, Wash.	Moses
Brandegee	Fernald	Kendrick	Myers
Calder	Fletcher	Keyes	Nelson
Colt	Gay	Knox	Newberry
Culberson	Harding	La Follette	Overman
Owen	Reed	Smith, Md.	Wadsworth
Page	Robinson	Smith, S. C.	Walsh, Mont.
Penrose	Shields	Stanley	Warren
Pittman	Simmons	Swanson	Williams
Poindexter	Smith, Ariz.	Thomas
Ransdell	Smith, Ga.	Underwood

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the call of the roll 4 Senators have voted "yea" and 37 have voted "nay," and there are 3 Senators present and not voting, disclosing that there is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll for a quorum.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Harris	Lenroot	Poindexter
Capper	Harrison	McCormick	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Dial	Kellogg	Nugent	Sterling
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Overman	Sutherland
Gronna	King	Phelan	Trammell
Hale	Kirby	Phipps	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness of his wife.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. BALL, Mr. COLT, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HARDING, Mr. GERRY, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. MOSES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], upon which the yeas and nays were once called and disclosed the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will again call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I am paired with him during that absence. I find I can transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I do so, and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in reference to my pair as on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BALL. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I understand that my pair, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], who is absent, I believe, on account of illness. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—4.

Dial	Harris	Harrison	Williams

NAYS—46.

Ball	Harding	Myers	Spencer
Calder	Hitchcock	New	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Townsend
Colt	Kellogg	Phelan	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Reed	Watson
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Hale	McNary	Smoot

NOT VOTING—45.

Ashurst	Gay	Moses	Simmons
Bankhead	Gore	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Henderson	Newberry	Smith, Md.
Borah	Johnson, Calif.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Stanley
Culberson	Kendrick	Page	Swanson
Dillingham	Keyes	Penrose	Thomas
Edge	King	Pittman	Underwood
Elkins	Knox	Ransdell	Warren
Fall	La Follette	Robinson
Fernald	McCumber	Sherman
Fletcher	McLean	Shields

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there is an amendment on page 1. The language beginning in line 7, on that page, embracing the words "and with the Territories and possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands" should be stricken from the bill. I was under the impression that those words were out of the bill, but I move to strike them out now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out "and with the Territories and possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands."

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I think the words at the end of line 8, and in line 9, should also go out of the bill. Otherwise there will be a repetition.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is correct; the remainder of the section embracing the words "in the education of illiterates" should also be stricken out, and I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will now be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "language," it is proposed to strike out "and with the Territories and possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands, in the education of illiterates."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] had some amendments that he wanted to propose. He has stepped out for a moment. I have an amendment which I wish to propose, to strike out everything after the enacting clause and insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the promotion of the public schools in the instruction of candidates for citizenship now being carried on by the Division of Citizenship Training of the Bureau of Naturalization is hereby extended to include all persons of the age of 16 years and upward who shall attend classes of instruction conducted or maintained by any civic, educational, community, racial, or other organization, under the supervision of the public-school authorities, and the provisions of the ninth subdivision of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), as amended by the act of May 9, 1908 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 542), are hereby made applicable to this added authority. In discharging this additional authority the director of citizenship is also authorized to disseminate information regarding the institutions of the United States Government in such manner as will best stimulate loyalty to those institutions, making use of the means heretofore provided and through use of pictures, slides, and motion pictures. The motion pictures and motion-picture negatives in the possession of the various branches of the Government shall also be available for these purposes. In this work the aid of civic, educational, community, racial, and other organizations may be secured by the director of citizenship, who shall compile statistical information as to aliens in their relation to citizenship. The foregoing shall apply to the residents of the Panama Canal Zone.

SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000 to carry out the foregoing provisions and purposes of this act, including expenses incidental thereto, and for personal services in the District of Columbia, to be available to June 30, 1921, or until expended. The amounts hereby appropriated shall be in addition to all other allotments for positions in the work of the Division of Citizenship Training heretofore made from appropriations for the Bureau of Naturalization.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that amendment is designed to broaden the authority now exercised by the Citizenship Division of the Naturalization Bureau. That work has been efficiently done by these people. I have here some books that are issued by them on good citizenship, Americanism, and so forth. As stated before in my remarks, they have established in practically 3,000 communities these schools for the education of foreigners. If this amendment should be adopted, it would give them more money to operate on. It would allow them to place this literature in the hands of every person, irrespective of whether he wanted to be naturalized or not. It would give them the use of the motion pictures also.

If the Senators on the Republican side of this Chamber really want to practice some economy and really desire to Americanize somebody in this country, they have an opportunity here. I noticed in the morning's newspaper that the steering committee of the other House have lopped off a million dollars, I believe, from the appropriation for the enforcement of the prohibition law in the deficiency bill just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the other House.

Let me call the attention of the Senate, in discussing this proposition, to the fact that in the sundry civil bill at the first session since the other side came into control the department requested $2,900,000 to enforce the immigration laws, and in the following deficiency bill they requested $300,000, totaling $3,200,000. They were allowed $2,600,000, lopping off $600,000 from the important work of enforcing the immigration laws of this country. For the deportation of aliens $350,000 was requested, and to enforce the alien-enemy act $600,000 was requested by the department, and the committee and the Congress disallowed the whole amount and gave them nothing in the deficiency act. In the next deficiency bill $150,000 was requested for deportation and $100,000 was given.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator made a statement that I think perhaps could be misconstrued. I know the Senator does not want to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not want to give a wrong impression.

Mr. SMOOT. It is true that no appropriation was made for the deportation of aliens in the deficiency appropriation bill, and it is true that $350,000 was requested, as I remember, for that purpose; but in an appropriation bill, before a deficiency bill was presented, there was an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that the estimate was $3,200,000, and only $2,600,000 was allowed. Their estimate was $3,200,000. In other words, there was a cutting down of $600,000 at that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe we cut it quite enough.

Mr. HARRISON. Perhaps not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say further that that estimate was cut after a most thorough investigation into the items to which the appropriation was to apply; and the Committee on Appropriations considered that there was no question, upon the statements made by the officials of the department themselves, that it was not necessary to appropriate the amount of the estimate.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not discussing that. I am discussing the proposition that the department estimated for so much money, and this economy Congress has cut it down so much money, to deport these alien enemies from this country and to enforce the immigration laws of this country. I go further. In this last bill the Department of Justice requested $1,000,000 to prosecute enemy aliens and they were granted only $750,000 of it. For naturalization, during the first session of this Congress, they requested $862,900 and were allowed only $450,000. In the last deficiency bill they requested $268,600 and were given nothing. So we have this situation before us——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I am speaking on the bill now, Mr. President. I believe under the rule I have 15 minutes on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Mississippi spoken on the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the time the Senator has already taken part of the 15 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was on his amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the rule I can talk five minutes at a time on an amendment that is up. I have not talked on the bill the 15 minutes allowed under the rule.

Mr. KENYON. I raise the point that the 5 minutes already spoken should be taken out of the 15.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, give me 10 minutes more, then. I shall not utilize all the time.

I merely want to say that here are the departments requesting from Congress money to enforce the immigration law and to deport the alien enemies in this country and to put our hands upon part of the foreigners in this country. The Congress is doing nothing in that instance, but is trying to economize. Here they come with a bill that in its original state would have taxed the people of this country $85,000,000 to educate some foreigners in this country who perhaps need not have been admitted. As I have stated before, I should like to see the immigration laws more stringent. I should like to see immigrants kept out of this country for a definite length of time; but the Citizenship Division in the Bureau of Naturalization are doing exactly the work that is proposed to be done by this bill. They can do the work just as efficiencly on the outlay of $300,000 that is proposed in my amendment. If the Senators on the Republican side of the Chamber really want to economize, and do not desire to deceive the American people, let them help us on this side to adopt this amendment, appropriating only $300,000, getting the same results that it was proposed to get by the bill in its original form, which sought to appropriate $85,000,000.

Mr. KENYON, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. DIAL addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wanted to take 15 minutes on the bill, but I do not believe it would be fair for me to do so if other Senators really want to take 5 minutes on any of these amendments in good faith. If they do, I will not presume to take 15 minutes at this late hour, but I will take 5 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wanted to call attention to the amendment that has been tendered; but if the Senator wants to speak upon it, I will wait until he gets through.

Mr. KENYON. I want to make some remarks on the bill. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], I know, rose. If he wants to take five minutes, I will give way to him. I should like five minutes before the debate closes.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I shall take only one minute.

I have been wondering during the last few weeks who is going to do the work of the world. I must say that I think the Senate is the most considerate body I ever saw. Here some time ago they passed a bill, I believe, that no one under 16, or perhaps 14, years of age could work. I think that law has been set aside by the Supreme Court. Now, I believe there is some talk of pensioning everybody over 50 years old. Then we come here to-day with this bill to force everybody from 16 to 21 years who can not read or write or understand the English language to go to school, and to allow anybody else in the same condition up to 50 years of age to go to school. I had been considerably disturbed about who would do the work of the world until I saw in the paper a day or two ago that in Russia the Bolsheviki are going to make people work 12 hours a day, and therefore I think the country will be safe when everybody goes to school.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there have been some of the most remarkable arguments made on this bill that anyone has ever heard on this floor. They have shown a lack of knowledge of the purposes of this bill, and in many instances, apparently, those making the arguments have never read the bill. One of the great purposes of this bill at the commencement, given full consideration by the committee, was to start on the pathway of making this a one-language Nation.

The Vice President, in a speech in Florida a few days ago, with that good fund of common sense that he possesses, took that position, that we should become a one-language Nation.

The Senator from Mississippi, in speaking on this bill a few days ago, took the position that to become a good American you must learn to speak our language, or practically that.

That is one of the things we are trying to do. Now, we have a bill here, starting out on that plan, enlarged somewhat by the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], to teach in these schools the principles of the American Government, some American history, and the principles of civil government; and I am astounded, where we have this great wave of unrest sweeping over the world and in our country, this Bolshevism, that Senators who have been the strongest on this floor against Bolshevism have been strongly against this bill. I can not understand it. It is to be regretted.

Our purpose has been to help meet the arguments of the I. W. W.'s the arguments of the reds, the arguments of the Bolshevists, with arguments as to what the American Government is, what a land of equal opportunity and of exact justice this is. To hear some of these arguments one would think we were trying to interfere with the colored question in the South, that we were trying to waste the money of the people on this fantastic proposition, by which the Federal Government is trying to help lend a friendly hand to the States in this great work.

We are talked to by the junior Senator from Mississippi about the lack of economy of the Republican Party. I am sorry this thing gets into politics; it has no place there. I am sorry you ever dragged this question of races in here; it has no place in here. Politics has no place here.

The Republican Party has been extravagant, as you have been extravagant, and it does not lie in the mouths of either side to talk very much about the extravagance of the other side. When you talk to Republicans about economy, I say to you that there is no economy in withholding money to stamp out the blight of ignorance and illiteracy in this country. It is the worst enemy to the Republic; and I do not believe the people of the United States are going to view with any satisfaction the cheeseparing of this Congress in this great work of Americanizing the illiterates and the foreigners in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator mind one question?

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think that a dollar spent in preventing the admission of illiteracy and ignorance is better than a dollar spent in trying to cure it after it has been permitted to come in?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but if you have not spent the dollar preventing their coming in, then you would better spend a dollar curing the disease, would you not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should say you had better deport them about as soon as you could.

Mr. KENYON. Deport them; yes. Does the Senator think that he is going to solve the difficulties of this country by deporting people?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not.

Mr. KENYON. You can deport your Berkmans and your Emma Goldmans but you do not deport their ideas. That is the trouble.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree thoroughly with the Senator about that. I was merely talking about deporting ignorance, and there is a way of doing that, and that is to refuse to allow ignorance to vote, and after a while ignorance will go on back home.

Mr. KENYON. Why does not the Senator do it? Our committee has tried to do something, and we meet nothing but criticism.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My State has done it.

Mr. KENYON. Show us something better.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My State does not allow illiterates to vote.

Mr. KENYON. No; I understand that, and so does everybody else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Massachusetts does not allow it and Connecticut does not allow it.

Mr. KENYON. Let us discuss the economy question. You gentlemen from certain States, wherever you have a flood or a fire, come in here and ask help of the Federal Government. I have voted for appropriations to put seeds down in your States, where you had floods that wiped out large areas of your territory. You did not talk then, as the Senator from Mississippi did the other day, about "the miserable Federal Government keeping its hands off our shoulders and its hands out of our pockets."

You have had appropriations for the eradication of sheep scab and cattle diseases, appropriations to teach the people how to raise hogs, for experiments in dairy industry, and in preparing horses for breeding for military purposes; experiments in poultry feeding, hog cholera, teaching farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese, fighting every kind of a bug that ever came into your States, blights on pecan orchards, and fighting the boll weevil; and has not the Federal Government always been willing to help you? Is there any worse boll weevil than that of ignorance? Is there any worse blight than that of illiteracy?

Talk about economy! There were $150,000,000 asked for before a House committee by a Cabinet officer the other day for foreign nations, without the blink of an eye. This is for our own Nation and our own people.

A billion and a half dollars is asked for for the Army and Navy, and yet a little expense for the education of our people meets with opposition.

That is not the kind of economy the American people want. They are willing to spend every dollar that is necessary to give every boy and girl in this country an education, and if a State will not do it, it is the duty of the Federal Government to do so.

The Senator from Mississippi can talk about it being no affair of the Federal Government. He loses track entirely of the dual relationship of our citizens. If your States are going to teach Bolshevism and I. W. W.ism, do you tell me it is no concern of the Federal Government? I tell you we could put schools right into the States and teach the contrary doctrine.

Out at Gary, where we found there were tons and tons of red literature, was it directed against the States? No; it was directed against the Federal Government. The Bolsheviks and I. W. W.'s are not trying to overturn States. They are trying to change the Federal Government, and when we educate and put up our ideals against theirs it is to save the Federal Government. You can not reach it by bludgeons, and you can not reach it in any way but by education. We are still spelling this Nation with a big "N," and will continue so to do.

When you get through taking all of these appropriations for all of these materialistic things it will be time then to talk to us about stopping helping the States.

Mr. President, we are met with the argument that there is duplication. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is, like his other amendments, to destroy this bill. We have had other Senators arguing that this work was being duplicated. Two or three hundred thousand dollars expended by the Department of Labor. What the States have done, what the Bureau of Naturalization has done, is answered by the figures on these charts, showing 8,500,000 people in this country who can not read or write the English language, and if that is the record of the Bureau of Naturalization, then we are in our proper sphere in asking that something be done by other branches of the Government.

The most important question of this hour is to Americanize the American Nation. You can not do it except by education. The school systems in this country are breaking down, and they need a national stimulant, not regulation; and no one wants to interfere with the educational facilities of the States. Millions of anarchistic magazines are going through the mails of this country, poisoning the souls of millions, preaching the doctrine of despair and hopelessness. It is said that America sleeps until the eleventh hour, and then she awakes. America has slept on this question until the eleventh hour, but now she is awake, and the people know that it is a question for the Nation to solve, and they are going to help solve it. They are going to meet the doctrine of despair by the doctrine of hope; they are going to meet the doctrine of untruth by the doctrine of truth; and these people are going to see the light and know the truth, and the truth will make them free.

We have heard a good deal about Thomas Jefferson in these discussions—Thomas Jefferson, the man who, when he came to prepare the epitaph for his tombstone, forgot that he had been governor, that he had been Secretary of State, that he had been minister to France, that he had twice been President of the United States; he forgot all that in his great life's work, but he remembered what he had done for freedom, and liberty, and education, and he prepared that epitaph:

Here was buried
Thomas Jefferson,
Author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

Thomas Jefferson was not afraid of education. Thomas Jefferson must have turned in his grave when he heard men on this floor argue that there was no need of education, and that really it was a bad thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. No Senator has said we needed no education. Senators who have opposed the bill have said it should come from the States; but no Senator has said there was no need for education.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Mississippi has not said it.

Mr. HARRISON. No; and I have not heard it said.

Mr. KENYON. But I still say it has been said by Senators on this floor during this debate.

Mr. President, I perhaps feel more deeply on this than I should. I do not intend to impugn the motives of any man. There is one town in the steel district of 23,000 inhabitants where only four or five thousand could speak the English language. I feel that we have to get away from this polyglot, boarding-house idea of this country; we have to face the issue and make this a one-language Nation, and that the English language; and if these aliens will not learn our language, they can not become good citizens, and they will have to go back to other lands for which they care more than for this. This bill will mean more returns to the Nation in better citizenship than any bill passed for many a day. I insert as part of my remarks a letter to Senator COLT from the National India Rubber Co., of Bristol, R. I. It is full of good thought on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Their being no objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL INDIA RUBBER CO.,
Bristol, R. I., January 24, 1920.

Hon. LEBARON B. COLT,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE: I noticed in the Tribune last night some remarks made by you in the debate on the Kenyon Americanization bill in the Senate, and as I am very much interested in this bill I would like to have a copy of the RECORD showing your remarks in full.

I know that I have spoken to you a good many times about the Americanization work we do here, and for your information I want to say that at the present time we have 160 pupils in our Americanization school. No compulsion whatever is used with regard to our employees attending this school. The school hours are from 8 in the morning to 5 at night, and two teachers act as instructors. Each class attends school five hours a week—that is, an hour each day.

During the month of December our attendance averaged 98 per cent, so that you can see the great interest that the employees take in this themselves. Some of the classes for two or three months back have had 100 per cent attendance, which is really remarkable.

Of course, instruction is held on company time, and the employees do not lose anything thereby, but it would be a treat to you if you could see these classes in operation and the interest and eagerness with which the pupils follow the work of the teachers.

We have just started in a new class of 16 men, who have not been in this country over two weeks, most of them Portuguese who arrived on the last boat in Providence from the Azores. They could not speak a word of English when they got here. In five days they have made remarkable strides, being able to talk quite a little, tell their own name, where they live, who they work for, and to pick out various objects around the class room and call them by name in English.

I agree heartily with your remarks on compulsion, and I think we have a great problem before us, which is really one for the general betterment of the whole community.

With best wishes, I am.

Sincerely, yours,

ANDREW W. ANTHONY,
Industrial Relations Manager.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has prepared an amendment to the bill which meets with my entire approval, covering the matter which I discussed this afternoon. I call the attention of the Senate to that fact, so that when the amendment is presented, after we begin voting, Senators will understand that it is entirely satisfactory all around.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the omission of a word in his proposed amendment. The amendment, as I caught it, was:

The foregoing shall apply to the residents of the Panama Canal Zone.

It seems to me that the word "also" is left out; that it should read "shall also apply."

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I should like to have that modification made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed modification.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "shall," insert the word "also," so that it will read:

The foregoing shall also apply to the residents of the Panama Canal Zone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this amendment is a bill that has already been introduced in the House; it was referred to the committee, the committee reported it to the House, and it is now on the calendar of the House for consideration at a very early date.

I see that the hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, and I can take no more time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. NORRIS. May we have the amendment reported?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the promotion of the public schools in the instruction of candidates for citizenship now being carried on by the Division of Citizenship Training of the Bureau of Naturalization is hereby extended to include all persons of the age of 16 years and upward who shall attend classes of instruction conducted or maintained by any civic, educational, community, racial, or other organization, under the supervision of the public-school authorities, and the provisions of the ninth subdivision of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), as amended by the act of May 9, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 542), are hereby made applicable to this added authority. In discharging this additional authority the director of citizenship is also authorized to disseminate information regarding the institutions of the United States Government in such manner as will best stimulate loyalty to those institutions, making use of the means heretofore provided and through use of pictures, slides, and motion pictures. The motion pictures and motion-picture negatives in the possession of the various branches of the Government of an educational nature may also be available for these purposes. In this work the aid of civic, educational, community, racial, and other organizations may be secured by the director of citizenship, who shall compile statistical information as to aliens in their relation to citizenship. The foregoing shall also apply to the residents of the Panama Canal Zone.

SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000 to carry out the foregoing provisions and purposes of this act, including expenses incidental thereto, and for personal services in the District of Columbia, to be available to June 30, 1921, and until expended. The amounts hereby appropriated shall be in additional to all other allotments for positions in the work of the Division of Citizenship Training heretofore made from appropriations for the Bureau of Naturalization.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. In section 1, in that part of the amendment which reads "the motion pictures and motion-picture negatives in the possession of the various branches of the Government shall also be available for these purposes," I move to strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may" and after the word "Government" and before the word "may" to insert the words "of an educational nature," so that the sentence will read:

The motion pictures and motion-picture negatives in the possession of the various branches of the Government of an educational nature may also be available for these purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. That amendment is thoroughly agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question then is on the amendment as modified.

On a division the amendment as modified was rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 5, page 1, after the word "of" and before the word "illiterates," insert the word "alien," so as to read "cooperate with the Federal States in the education of alien illiterates."

The bill is ostensibly for the Americanization of aliens, but it is now sought to be used as an entering wedge for the United States to take charge of the educational work of the States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand there is to be no debate on any amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is to be no debate. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 as amended add the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to increase the compensation now provided for any position or office or person or official in said Interior Department or Bureau of Education: And provided further, That no compensation or salaries paid out of said sum shall be in excess of such as may be paid to employees of the Government in other departments of the Government for like or similar services.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. On page 1, in line 3, I move to strike out the word "Interior" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Labor" and to strike out the words "Bureau of Education" and insert in lieu thereof the words "division of citizenship training," so that as amended the section will read:

That the Secretary of Labor, through the Division of Citizenship Training, is hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the several States in the education of alien illiterates—

And so forth. The amendment merely transfers the work from the Department of the Interior to the Citizenship Division of the Department of Labor.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I reserve the right to offer an amendment to subdivision (e), page 5, when we get into the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not have to reserve any right; he has that right.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to an amendment that was adopted in Committee of the Whole. I understand I can not offer it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can reserve a separate vote on that.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to do that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has reserved for a separate vote the amendment to subdivision (e) of section 5, lines 13 and 14. The question is on concurring in all other amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lines 13 and 14, page 5, strike out the words "and approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted when the Chair was stating something with regard to other amendments. I wanted to reserve a separate vote on one other committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did not reserve it.

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted and did not hear the Chair, and do not know now whether the Chair has reserved it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated that all amendments except this one were concurred in.

Mr. NORRIS. I intended to ask that the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, on page 5, paragraph (e), be reserved for a separate vote, but I understand it is the same amendment reserved by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it is the same amendment, but I desire to do differently from what the Senator from Nebraska wishes to do.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On lines 13 and 14, page 5 of the reprint, strike out the words "and approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HARRISON. I think it was an inadvertence that that was left in the amendment. It is stricken out in other places.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. My amendment applies to the same amendment, although it is in the form of a substitute for it. I presume the vote would first come on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for paragraph (e), page 5 of the reprint, striking out all of paragraph (e) and inserting what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As a substitute for subsection (e) of section 5 insert:

(e) Provide by law for free schools that can be attended by residents of a State of any age, who are unable to speak, read, or write the English language, where instruction in the English language can be received for not less than 200 hours per annum.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 8, after the word "disqualified," it is proposed to insert "or whose attendance on the classes of instruction hereinafter mentioned is otherwise impossible or impracticable."

Mr. SMOOT. May we have paragraph (e) as amended read in full in order that we may really see what it means?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Including the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Including the amendment just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the language as it will be if the amendment referred to by the Senator from Utah be adopted.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

(e) Require all resident persons, whether citizens of the United States or aliens, 16 years of age or over and under 21 years of age, who are not physically or mentally disqualified or whose attendance on the classes of instruction hereinafter mentioned is otherwise impossible or impracticable, and who are illiterate or unable to understand, speak, read, or write the English language, to attend classes of instruction for not less than 200 hours per annum until they shall have completed a specified course prepared by the department of education or chief school officer of the State and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That this shall not apply to those who are in this country temporarily for sojourn or business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment. Shall it be engrossed and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KENYON. On the passage of the bill, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement which I have heretofore made with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when Mr. NEWBERRY's name was called). The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY (when the name of Mr. ROBINSON was called). The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably detained on account of illness. I understand if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who is detained from the Chamber on account of sickness. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I note that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], with whom I am paired, is still absent from the Chamber. Therefore I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], which I have heretofore announced, to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN. I announce that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is confined to his residence by illness. As has already been announced, he is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. If the Senator from Wyoming were here, I am informed that he would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are detained by illness in their families.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ball	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sterling
Colt	Kenyon	Phelan	Sutherland
Cummins	Kirby	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	Lenroot	Pittman	Wadsworth
France	Lodge	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	McKellar	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Hale	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott

NAYS—14.

Calder	Gronna	Reed	Trammell
Chamberlain	Harris	Sherman	Williams
Dial	Harrison	Smith, S. C.
Frelinghuysen	King	Smoot

NOT VOTING—45.

Ashurst	Gore	McLean	Simmons
Bankhead	Harding	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Borah	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Stanley
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Swanson
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Edge	Kendrick	Owen	Underwood
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Warren
Fall	Knox	Penrose	Watson
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell
Fletcher	McCormick	Robinson
Gay	McCumber	Shields

So the bill was passed.

AWARDS OF NAVAL DECORATIONS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 285, being Order of Business 333 on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is the question debatable, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not care, Mr. President, to discuss the question of the propriety of taking up this matter at this late hour in the afternoon, but I do desire to submit a few remarks upon the resolution itself. It contemplates the employment of an attorney by the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate charged with the duty of inquiring into the matters set forth in the more or less famous letter of Admiral Sims, directed to the Secretary of the Navy, touching what he speaks of as the policy, tactics, strategy, and administration of the Navy Department.

I wish to make it perfectly clear, if I can, that no suggestion has been made of any corruption on the part of the Navy Department or anybody connected with it; there has been no charge, for instance, of extravagant expenditures upon the part of the Navy Department; no suggestion of any character concerning changes that are necessary in the laws in relation to the Navy Department or to the Navy. The whole matter turns, as stated in Admiral Sims's letter, upon the question of errors of policy, tactics, strategy, and administration that were committed by our Navy. I read from paragraph 3 of the letter, as follows:

> In this respect it is particularly important that a just estimate be made of the errors of policy, tactics, strategy, and administration that were committed by our Navy.

Mr. President, I am somewhat at a loss to understand just exactly what is to be accomplished by this investigation, just exactly what the Senate can do in the matter, or is expected to do in the matter. Investigations are often conducted with a view to determining whether corruption has existed in any department of the Government, or whether there has been extravagance in the expenditures of the public funds. Other investigations are conducted with a view, primarily, to informing the committees dealing with legislation, and, secondarily, to advise the Senate itself concerning matters, in order that it may be enabled wisely and with information to deal with some particular subject; but nothing of that kind is suggested here.

It will appear from the letter of Admiral Sims that in the early part of the year 1917—indeed, before we declared war—he was sent to London as a special representative of the Navy Department and was subsequently appointed to the position of chief command of our naval forces abroad. He complains in this letter that he was not given the powers that were ordinarily attendant upon such a position as he held; that he was restricted in the exercise of authority which he felt was essential to the correct discharge of the duties of the place with which he was entrusted. In other words, as is perfectly well understood, the General Board of the Navy, which sat here in Washington, assumed to exercise certain authority over the operations of the Navy abroad and, through the Secretary of the Navy, it conferred certain powers upon the commander in chief there. He insists that the retention of so much authority practically by the General Board of the Navy and the refusal to give him the unlimited power which he thinks he ought to have exercised was an unwise thing to do from the standpoint of naval strategy and tactics.

Mr. President, the question as to whether the General Board acted wisely or unwisely—whether, judged from the standpoint of the correct conduct of naval warfare, they were right or Admiral Sims was right in the matter—is the issue that this committee is called upon to investigate. That, as a matter of course, is a thing that is largely a matter of opinion between contending naval experts. Undoubtedly the board will come forward and justify, as best it can, the policy which it announced and which it pursued limiting the powers of Admiral Sims. Admiral Sims and his friends will come forward and advance the other theory as the correct one to be observed in the conduct of naval operations.

What is there about this that calls for the employment of a lawyer? In the first place, as everyone knows, two-thirds of the members of the committee are lawyers. I think perhaps four out of five of the members of the committee are lawyers; and apparently, from the examination of Admiral Sims, so far as it has gone, he is quite able to take care of himself and to expatiate upon his peculiar views concerning what constitutes naval strategy without very much prompting from any lawyer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there were anything in the case that called upon us to employ counsel for Admiral Sims's side of this controversy, would not exactly the same thing call upon us to employ counsel for the other side, to get the side of the board of strategy?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not entirely advised about that. I presume probably the Judge Advocate General's department would be able to supply counsel; but I am not advised as to whether they would represent Admiral Sims's side of the controversy or the other side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; and if we are going to employ counsel outside of the committee and outside of the Navy and if we are not aware of the fact that the Judge Advocate General's office of the Navy Department would represent the other side, then we would be employing counsel for one side and no counsel for the other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would seem so; but in any case, Mr. President, I am quite at a loss to understand what there is about this that calls for the employment of counsel. Nobody's reputation for integrity or for faithful administration of the duties of his office appears to be involved in any way, shape, or form. It is not even contended, it is not even intimated throughout the letter anywhere that the matter passed beyond a simple question as to which was the advisable way to conduct that part of the war. I suppose probably the Navy Board will testify about the matter, and if they were in any manner overruled in their conclusions concerning things by the Secretary of the Navy—a thing that seems quite inconceivable—they will be able to say so and throw the responsibility wherever it belongs. But more, Mr. President; I submit that it is questionable whether there is any proper jurisdictional basis for an inquiry of this kind at all. I do not know why we should conduct it. For the enlightenment of the general public concerning these two contending theories of naval strategy? In all reasonable probability, I suppose, the contestants upon both sides—those favoring Admiral Sims and those taking the other view about it—will exploit their views through the newspapers and magazines of the country, the same as has occurred in the past. For my part, I do not see why the public would not be just exactly as well advised about the matter in that way as they will be through a congressional investigation.

This, Mr. President, is not the first time in our history when a difference of opinion has existed concerning the wisdom of proceeding in one way or proceeding in another way in reference to either our naval or our military operations. If Admiral Sims claims that his theory concerning what ought to be done and what ought not to be done is correct, I can not understand why he should not be at entire liberty to use the ordinary avenues through which the public mind is reached. The magazine publishers no doubt would be very glad to get an article from him exploiting his theory; and in all reasonable probability Admiral Benson, who, of course, was immediately responsible for the orders put out to Admiral Sims, and the limitations upon his authority, would be accorded an opportunity through some other magazine to exploit his peculiar views concerning the correct way in which this question of naval strategy should be resolved. Why should not the public get their information about the matter in that way? In the first place, why should there be an investigation of that particular thing at all?

Of course, we all understand that these matters are usually tinged with a political coloring of one kind or another, and we all understand that from the beginning of his administration Secretary Daniels has been the subject of attack. His administration of the office has been undergoing criticism from the time he took hold until perhaps a year or two before the war commenced, when even so virulent an assailant as George Harvey apologized publicly through his paper for the assaults that he had theretofore made upon the Secretary. But now an opportunity is presented, in the estimation of some gentlemen, to renew that attack for political purposes and to subserve political ends. That is perfectly well understood.

Mr. President, why should the Government of the United States pay any money out of its Treasury for the purpose of assisting in exploiting either one or the other of these two contending theories? It will be observed, as I have suggested, that there is not an intimation that there is anything wrong with our naval code. It is not suggested that we must amend our legislation in some particular or other. It is a mere matter of this contention between naval experts as to just exactly how the Navy ought to be handled under the circumstances which confronted it at the outset of the war. I do not think this can be justified under any circumstances or conditions.

But, Mr. President, we are confronted in every effort to enlist Government activities in any direction whatever with a rigid program of economy by the dominant party in both branches of Congress. Some highly necessary appropriations for carrying on Government work in the State of Montana must be refused because it is asserted that the Treasury is in such a state that the most rigid economy must be exercised; and every time anything in the nature of an appropriation bill comes up we are told all about the desperate state of the Treasury, how we are running away behind, and how it will be necessary to impose new and heavier burdens of taxes upon the people; and yet we are here with a proposition of employing some high-priced lawyer, at some fee to be measured by his great reputation, to take care of this controversy that ordinarily would be solved and determined by the public, so far as it is necessary to determine it, as the matter is presented through the public press and through the magazines of the country.

I do not believe that this suggestion of the employment of an attorney to conduct this investigation can be justified upon any sound basis whatever, and I hope very sincerely that the resolution will not be adopted. Nobody who knows anything about the matter or who has given any consideration to it has the slightest fear that Admiral Sims is not able to tell his story, and to tell it with entire fullness and in complete detail. He will undoubtedly pick up every one of these charges that he has made, from beginning to end, and he will tell all the facts about them, so far as he knows about the facts; and when the other side is heard about the matter, I apprehend that the public will know pretty nearly all there is.

I submit, Mr. President, that a lawyer will not be able to bring out any facts that will elucidate this question or that will be of any substantial benefit to the public in making a just estimate of the controversy, if it is a proper subject for investigation by the committee.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. HALE. In view of the lateness of the hour, will the Senator not allow my motion to take up this resolution prevail? If he will do that, I shall be very glad to ask for an executive session, and the Senator can complete his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have finished what I desired to say on the subject. I am advised, however, that another member of the committee desires to be heard on the subject before we vote on it.

Mr. HALE. I hope that the other member of the committee will agree to my suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will state that, as a member of the committee, I will not consent to the suggestion. Of course, if the Senator rose for the purpose of making a speech, or anything of that kind, I should be very glad to yield the floor to him at the present time, but there will be objection to proceeding to vote on his motion before it is discussed sufficiently for those present at least to understand it.

Mr. HALE. Very well, Mr. President, I will withdraw my motion at the present time, but I now announce that to-morrow at the close of the routine morning business I shall again move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

RURAL HOMES.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar the bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes. I would like to have it passed this evening, if possible, so that we can get it over to the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a bill that will not take one cent out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know, but what does it provide?

Mr. SMOOT. The title of the bill is, "To increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and it is recommended in the highest terms by the department. In fact, the Secretary of the Interior specifically refers to the legislation in his annual report.

Mr. KING. It has a formidable title. I would like to learn what the bill is about.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any objection, I will not ask for its consideration. I would like to have the bill read. It will take just a few moments to read.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill.

The reading clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, is authorized to investigate and determine the feasibility of developing tracts of land in private ownership within any State or Territory, by reclamation and otherwise, for the purpose of subdividing the land and disposing of the same in farms and parcels at reasonable prices.

SEC. 2. That after the Secretary of the Interior has determined the feasibility of a project, he is authorized, through the Reclamation Service, to develop the land to such extent, and dispose of the same in farms and parcels in such manner and upon such terms as to him shall be deemed most feasible and practicable.

SEC. 3. That no moneys of the United States shall be expended for any of the purposes of this act, nor shall either the investigation or development of any project be commenced or any obligation incurred therefor, until a contract shall have first been made by the Secretary of the Interior with the owner or owners of the land, providing for the payment in advance of sufficient moneys to meet the cost of such investigation or development. The moneys provided by every such contract shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as a trust fund, and shall be disbursed by a duly authorized fiscal officer of the Government under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with the terms of such contract.

SEC. 4. That every contract for development of a project shall provide, among other things, that the developed farms and parcels shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes at the actual cost of the land and the development thereof plus a definite reasonable profit to the owner or owners stated in advance therein. All contracts for the purchase of farms and parcels shall be made for, and the moneys due thereunder shall be payable to, the owner or owners of the land or their assigns.

Mr. KING. I hope my colleague will not ask for the consideration of the bill this evening.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, if there is any objection to it, I will not.

Mr. KING. It may be all right; it looks very innocent on its face; but I am afraid that back of it are lurking some dangers, and I would like to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is the Senator speaking of the League of Nations?

Mr. KING. There are none lurking there that the Senator has not already discovered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

TREATY WITH SALVADOR.

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom.

The SENATE:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Salvador, signed January 28, 1919, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

—

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention signed January 28, 1919, between the United States and Salvador, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK L. POLK.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 27, 1919.

—

The United States of America and the Republic of Salvador being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of the United States of America, and

The President of the Republic of Salvador, Rafael Zaldivar, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for the Republic of Salvador in the United States of America,

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the High Contracting Parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other High Contracting Party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the High Contracting Parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this treaty, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced, in such manner that they can not be put to other uses, shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six (6) months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the despatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present treaty that may hereafter be granted by either High Contracting Party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or San Salvador within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this 28th day of January, 1919.

[SEAL.] FRANK L. POLK.
[SEAL.] R. ZALDIVAR.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 26, 1920.

JUDGE OF MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Robert E. Mattingly, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia, vice Milton Strasburger, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The following-named officer of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Department of Commerce to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer (by promotion from junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer):

Ray Longfellow Schoppe, of Vermont, vice Ferdinand Westdahl.

The following-named officers of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Department of Commerce to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineers (by promotion from aid):

Lowrie Wilson Burdette, of South Carolina, vice L. M. Mower.

William McCaslan Scaife, of South Carolina, vice A. G. Katz.

Earl Oscar Heaton, of New York, vice H. W. Hemple.

The following-named officers of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Department of Commerce to be aids (by promotion from deck officers):

Robert Francis Anthony Studds, of the District of Columbia, vice L. W. Burdette.

Louis Morris Zeskind, of Maryland, vice L. M. Scaife.

Henry Caperton Warwick, of West Virginia, vice E. O. Heaton.

Jacob Stanley Rosenthal, of Maryland, vice A. P. Ratte.

Maurice Kagan, of Massachusetts, vice E. F. Lewis.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Col. Henry C. Haines, assistant adjutant and inspector, to be the adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps, with the rank of brigadier general, for a period of four years from the 15th day of January, 1920.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 26, 1920.

ASSISTANT UNITED STATES TREASURERS.

Arthur Espy to be assistant treasurer, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Robert G. Hilton to be assistant treasurer, Baltimore, Md.

APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Morris Sabath to be appraiser of merchandise, customs collection district No. 39, Chicago.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

E. F. Aydlett to be United States attorney, eastern district of North Carolina.

POSTMASTERS.

MICHIGAN.

Charles J. Kazilek, Alpha.
Thomas Hefferman, Baldwin.
Guy F. Hackman, Burr Oak.
Charles Myers, Clarkston.
Frank E. Richards, Clarksville.
Arthur W. Muir, Clinton.
James O. LaBerge, East Tawas.
Clara Woodruff, Freeland.
David H. Allen, Galien.
Floyd J. Gibbs, Ithaca.
Frank T. Swarthout, Laingsburg.
George S. Stout, Lake City.
Leo Paquette, L'Anse.
Roydon W. Cooper, Levering.
Harry W. Denham, Litchfield.
Frank H. Koebbe, Manchester.
Leslie D. Madill, Midland.
Joseph R. Gump, Milan.
Thomas H. Berryman, Mohawk.
Mark B. Hawes, Parma.
Wilda P. Hartingh, Pinconning.
Samuel B. Brant, Pittsford.
Milburn G. Hill, Plymouth.
Frank W. Thompson, Reese.
Edward M. Cosgrove, Saginaw.
Jens H. Wester, Sawyer.
Martin C. Musolf, Tawas City.
Wellington E. Reid, Ubly.
John C. Yeakey, Wayland.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Eugene T. Hooker, Aurora.
DeLambert P. Stowe, Belmont.
John L. Miller, Concord.
Edgar S. Woodley, Creswell.
Myron L. Moore, Granite Falls.
William C. Newborn, Grifton.
Samuel W. Finch, Lexington.
William C. Pope, Marshall.
William O. Connor, Mars Hill.
John H. Sanders, Middlesex.
Robert F. Crooks, Murphy.
Harvey E. Garrison, North Charlotte.
George R. Upchurch, Norwood.
George N. Taylor, Roanoke Rapids.
Cyril L. Walker, Roper.
Henry G. Early, Rosehill.
William Watson, Swanquarter.
William C. Graham, Tabor.
Jacob B. Brown, Vanceboro.
Nannie McI. Moore, Warrenton.
Lula E. Parker, West Raleigh.
Millard F. Bumgarner, Wilkesboro.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be colonel.

Lutz Wahl.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Edward T. Hartmann.
Frederick B. Shaw.

To be majors.

Frederic G. Kellond.
Herbert L. Evans.
Harry D. Mitchell.

To be captains.

Mark W. Clark.
David S. Rumbough.
Francis J. Heraty.
Donovan Swanton.
Francis A. Macon, jr.
Laurence B. Keiser.
Homer C. Brown.
Clare H. Armstrong.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 26, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, we thank Thee that this is Thy world, that Thou art in it, ever ready to inspire, uphold, and guide those who seek Thee in spirit and in truth, in every laudable enterprise.

The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein:
Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place?
He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

The world is full of infidelity, atheism, materialism. All sorts of wild speculations are rife; and good men, strong men, wise and holy men, are called upon from the fountain of life to assert themselves and follow the precepts and example of the world's great Redeemer, to be purified, ennobled, sanctified, if they would save it from disaster. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 24, and of Sunday, January 25, were read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files the papers in the case of H. R. 9208, which I introduced in the Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse action having been taken thereon by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which it was referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the files papers in the case to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, where do they go?

Mr. WHEELER. There was no action taken by the Military Committee on the case, and I simply ask to withdraw the papers from the files.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by direction of that committee, reported the bill H. R. 12012, concerning the administration of the pension laws in claims for pension of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and by the widows of such persons, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANTON reserved all points of order on the bill.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I present the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it shall be in order to consider, without the intervention of a point of order, any section of the bill as reported; and, upon motion authorized by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it shall be in order to insert in any part of the bill any provision reported as part of the bill and heretofore ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. After a bill has been submitted to the House, the House has resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that bill, general debate has been had on the bill, the bill has been read for amendment under the five-minute rule, various provisions of the bill have been adopted, and there are still remaining portions of the bill left for consideration, I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in order and not the province of the Rules Committee to come in at this stage of the legislation and make in order provisions of the bill which have gone out on points of order in Committee of the Whole, which is sought to be done in this case by the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the Committee on Rules has that privilege before the House acts on the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care to hear the parliamentary inquiry; the gentleman can make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is to enable the majority of the House to do what it wishes to do in the further consideration of the bill. It is a simple matter and follows the precedents of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Has the steering committee decided that this is the best thing to do?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The steering committee has not consulted with the members of the Rules Committee, so far as I know.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman knows that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said on Saturday that on all important questions they had finally reached an agreement. I wanted to know whether you were proceeding regularly or not, or whether you were proceeding without consulting the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think we are proceeding in the utmost harmony.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am afraid that you are acting too independently. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] know that this rule is to be brought in?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He does.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This rule was brought in for the reason that points of order have been made against a number of provisions carried in the bill for years by members of the minority side of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true; the sole purpose is to continue legislation that has been found necessary in years past.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman from Kansas think that the Rules Committee is taking on a legislative function?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all. This is a question of procedure, a question of permitting the House to do what it wants to do over the objection of any single Member of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but any single Member has a right to make a point of order against an item that is not properly in the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that is under the general rules of the House, but the Committee on Rules brings in a rule to change the general rules of the House for the specific purpose of enabling the House to do what it wants to do in this particular instance, notwithstanding the rules.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do not these gentlemen who are running this Foreign Affairs Committee get up a bill that is in order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] could give a better answer to that question than I. He brought in bills of similar import to this during the time that he was chairman of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may be true, but that is no answer—that somebody, somewhere, in the long lapse of years has done something that you want to imitate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In any event, it is the purpose of this rule to let the House do what it wishes with respect to the bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Sixty-fourth Congress, which was Democratic, presented the same rule for the Post Office bill, the Agricultural bill, the District bill, and one other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. If you rely constantly on what the Democrats did in Congress, does the gentleman not think he ought to bring in a resolution saying that the Democrats were dead right about all these things? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to put the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Rules Committee, on notice with respect to all the other appropriation supply bills they are to bring in here. He would better get rules making all unlawful matters in order and keep the rules in his hip pocket, because I am going to make points of order against every single unlawful provision that appears in any and all of these appropriation bills.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, the gentleman from Kansas is always ready for the gentleman from Texas on matters of that kind.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman from Missouri, the leader of the minority, asked a question of the gentleman from Kansas, and the gentleman from Kansas referred him to me to answer the question. The question was why this bill was not so framed as to make all the items it carries in order. I would say to the gentleman that the bill has carried items that are subject to a point of order for many years—all of these items, so far as I know—but I believe they are meritorious appropriations and ought to be carried in the bill. And while the gentleman is legislating for the Committee on Foreign Affairs I think his committee ought to legislate to make these items permanent law, so that in the future these very meritorious appropriations would not be subject to the whim of any single Member of this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think it is only fair to state that during the time the Republicans were in the minority they did not make the points of order.

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. We wrestled here for days with points of order raised by the Republicans.

Mr. MONDELL. I think not with this bill.

Mr. FLOOD. With this bill; yes—the Diplomatic and Consular bill. I am not mistaken about that, because I had charge of the bill. I had a great deal of trouble getting the bill through on account of these points of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman suggests that this rule will give the Committee on Foreign Affairs an opportunity to permit the majority to vote upon such measures as they care to put in the bill. Would this include allowing a majority of the House, if they wish to do so, to attach Armenia and Georgia to the Persian legation and make the minister to Persia minister to Armenia and Georgia and Persia, so as to accord the same representation to Armenia and Georgia as they have given to Poland and Czechoslovakia?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would not be in order under this rule. We are making in order matters that have been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the rule, what is going to become of the items that we have already passed over?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] these items will be reinserted in the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. And reread?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. GARD. Has that process ever been attempted before, where we have proceeded under the general rules of the House and ruled out certain items and then gone back under a special rule making the things in order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am always anxious to please my genial friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] when he makes inquiries as to my position in regard to matters. He asked whether the chairman of the steering committee had been consulted in regard to this rule.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I have very brief time and I am going to answer the gentleman's inquiry. The steering committee was consulted—at least the chairman of the steering committee was consulted, and while the chairman of the steering committee is entirely nonpartisan in his view of things, he is not averse to taking proper advantage of a situation thrust upon him by the opposition. He was of opinion that it was not wise to bring a rule in, and so suggested to the gentlemen of this committee, whose bill was being shot to pieces by gentlemen belonging to the party of the administration. His opinion was that from a political standpoint the thing to do was to let the administration side of this House shoot this administration bill to pieces by points of order, if they wanted to do it. There is no pork in this bill; there is no local benefit served by this bill; there is no special class or community benefited by this bill. This is a Government bill—the Government bill, the administration bill of the Congress—having to do wholly with foreign affairs. I doubt if there is a Republican who will be affected by any of these appropriations. The men and women who are to be paid under these appropriations are Democrats, practically all of them.

The committee brought this bill in as the Democratic side has been bringing it in year after year, subject to points of order that were never made by the Republican side, and gentlemen on the Democratic side, from what motive I do not know and can not fathom, knowing that the items are meritorious, knowing that they are essential, knowing they are urged by their administration, nevertheless strike them out, in my opinion, some of them, not because gentlemen have examined the matter themselves and are informed in respect to the items but because somebody has told them that they are subject to points of order. Anyone that is allowed to get near enough can throw monkey wrenches into machinery. It does not require knowledge or information or brain power to throw monkey wrenches into the legislative machinery, as certain gentlemen on the Democratic side have been doing. If my advice were followed, there might not be any rule here, and every time a point of order was made on the administration side of this House I would have the attention of the country challenged to the fact that gentlemen were so unfair to their own Government and their own administration that they would not even give the House an opportunity to pass upon the validity and the virtue and propriety of these items.

That is what I should have done. But the committee did not agree with my view of it. Perhaps they took a more statesmanlike view of it than I did. I did not object to the rule being brought in. In fact, when the Republican members of the Foreign Affairs Committee expressed a desire for a rule I helped them get it. I think my view may have been a trifle partisan, because I would have challenged the attention of the country to the utterly indefensible attitude of certain gentlemen on the Democratic side relative to this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly very much surprised and disappointed at the position which my colaborer and, I might say, partner in economy, the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], has taken in his remarks. I never thought for one moment that when I went "in cahoots" with him some time ago to put through an economy program that he and myself would ever part company, and that he would ever get so indignant and excited and red faced over the matter. But I see that he has changed his views on economy. He is not going to have any "program of economy" from now on. But I was gratified to hear from him that there is one committee of this House—the Rules Committee—that is not going to tolerate any overlordism from the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. He says he told the Rules Committee not to report out this rule; to let these Democrats and everybody else make all the points of order they wanted. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the other members of the Rules Committee, perhaps, said, "No; you can boss the Ways and Means Committee and humiliate Chairman FORDNEY and Mr. GREEN of Iowa; you can make the Naval Committee bend the knee; you can make the Rivers and Harbors Committee tremble with fear and do your bidding; but here is one committee, Mr. MONDELL," says Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, "here is one committee that you dare not and can not bulldoze; you shall not be their master. I know you do not want us to report this out, but we are going to do it in spite of you." Do you not imagine that Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas talked that way to him?

I am glad we have one committee that is independent of Mr. MONDELL and the steering committee. Let me tell the gentleman from Wyoming that I was absolutely sincere, of course [laughter], on Saturday when I came down expecting to have the hearty cooperation of the gentleman. I never made but one point of order, and it was against an item, I think, of $400,000. I made a point of order but reserved it in order for the chairman to enlighten the House; I made and reserved the point of order trying to get a reduction in the item down to $250,000. Mr. MONDELL was not in the House at the time, and I took it that he was absolutely sincere and conscientious on the economy program, and I said, "Here, before the war, even up to 1917, we only appropriated $150,000 for that item, and surely we ought to cut it down and appropriate not over $250,000, a year and a half after the armistice." Looking around and seeing the gentleman was not here, and knowing he would have made the point of order if he had been here and that we would have cooperated together, I made the point of order and I tried to reduce the item. I told the chairman if he would reduce it to $250,000 I would not make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman might have made a motion to reduce the item, and I might have, but he will have an opportunity to make a motion to reduce the item now, and I want him to do it if he is here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will take the gentleman's place and do it if he is not here. I know the gentleman was sincere in saying that he is opposed to this rule. If he will help fight it, he will defeat it. I want to ask him, since he is opposed to the rule, against it for politics and against it because of the injustice of the rule, is he going to help fight it? Is he going to make a speech against this rule and ask these Republicans to vote against it?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not say I was against it.

Mr. KITCHIN. You said you opposed it, as the notes will show, and if you had your way you would let the Democrats or anybody else make all the points of order they wanted. If you stand up to that, you will defeat this rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that the Democratic members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs raised no point of order against this bill; that none of them reserved the right to raise points of order against it, and they did not do it. The only criticism made here by minority members of that committee was in the fact that an attempt was made to claim great economy on this bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and myself called attention to that fact. But we were for this bill and all the items in it.

Another thing I want to call attention to is the fact that gentlemen on the other side have said that no points of order were made or reserved against this bill by gentlemen on that side during the eight years when the bill was in charge of a committee the majority of whom were Democrats. That is not according to the record at all. Points of order were made or reserved against it, and we wrestled here with Republicans day after day in order to get this bill in such shape that it would satisfy the demands of the department and supply our foreign service with the means sufficient to run and develop in accordance with the best interests of this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Was it ever necessary to bring in a rule to make any of the provisions of the bill in order?

Mr. FLOOD. No; because we worked along with the bill in the House as best we could, and when it went to the Senate items were frequently reinserted, and the bill was made a law in a proper and orderly way, and not by rules brought in by the Rules Committee. But the Republicans during the consideration of this bill raised or made more points of order when I was chairman of the committee than have been raised against this bill at this time. There were more items against which points of order were raised or made each year of those eight years than have been raised or made during the consideration of this bill by this House.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], in reply to a question asked him, stated that all of these appropriations, eliminated on points of order, would be put back into the bill by the chairman moving to reconsider these sections that had been passed, indicating that it had already been determined by the few men on the Rules Committee what the whole House of Representatives had to do; and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] states that all these points of order were made by Members who were merely told that the sections were subject to points of order, indicating that they would not have known it if they had not been told.

The gentleman from Wyoming is so used to telling his colleagues on his side of the House what he wants done and what should be done, and having them do it without any question, that he imagines that everybody else on the other side of the House is so controlled. Now, the amounts that were cut out of this bill on points of order were the following: On page 3, the sum of $134,000; on page 4, the sum of $438,000; on page 5, the sum of $15,000, and the sums of $2,000, $9,000, and $1,200; and on page 6, $15,000 and $2,000. They are the items. One of these points of order was made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and all of the other points of order were made by me, and by same over $630,000 was temporarily saved to the people of the United States.

I want to submit to my friend from Wyoming, the distinguished leader of the majority, that true economy is more than lip deep; it is more than skin deep. If he wants to save these sums, what must be done? What are these sums of money for? Why, to pay so-called student interpreters, 10 of them to China, a salary of $1,500 a year each, for what? To learn how to go to school over there and learn the Chinese language. Not only that, but $200 apiece is appropriated to pay for their tuition. Not only that, but $600 a year is appropriated for their quarters. And so it is with respect to Turkey. Ten students are paid $1,500 a year each, and $200 for tuition and $600 for quarters. And so it is with Japan. Those students are paid $1,500 a year each to go to school. You pay them to go to school over there, and pay for their quarters $600, and pay for their tuition $200 each; and these are the sums of money that are taken out of the people's Treasury in this crucial time. With a deficit of $3,000,000,000 staring us in the face, you are paying fellows to go to school in China and Japan and Turkey, and after you educate them over there they will come right back to the United States and commercialize the education we have paid for, and we will get no service whatever from them. There is absolutely nothing that binds them to the service. There is absolutely nothing that guarantees to the United States of America one single dollar of value for the money expended. I want to say that the so-called economy on the majority side of the House is lip deep only.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I just came in and was told that this rule was being considered. As I understand the rule, it does not pass anything but gives the House an opportunity to reject or approve. Is that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the purpose of the rule. The purpose of the rule is to give the House the opportunity to consider the items reported in this bill by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CANNON. And the strenuous effort of the gentleman from Texas is to seek to take from the House that privilege?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I assume that is the purpose.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, while the chairman of the Committee on Rules is on his feet I would like to ask him a question. Does this rule make in order the Irish resolution about freedom for Ireland?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was not referred to in the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recognized for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to maintain a fight on this floor which can not be sustained. The situation before the Committee on Rules was this: The information we received was that this bill came with a unanimous report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs; that there was no division of opinion as to the legislation this bill embodies.

For my part I could not imagine just how I could oppose a rule for the consideration of the bill under those circumstances. I must say the rule itself is not drawn as I would have drawn it. Nevertheless, it does bring this legislation before the House. It leaves the bill open for amendment. If the House wishes to reduce any of the items, it can do so by a majority vote. But when one of the great committees of the House asks for a resolution providing for the consideration of a measure, and the information is the bill has a unanimous report, and, moreover, that the bill is a practical redraft of legislation which was passed by a Democratic Congress, I could not see just how to inaugurate a fight against the rule. Therefore I do not see how I can oppose this rule, and I shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, having been on this committee and having attended the hearings for the purpose of determining the amounts that should be incorporated for the various items in this bill, and being most obstreperous on the point of appropriating vast sums of money, I feel that I would like to say a word on this question.

I want to call the attention of the minority side of the House to this fact—and it was the argument that brought me to agree to some of the items in the bill, else I most certainly would have been the obstreperous one on the floor of the House to cut them down. That argument, urged by the Secretary of State and his assistants who appeared before the committee, was this: In order that the Secretary of State and the foreign relations department might function adequately and efficiently at this time, it was necessary to maintain at least a semblance of flexibility in the law, and it would be impossible for the State Department to meet the varying conditions in the European countries at this time, with their unstable governments or unestablished governments in many of the States; it would be impossible for them to meet the conditions arising if the law were drafted with rigid and stringent provisions and held to a certain line. On that plea, and that plea alone, I agreed to many of these items in this bill. As to the question of economy, it has been bandied back and forth about whether we are saving money or not. I want to say to the minority that if I had it my way there would not be any question of doubt about whether we were saving money. I think we are appropriating money in this bill in certain places for which it is questionable whether we will ever get value received. Most certainly, in the light of the way that past appropriations for similar items have been expended, the United States Government has been caused some embarrassment because of mistakes made in our secret diplomacy. I am not in favor of that kind of legislation. I am not in favor of lump sums; but when the Secretary of State at this time, with the affairs of the world as critical as they are, comes before me and says that it is more necessary that this bill carry these items, and in the amounts in which they are carried, than it was during the war, it is not up to me to say that I know more about conditions in Russia or Germany or France or any other country than the men whom your minority party have selected to act in that capacity. I want to appeal to the Democratic side, to ask you, Have you not the same confidence in the men selected by your chief in permitting them to expend this money that we on this side have? I agree with the gentleman in toto that when we get back to normal conditions we ought to establish a law that would not require the President of the United States to have more than $1,000,000 to spend as he sees fit, to parcel out where he will, to confer favors on whom he will. I am opposed to that kind of legislation, and I want to go on record as saying so.

There is another thing to which I wish to call attention in this particular proposition. The Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, testified before our committee that even with this appropriation, as big as it is, it is not big enough to permit him and the Chief Executive to go out into the highways and byways of life and select men because of their particular qualifications to fill these offices. On the other hand, he testified that before he could select a man to represent this Government in a foreign court, because of the inadequate pay and the enormous expenditures to which these men are put, it is necessary for him to go only into the class of the idle rich to make his selections.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield another minute to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I want to appeal not only to the minority side but to the majority side. I have no quarrel with a man because he is rich. I wish I were. But I want to ask you if you believe the Government of the United States, a Republic, as it is, can best function when the selection of its representatives for foreign diplomacy is confined to a class of individuals who have already amassed their fortunes? I believe that this Congress, or if not this Congress then the next one, could make no better move than to reorganize our foreign-affairs department in such a way that we can select men to represent us in foreign countries not because of the dollar mark that they may wear but because of their individual and particular fitness for that position. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. Does this bill make any provision for increasing the salaries of our diplomatic and consular representatives?

Mr. BEGG. It does not, because it was thought, both by the Secretary of State and by the committee, to be unwise to undertake to do that at this time; and my reason for introducing that thought is to make clear that I am one man who believes that we are appropriating not too much money in some of these amounts, but appropriating it in the wrong way.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think it is an unfortunate thing for our brethren of the majority that they have returned to the practice of running the House by special rules, rather than under the general rules provided in the manual. When I first came to Congress some years ago, the practice of special rules was in vogue, and it is a matter of history that that policy was exceedingly disastrous to the Republican Party. Apparently that policy is to be revived.

Some weeks ago the conferees on the agricultural bill brought in a report which, like this bill, represented an excess of authority, so that the House conferees had to appeal to the Rules Committee for a rule to make in order the illegal matter in their report. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in presenting the report of the Rules Committee very clearly indicated that he did not approve of the rule, and intimated in substance that in the future the committees which brought in bills containing matter in excess of their authority need not appeal to the Rules Committee over which he presided, for authority to make this illegal matter in order. The situation to-day duplicates the plight in which the conferees on the agricultural bill found themselves. When the conferees on that bill undertook to include matter that was subject to a point of order, such an undertaking was an illegal assumption of authority. When the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or any other committee, undertakes to make appropriations not justified by law, that undertaking is an illegal assumption of authority on their part. There is no difference whatever in principle between the grounds on which a rule has been asked for this bill, and the grounds on which the rule was asked in the case of the agricultural bill. The Members of this body will recall very distincty the attitude assumed by our friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the chairman of the Rules Committee, on the occasion referred to. I have his remarks before me and if time permitted I would cite them in full.

Mr. Speaker, just as I was coming into the Hall of the House I heard the leader on the Republican side [Mr. MONDELL] say that anybody could throw monkey wrenches into the machinery. Does he think that points of order that are so clear that they are sustained by the Presiding Officer without argument are monkey wrenches thrown into orderly legislative procedure? What is the purpose of our rules save to provide the paths in which the committees of the House must walk? Any committee which exceeds its authority is subject to a point of order when it does so.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A little later. May I call the attention of this body to the fact that a few days ago, when the Post Office bill was under consideration and an item was reached which was in the interests of the farmers residing on rural routes, and which carried an appropriation of $300,000 for the development of local business, in the interest of the producer and the consumer, it was a Republican—Mr. TINCHER, of Kansas—who threw a monkey wrench into the machinery by making a point of order to that item, and thereby causing it to be stricken from the bill. I have not as yet been advised that the Committee on Rules have been willing to report a rule to give the House an opportunity to vote on that particular proposition. [Applause.]

That is not all in this connection, Mr. Speaker. Not only does this rule undertake to make in order everything remaining in the bill—and there is no more reason why this should be done as to this appropriation bill than in the case of any other bill of like character—but it is actually retroactive, and makes it in order for all the matter that was stricken out on Saturday, on points of order, to be replaced in the bill on motion.

Mr. Speaker, I undertake to say that every committee of this House should conform to the rules of this House. When the Democrats were in power they did not report rules of this sweeping character providing that the contents of an entire bill should be in order. Certainly none of these rules were retroactive. In a few cases when it was exceedingly desirable that certain legislation should be attached to an appropriation bill, rules were adopted making their provisions in order. [Applause.]

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. GARD. I desire to know whether the rule goes so far as to abrogate the call of the Calendar of the District of Columbia without the intervention of a motion?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; that question will arise on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, in relation to the question raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], the identical provision to which he objects was reported from the Rules Committee by Mr. Dalzell, and is found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3262.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that there were a great many rules in this House reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dalzell.

Mr. FESS. In reference to the practice of legislating by the Rules Committee, I have just looked over the RECORD and find that in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, which was a Democratic Congress, we had this rule in the Post Office bill, in the naval bill, in the District bill, in the Agricultural bill, and in the fortification bill. That was a Democratic Congress.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand there were special items in the bills which the rules referred to, but does the gentleman mean to say that the rules were as sweeping as this and retroactive?

Mr. FESS. Not retroactive, but as sweeping in making the whole bill in order. Now, in reference to the matter referred to by the ex-chairman of the committee, Mr. FLOOD, I want to say that I was a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee for one Congress, during which time there were appropriation bills reported. I remember that Mr. Stafford, of Wisconsin, offered some objection. I have looked over the RECORD of the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and I find that he reserved points of order in five different instances, and in all but one withdrew the point of order. The point of order was not made in any case except one. That is found on page 1887 of the RECORD of the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session. The point of order went to the proviso which referred to the payment of certain employees here in the District of Columbia. It did not have anything to do with appropriations, but rather to the administration of them. That point of order was made and sustained, and that was the only item of the bill, so far as I can find, which was disturbed on a point of order. Consequently, while I do not care to enter into this part of the controversy, it does seem to me that it is a rather far-fetched statement that this bill has been obstructed in years before by the intervention of points of order which were made when the fact is they were rather merely reserved and were later withdrawn. I simply want to make that statement for the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have some citations which I wish to put in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks by inserting the points in controversy in the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. The only points of order raised on this bill will be found on page 1846, by Stafford; 1847, Connelly; 1886, to the proviso, by Stafford; 1887, by Stafford. All save the proviso were withdrawn.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to put in points of order made against the bill in the Sixty-second, Sixty-third, and Sixty-fourth Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the Sixty-third Congress there was a rule brought in on the Diplomatic bill, but it was not pressed, and later on was withdrawn.

Mr. FLOOD. That was about a particular item, and did not cover the whole bill. It referred to the building of embassies and legations.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman recall that in the last Congress the Post Office appropriation bill was brought in with a lot of legislation in it, and that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] got unanimous consent of the House that all of the provisions should be considered in order?

Mr. FESS. I remember that very distinctly. The only reason I rose to make this statement was to clarify the matter, and the statement that the Republicans attemped to obstruct the bill on the matter of specific appropriations, which I did not remember was the case, and which the RECORD clearly shows was not the case.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he is undertaking to make it appear that a Member of the House is acting in a disorderly sort of a way in raising points of order against an item in the bill that would go out by the decision of anybody in the chair?

Mr. FESS. I do not, for the simple reason that salaries for certain lines in the Diplomatic and Consular Service under the jurisdiction of this committee have not been permanent, and anyone could get up and make a point of order to item after item. I do not think that displays any particular prescient genius or any special patriotism.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Nobody said that it did, but what I want to know is if it is to be considered bad form for anybody to raise a point of order against an item that is not authorized by law?

Mr. FESS. Certainly it is not bad form.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am going to vote for this rule, but I do not like this insinuation that Members are acting in bad form if they exercise their undoubted rights.

Mr. FESS. I think my friend, the ex-Speaker, will vindicate the action of the Rules Committee in bringing in a rule making these items in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am going to vote for the rule.

Mr. GARNER. Ought not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to say to the Foreign Affairs Committee and to the various committees of the House when they come in with appropriation bills and find them slaughtered, and more than one-half or a third of them stricken out on points of order, that they ought to take cognizance of that and go back to their committee room and draft legislation that will make these things in order in the future?

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend that I am willing to report a rule to make this permanent, provided the Rules Committee cares to do that.

Mr. GARNER. I do not think that that would be good legislation.

Mr. FESS. We have done it before.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I have any objection to this procedure, it is that the Committee on Rules appears to be reaching out and absorbing and usurping the authority of other committees in this House.

Mr. FESS. The Rules Committee simply reports to the House for its final decision. If its reports are not proper or objectionable, the House can reject the report. The purpose is to insure such legislation as is demanded to continue the operations of the Government. This particular rule is to continue the work of the State Department, and it was made necessary by the tactics employed to defeat the proposed legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make for bringing in this rule or any other rule that has been brought in by the committee during this Congress. I have been a member of the Committee on Rules for a number of years, and my recollection is very distinct that for eight years prior to the beginning of this session of Congress we brought in rules here every few days to make items in order on appropriation bills. It is not necessary to recite them. The RECORD is full of them.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman that in a number of instances under Democratic administration rules have been brought in for the purpose of making items in order, but now the gentleman with his long experience on that committee ought to call the attention of those various committees to the fact, when they ask for these rules, that they had a rule a year ago and have so far neglected to submit to the House legislation that would make the particular items in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Clearly then it is not the fault of the Committee on Rules that they are appealed to to enable the House to do what it wishes to do with respect to certain matters in appropriation bills.

Mr. GARNER. But the Committee on Rules has it within its power to give these various statutes consideration, and if you continue to give these committees the rules there will be no occasion for them to report a law to make these appropriations in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What I have said refers to items in appropriation bills, that in a way properly belong in such bills.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that all this is leather and prunella, especially when the leader of the minority says that he is going to vote for the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] refers to some remarks that I made on a special rule making in order some legislation on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I would repeat every word that I said then, if it were necessary to do so. I am opposed to riders on appropriation bills, and I think the warning given at that time has been heeded. We have had few requests recently to make riders in order on appropriation bills. I adhere to every word that I said on that occasion, but when it is necessary to make in order items in an appropriation bill that would enable the particular branch of the Government to function that is being appropriated for, that raises an entirely different question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman stated it was a rider in the case to which I referred, but that was the case of a conference committee that exceeded its authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In putting a matter on an appropriation bill that had not been considered by either House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They exceeded their authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was legislation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. When committees exceed their authority with respect to appropriating money for things, for which there is no law, is not that an excess of authority and is not that a rider?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; it is not so regarded.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. The gentleman from Kansas was interrogated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] as to whether or not this rule takes into consideration the Irish question. I presume he referred to the Mason resolution. I want to know if the chairman will permit an amendment to this rule now to take into consideration the Mason resolution, so that it may be brought before the membership of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The matter was not incorporated in the bill by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Rules does not take jurisdiction of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House having divided, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 311, nays 9, answered "present" 2, not voting 106, as follows:

YEAS—311.

Ackerman	Barkley	Box	Burdick
Almon	Bee	Brand	Burke
Anderson	Begg	Briggs	Burroughs
Andrews, Nebr.	Bell	Brinson	Butler
Anthony	Benson	Britten	Byrnes, S. C.
Ashbrook	Black	Brooks, Ill.	Byrns, Tenn.
Aswell	Blackmon	Brooks, Pa.	Campbell, Kans.
Ayres	Bland, Ind.	Browne	Campbell, Pa.
Baer	Bland, Mo.	Browning	Cannon
Bankhead	Bland, Va.	Brumbaugh	Cantrill
Barbour	Bowers	Buchanan	Carss
Carter	Harrison	MacCrate	Schall
Chindblom	Hastings	MacGregor	Shreve
Clark, Fla.	Hawley	Madden	Siegel
Clark, Mo.	Hays	Magee	Sims
Classon	Heflin	Maher	Sinclair
Coady	Hernandez	Major	Sinnott
Cole	Hersey	Mansfield	Sisson
Collier	Hersman	Mapes	Slemp
Connally	Hickey	Mays	Small
Crago	Hicks	Mead	Smith, Idaho
Crisp	Hill	Merritt	Smith, Ill.
Crowther	Hoch	Michener	Smith, Mich.
Cullen	Hoey	Miller	Smithwick
Currie, Mich.	Holland	Minahan, N. J.	Stedman
Curry, Calif.	Huddleston	Monahan, Wis.	Steenerson
Dale	Hudspeth	Mondell	Stephens, Ohio
Dallinger	Hulings	Montague	Stevenson
Darrow	Hull, Iowa	Mooney	Stiness
Davis, Minn.	Hull, Tenn.	Moore, Va.	Strong, Kans.
Davis, Tenn.	Humphreys	Moores, Ind.	Strong, Pa.
Dempsey	Husted	Morgan	Summers, Wash.
Denison	Igoe	Mott	Sumners, Tex.
Dent	Ireland	Murphy	Sweet
Dickinson, Mo.	Jacoway	Nelson, Mo.	Swope
Dickinson, Iowa	James	Nelson, Wis.	Taylor, Ark.
Dominick	Johnson, Ky.	Newton, Mo.	Taylor, Colo.
Doremus	Johnson, Miss.	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Tenn.
Doughton	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Connor	Temple
Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Ogden	Thompson
Drane	Jones, Pa.	Oldfield	Tillman
Dunbar	Juul	Oliver	Tilson
Dupré	Kearns	Overstreet	Timberlake
Eagan	Keller	Padgett	Tincher
Echols	Kelly, Pa.	Paige	Tinkham
Elston	Kendall	Park	Towner
Emerson	Kiess	Parker	Treadway
Esch	King	Parrish	Upshaw
Evans, Mont.	Kinkaid	Pell	Vaile
Evans, Nebr.	Kitchin	Peters	Vare
Evans, Nev.	Kleczka	Platt	Venable
Fairfield	Kraus	Porter	Vestal
Fess	Lampert	Pou	Vinson
Fisher	Langley	Purnell	Voigt
Flood	Lanham	Quin	Walsh
Focht	Lankford	Radcliffe	Walters
Fordney	Layton	Rainey, Ala.	Ward
Frear	Lazaro	Rainey, H. T.	Weaver
Freeman	Lea, Calif.	Raker	Webster
French	Lee, Ga.	Ramsey	Welling
Fuller, Ill.	Lehlbach	Ramseyer	Welty
Fuller, Mass.	Little	Randall, Calif.	Wheeler
Gallagher	Lonergan	Randall, Wis.	White, Kans.
Gallivan	Longworth	Rayburn	White, Me.
Ganly	Luce	Reavis	Williams
Garland	Lufkin	Reber	Wilson, Ill.
Garner	McAndrews	Reed, N. Y.	Wilson, La.
Glynn	McArthur	Rhodes	Wilson, Pa.
Good	McClintic	Ricketts	Wingo
Goodwin, Ark.	McDuffie	Riddick	Winslow
Goodykoontz	McFadden	Robinson, N. C.	Wise
Green, Iowa	McGlennon	Robsion, Ky.	Woods, Va.
Greene, Mass.	McKenzie	Rodenberg	Wright
Griest	McKeown	Rogers	Yates
Hadley	McKinley	Rose	Young, N. Dak.
Hardy, Colo.	McLane	Rubey	Young, Tex.
Hardy, Tex.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rucker	Zihlman
Harreld	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sanders, Ind.

NAYS—9.

Babka	Kincheloe	Saunders, Va.	Steagall
Blanton	Rainey, J. W.	Sherwood	Thomas
Gard

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Griffin	Rouse

NOT VOTING—106.

Andrews, Md.	Fields	Kreider	Rowan
Bacharach	Foster	Larsen	Rowe
Benham	Gandy	Lesher	Sabath
Boies	Garrett	Linthicum	Sanders, La.
Booher	Godwin, N. C.	Luhring	Sanders, N. Y.
Caldwell	Goldfogle	McCulloch	Sanford
Candler	Goodall	McKinley	Scott
Caraway	Gould	McPherson	Scully
Carew	Graham, Pa.	Mann, Ill.	Sears
Casey	Graham, Ill.	Mann, S. C.	Sells
Christopherson	Greene, Vt.	Martin	Smith, N. Y.
Cleary	Hamill	Mason	Snell
Cooper	Hamilton	Moon	Snyder
Copley	Haugen	Moore, Ohio	Steele
Costello	Hayden	Morin	Stephens, Miss.
Cramton	Houghton	Mudd	Stoll
Davey	Howard	Neely	Sullivan
Dewalt	Hutchinson	Newton, Minn.	Tague
Donovan	Jefferis	Nicholls, S. C.	Volstead
Dooling	Johnston, N. Y.	Nolan	Wason
Dunn	Jones, Tex.	O'Connell	Watkins
Dyer	Kahn	Olney	Watson
Eagle	Kelley, Mich.	Osborne	Whaley
Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Phelan	Wood, Ind.
Elliott	Kennedy, R. I.	Reed, W. Va.	Woodyard
Ellsworth	Kettner	Riordan
Ferris	Knutson	Romjue

So the rule was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. SELLS with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. WHALEY.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. CARAWAY.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. SEARS.
Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. O'CONNELL.
Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. TAGUE.
Mr. GOULD with Mr. MANN of South Carolina.
Mr. GREENE of Vermont with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.
Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. DEWALT.
Mr. KAHN with Mr. FIELDS.
Mr. ELLSWORTH with Mr. SABATH.
Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON with Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas.
Mr. ROWE with Mr. KETTNER.
Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. SMITH of New York.
Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. OLNEY.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. MOON.
Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. PHELAN.
Mr. MUDD with Mr. HAMILL.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. MARTIN.
Mr. LUHRING with Mr. DOOLING.
Mr. GOODALL with Mr. CASEY.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. GANDY.
Mr. EDMUNDS with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana.
Mr. MASON with Mr. JONES of Texas.
Mr. NOLAN with Mr. GARRETT.
Mr. WOODS of Indiana with Mr. CANDLER.
Mr. HOUGHTON with Mr. ROMJUE.
Mr. REED of West Virginia with Mr. DONOVAN.
Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. CLEARY.
Mr. FOSTER with Mr. STOLL.
Mr. MOORE of Ohio with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.
Mr. KREIDER with Mr. EAGLE.
Mr. COOPER with Mr. STEELE.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. LARSEN.
Mr. WASON with Mr. HOWARD.
Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.
Mr. SANFORD with Mr. DAVEY.
Mr. MORIN with Mr. CAREW.
Mr. CRAMTON with Mr. LINTHICUM.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. SULLIVAN.
Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. LESHER.
Mr. VOLSTEAD with Mr. NEELY.
Mr. SNELL with Mr. ROWAN.
Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. SCULLY.
Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. WATKINS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular bill, H. R. 11960.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11960, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee adjourned on Saturday night the committee was dividing on the item on line 24, page 6.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that we return to page 3, line 7, in order to insert the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to return is not necessary. The rule provides that it is in order to amend the bill at any place; so the thing to do would be to offer an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rule adopted by the House, did it not make merely in order any provision in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule to the gentleman. It says:

Resolved, That during the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order to consider, without the intervention of a point of order, any sectoin of the bill as reported, and, upon motion authorized by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it shall be in order to insert in any part of the bill any provision reported as part of the bill and heretofore ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. In the first part, where it says "upon motion authorized by the Committee on Foreign Affairs," does not that require a motion to return to a particular section to insert? I submit a point of order that it does require a motion to return to any particular section, and then the committee has a right to offer to insert.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is wrong and that his point of order is not well taken. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: Page 3, line 7, after the figures "1916," insert: "Provided, That secretaries in the Diplomatic Service shall hereafter be graded and classified as follows: Secretaries of class 1, $4,000 per annum; secretaries of class 2, $3,625 per annum; secretaries of class 3, $3,000 per annum; secretaries of class 4, $2,500 per annum."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask my colleagues not to let us deceive ourselves about the status of the present situation before the House. Under the point of order which was held good by the Chair the amount of $134,000 of annual increases for the employees mentioned in this paragraph, not authorized by any law in the world, was eliminated from the bill. Why, if this amendment offered by the chairman of this committee is passed, it just simply means this, that each and every year until changed there will be taken out of the Treasury of the United States this $134,000 of increases annually in salaries.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. The point the gentleman makes will not be changed by my suggestion, but the fact is that there are 135 secretaries contemplated——

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for that. I do not yield at all for that kind of stuff, because it means this, and the gentleman knows it, that it is an increase of salaries of $134,000 a year that is not authorized by any law on the statute books.

You talk about economy in one breath, the economy policy of the dominant party in this House, and then your dominant party in another breath wastes and unlawfully appropriates hundreds of thousands of dollars, a policy that means economy that is only lip deep. There was nearly $650,000 stricken out of this bill on last Saturday on points of order, made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and myself, because there was no law sustaining them. Now, my friends on this side of the aisle have brought in a gag rule here to make each and every one of these items in order. You can not fool the people at all. You can not fool the chairman of the great Appropriations Committee [Mr. GOOD], because he really has a sure enough case of economy on him, like I have.

And he is sincere in wanting to save the people money. But you will not stand by him. You are going to put back into this bill $650,000 which is to be taken out of the Treasury each year.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I could not refuse to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. What was the vote on the adoption of the rule? I was out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there were just a few that would stand by their own judgment and vote against that rule. I admit it. But I can tell the gentleman that there was one who voted against it, because I voted against it.

Mr. CANNON. Somebody tells me that were nine who did not want the rule, but the House was unanimous outside of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; under the party whip on that side and under the party whip on this side they were almost unanimous. But I am one of those who, as the gentleman knows, does not respond to the party whip unless it is on a question of party policy decided by caucus. When it is on a question of needlessly taking money out of the Treasury and wasting it, there is no party whip in the world that will whip me into line.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Hooray!

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; you can "hooray," and when the people find out that you voted to take $650,000 out of the Treasury for the next year and needlessly waste it, a part of which is to educate young fellows in China and Turkey and Japan and let them come back here and sell the education they received from the Treasury of the United States to commercial institutions, your people will say "hooray," too, when you ask them to send you back to office. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in a sincere desire to economize. I am one of the Democrats who will stand shoulder to shoulder with him and help him keep people's fingers out of the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I know that there are three economists in this House—one the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and one the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and myself. [Laughter.] I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that here is one of the items where he can help me and Mr. BLANTON save some money to the Government. I am really opposed to these increased salaries for the secretaries, and I am sincere in it——

Mr. GOOD. Mostly [laughter]——

Mr. KITCHIN. And am opposed to this amendment. If you defeat this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, then the salaries of the secretaries remain just as they have been since 1915, according to the present law. During the war we did not increase these salaries. In 1916 we did not increase their salaries, and in 1917, 1918, and 1919 we did not increase the salaries. Even for this current fiscal year we did not increase the salaries of the secretaries. But now this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania increases the secretaries' salaries $1,000 each, or a total increase of $130,000. This is a new increase, never carried before in any act.

Now, we ought not to do that. I want you, gentlemen of the House, every one of you here who is going to vote on this question, to know that this increase of a thousand dollars to each secretary is not because the cost of living has increased. It is not to take care of the advancing cost of living. It has never been intimated by the Secretary of State that that is the reason why he wanted these salaries increased, because in the post-allowance fund of $600,000 in the bill the increased cost of living is met. That fund has been used to increase the salaries, in addition to the bonus, to these secretaries, to meet the increasing cost of living. That is one of the purposes of this post-allowance fund of $600,000 which is in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. May not the increase be provided for in anticipation of the raising of the standard of living on account of the League of Nations going into effect?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it may be, but I should not think so. But if so, you provide for that. You provide this $600,000 post fund for that, and the chairman will tell you that that is true. So that, gentlemen, this increase now at this late date is not to enable the salaries of these secretaries to keep pace with the high cost of living.

The only reason in the world which the Secretary of State gives is to enable these secretaries of the ambassadors to go into good society, into "tango" and "kow-tow" society. [Laughter.] He says here in the report:

> As the lieutenants of the ambassadors and ministers, the secretaries must be able to mingle with all classes of people and associate upon a plane of equality with the members of the highest social and official circles of the capitals in which they are located.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is not that caused by the fact that the social standard was set so high by the members of the peace commission and the social dignitaries that went to Paris? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. That is possible; it is very possible that the committee has anticipated that, and taken care of it. But Mr. Lansing does not ask for it, except to permit these secretaries to meet and mingle socially with the kings and queens and monarchs, the princes and princesses, and the lords and ladies of Europe and have them tango and kow-tow around with royalty; not to perform their duties in the office. [Laughter.] It may be that that is where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] gets the idea in his head, which he expressed on Saturday, that the American ambassadors are really figureheads; that they do not do anything except do the society act, and the secretaries have been doing the work. Now, the Secretary of State wants the secretaries to do the "society act" and let the ambassadors do the work. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. You can call this increase of salaries for secretaries a tango increase. You can vote for it if you want to. But you can save $130,000 in that item, that has not been carried before, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] ought, in good conscience, to help defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If it were to keep pace with the increased cost of living we would all vote for it. But they not only get the bonus, but this $600,000 fund enables the Secretary of State to increase salaries, so as to provide for the increased cost of living. That is put in there for that purpose.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think the secretary of a legation or an embassy should receive a salary of only $1,500 a year?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know about that. If it was all that he needed in 1915, when we increased the salary to that figure, then it is enough now. You all voted for $1,500 then. That is what is paid to the little fellows—the little secretaries. Some of them get $3,000. If it was enough in 1915, when Congress considered the question of increase of their salaries, it is all they need now. If it was all they needed in 1916, it is all they need now. If it was all they needed in 1917 and 1918 and 1919, while the war was going on, it is all they need now. What got this tango-society idea into the head of the Secretary of State?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Secretary of State belongs to the gentleman's party. He is closer to the Secretary of State than I am.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the reason the committee gives. Does the gentleman really believe a $1,500 clerk increased up to $2,500 will be enabled to circle on an equality with kings and queens and lords and ladies—to make a social hit in the royal society?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman want an answer to that question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Will it enable him to do it?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I want to say to the gentleman that I think a man who is competent to hold a position as secretary of legation or secretary of embassy can not fulfill any of the functions of the position on a salary of $1,500 a year.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is that one of the functions of this $1,500 clerk or secretary, to go in this high diplomatic and royal society?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am not saying anything about his going into society. An American secretary of legation ought to receive more than $1,500 a year.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Secretary of State puts it on that ground, and that alone. Most of the secretaries receive in salary, bonuses, and so forth, two or three and in some instances nearly four times as much.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But he ought to be entitled to live like an American citizen.

Mr. KITCHIN. We give them that bonus, and in the $600,000 fund all the increased cost of living is provided for. Now, I want the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to help me save this $130,000. It is one of the items on which he can well afford to join hands with me, and I hope he will.

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. I want to say to the gentleman who has just been questioning you that when the State Department asked for the enactment of a law in 1915 he fixed this salary at $1,500.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. In the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for 1918 did not the gentleman from Virginia recommend an increase in these salaries?

Mr. FLOOD. We did.

Mr. KITCHIN. And Congress refused to grant it; and that is what Congress ought to do right now.

Mr. PORTER. Did not the gentleman from Virginia also ask an increase of these salaries for the current year?

Mr. KITCHIN. And Congress refused to grant it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 42, noes 19.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to return to page 3, line 16, and insert the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 16, insert the following paragraphs:

"Chinese assistant secretary of legation to China, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.

"Japanese assistant secretary of embassy to Japan, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.

"Turkish assistant secretary of embassy to Turkey, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 40, noes 2.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, for the sake of the RECORD, I call attention of the Chair to the fact that on page 3, line 12, the words and figures "in all, $418,375," did not go out on the point of order Saturday, although the RECORD indicates that they did. Therefore the enrolling clerk should make sure that those words and figures appear in the bill when enrolled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that lines 16 to 20, on page 3 of the bill, were not stricken out on the point of order, and the offering of the first part of the amendment appears to be superfluous. No point of order was made against those lines so far as the Chair knows. Lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 3, went out on a point of order, but lines 16 to 20, inclusive, did not.

Mr. ROGERS. If the Chair will turn to page 2016 of the RECORD of Saturday, he will find the following:

The Clerk read as follows:
"Japanese assistant secretary of embassy to Japan, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.
"Turkish assistant secretary of embassy to Turkey, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000."
Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no law providing for this assistant secretary.

There are three paragraphs, beginning with line 16 and ending with line 23, each of which deals with the appropriations for assistant secretaries. And while it is not entirely clear that the point of order of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] relates to the first or even to the second, it seemed to the chairman of the committee [Mr. PORTER] and myself when we went over it this morning that it was sufficiently in doubt so that the safest way was to offer the amendment which the gentleman did offer.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts the Chair will state that the point of order was raised against the last paragraph, lines 21 to 23, inclusive, and did not include the paragraphs in line 16 to 20. Those two paragraphs remain in the bill. The only ones that were stricken out were the ones embraced in lines 21 to 23; so that it will be in order for the gentleman to ask to vacate the action taken on his amendment.

Mr. PORTER. I ask unanimous consent that the action of the committee be corrected so as to leave the bill as it stood when introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to restore lines 21 to 23, inclusive, on page 3 instead of covering the lines from 16 to 23 on that page. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERKS AT EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $438,000; and so far as practicable shall be appointed under civil service rules and regulations.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to keep the RECORD straight as we go along. This item of $438,000 was eliminated from the bill last Saturday on a point of order, sustained by a Chairman from the majority side of this House, who held that there was absolutely no law whatever authorizing the appropriation; that the proposal of the committee to take $438,000 out of the Treasury was a proposal not authorized by law. It was against the law of the land, and wholly unauthorized. The Republican Chairman of the committee, on a Democratic point of order, held that this $438,000 was unauthorized, and it went out of the bill. Now the committee, under this steam-roller gag rule, has brought it back and put it into the bill. And this $438,000 of the people's money will be spent and wasted.

Let me get into the RECORD where it leads us. Under the amendment recently offered by the chairman and adopted by a few Members here—about thirty-odd to 19—it has already provided for secretaries at $4,000 per annum, assistant secretaries at $3,625 per annum, second assistant secretaries at $3,000 per annum, third assistant secretaries at $2,500 per annum, making a total appropriation of $418,375; and in addition to all these secretaries, assistant secretaries, and second and third assistant secretaries, amounting to $418,375, the committee comes in now and wants to appropriate this sum of $438,000 for extra clerks for the various embassies in foreign countries. Can you, under such circumstances as this, with this kind of a record facing you, put down in black and white, from which you can not escape—can you go to your constituencies on the hustings in the next few months and tell them that you tried to economize and save money for the Government of the United States? Will they not laugh at you when you make such a claim as that? You will have a devilish hard time in making them believe it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Our constituencies are not from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, so far as the constituencies are concerned, ours in Texas can see right through any camouflage. The people of Texas can look through the camouflage of the facts in any case; and when you employ a big bunch of secretaries at $4,000, assistant secretaries at $3,625, second assistant secretaries at $3,000, and third assistant secretaries at $2,500, and so on down, making a total of $418,375, you can not make them believe that it is necessary to appropriate an additional sum of $438,000 annually for additional clerks.

Now, I am not going to take up any more time, because I can not change the action of the committee, operating under Republican bull-whip, steam-roller rule, but I leave the question right there, having gotten the RECORD straight.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment in the interest of the economy program of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. KITCHIN: Strike out the figures "$438,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming is not here again. I understood him to say in his speech this morning that there were some items in here that he thought ought to be cut down, and I give him notice right here and now that if he does not stay here and help me cut down these items which are absolutely useless, pure extravagances and nothing else, I am going home and let the committee revel in its extravagance. [Laughter.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming, who is not here and will not stay here when these outrageous items of extravagance are considered, that in 1917 the appropriation for that item amounted to only $100,000.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware that the appropriation for 1918 was $677,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but that was while we were in the war. We are out of the war, and we ought to get back to the prewar appropriations as nearly as possible. Now, I have offered an amendment which will allow $300,000 and enable the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to save $138,000 for "his economy program."

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware that the appropriation for the fiscal year ending 1920, passed three months after the signing of the armistice, amounted to $688,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I tell the gentleman I am aware of that, but that was just after the armistice, when we were winding up affairs and did not know what was going to be done. We know now what is to be done—what has been done. The treaty of peace has been made and the League of Nations established, and why we should appropriate more than we appropriated in 1916 and 1917—during the war—I can not understand. If my amendment is adopted it will still leave an appropriation three times as much as they had in 1917 and enable us to save $138,000.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware that the present Secretary of State recommended that this amount be fixed at $688,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. And that we cut it to $438,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and I tell the gentleman that the Secretary of State is a very fine, able, distinguished gentleman, a fine diplomat and all that, and makes a fine Secretary of State—no better; but he has this "tango," "royal" society idea about the clerks and secretaries. He wants to put these American clerks in society, and he asks this thing for that purpose, and no other. In my judgment, it is better to keep our secretaries and clerks out of that kowtowing society and let them sit in their offices and do business. You know that $2,000 or $2,500 or $3,000 is not going to enable one of our clerks to go into that "hifalutin' society." Why, what would one of the $2,000 clerks do when the king and queen gave one of their functions—where are they going to be seated at the table?

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to know about this now. Take these $2,500 clerks, that you want to get into society over there. When the king and queen have one of their big international functions what is going to be the precedent of these clerks? Do they come in on an equality with the ambassadors and the ministers; come in arm and arm with them? [Laughter.] Will they take the queen in and sit by her side, or to the right or to the left of the queen or the king? [Laughter.] Will the secretaries come in after the ambassadors and sit by their side? Where do the clerks come—after the secretaries or before the secretaries? When the lords and ladies give these functions, are the clerks going to sit by them? I do not think that you have it large enough, if you want to get them into "society."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware that a large number of these clerks are stenographers and typists?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but just think about a stenographer going into "royal society"! Think of the insult that this committee and the Secretary of State and the Congress is going to offer to the queens and kings and the princes and the princesses and the lords and the ladies of Europe by shoving a stenographer into their society! [Laughter.] Why, gentlemen, I just can not stand for it, and why Mr. MONDELL is going to stand for it I do not know. Do you suppose that he is going to stand for this tango foolishness? I do not see, to save my life, when I am giving him an opportunity to have somebody stand with him why he is not here. Mr. BLANTON and myself will certainly stand with him on this matter. [Laughter.] We will stand by him and save $138,000, and the appropriation will still be three times as large as it was in 1917.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I yield to both the gentlemen.

Mr. TEMPLE. The speech of the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. BLANTON. North Carolina.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman from North Carolina. The speech of the gentleman from North Carolina is a very good Primrose and West speech, and it reminds me very much of the famous inquiry of Huckleberry Finn—"How much do a king git?"

Mr. KITCHIN. Let the gentleman just tell me now. Are you really voting for this thing in order to give a stenographer a higher standing in royal society? That is what the Secretary of State is asking. Is that why the gentleman from Pennsylvania votes for this?

Mr. TEMPLE. That is absolutely not what the Secretary of State asks for, and that is not why I am going to vote for it. This is a matter of sober business, not a minstrel end-man affair.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman vote for it on the ground put by the Secretary of State?

Mr. TEMPLE. Not on the ground put by the Secretary of State as stated by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, as stated by him—

As lieutenants of the ambassadors and ministers, the secretaries must be able to mingle with all classes of people and associate upon a plane of equality——

Mr. TEMPLE. Does the gentleman know the difference between a secretary and a clerk?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes—

with the members of the highest social and official circles of the capitals at which they are stationed.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Secretary of State put it on the ground that I stated and I want to say——

Mr. TEMPLE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that what the gentleman read refers to secretaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am talking about secretaries' clerks.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman has been talking about clerks.

Mr. KITCHIN. I asked the gentleman if he voted for the increase in the secretaries' salaries a while ago upon the ground stated by the Secretary of State.

Mr. TEMPLE. The point under discussion now is the appropriation for the salaries of clerks to embassies, and not for secretaries.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know, and I am saving you $138,000. I do not blame the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] for being in favor of these clerks going into this high society, because he has been one of them—I mean that he has gone into this "society" in his visits to London and Paris and other parts of Europe, and he knows what it is—and of course he wants all Americans in office over there, whether they are stenographers or clerks or janitors, to get into it and experience its emotions and sensations.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I want to say that I have a very high regard for the gentleman's opinion at most times, and it seems to me that the Secretary of State's department is a department that should not be disposed of in the spirit of levity.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit. I am trying to show you gentlemen how ridiculous this is.

Mr. BEGG. Is the Secretary's word any good? The Secretary of State said——

Mr. KITCHIN. The committee evidently did not think his word was very good, because in two dozen places they have cut him down in the aggregate $3,000,000.

Mr. BEGG. The Secretary of State testified before this committee that if he did not get increases for his clerks he would lose the clerks; that they were going into other avenues of business.

Mr. KITCHIN. But my amendment will still give three times as much as they had in 1917.

Mr. BEGG. He testified that even with what we are allowing him it would be questionable whether he would hold these people, but, as far as I am concerned, I will go with the gentleman as far as he wishes in crippling the Secretary of State.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, I do not want to cripple him.

Mr. BEGG. But I do think, in a spirit of fairness to our country and fairness to our Nation's business and reputation and honor, that we either ought to fire the Secretary of State or take his word when he soberly and honestly comes before the committee and gives it.

Mr. KITCHIN. You have repudiated his word to the extent of $3,700,000.

Mr. BEGG. I beg to differ with the gentleman. The Secretary of State's department admitted they could possibly get along without that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then, the economy in this bill is because of the Secretary and not because of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to return to page 4, line 22, to insert the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: Page 4, line 22, to page 6, line 24, inclusive, insert the following.

The Clerk proceeded to read the balance of the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Inasmuch as the rule makes any section of the bill in order, I submit to the Chair, on a point of order, that it is improper for the committee, by amendment, to offer more than one section at a time, because the House has a right to vote on these sections separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to agree with the gentleman from Texas. The Chair assumes that while one paragraph is considered at a time, it would not be in order to offer an amendment to the whole bill. If the gentleman will offer——

Mr. BLANTON. I want to beg the pardon of the Rules Committee if I am guilty of committing lese majeste in making a point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, insert:

"For 10 student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation and consulates in China, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the legation or consulates in China so long as his services may be required within a period of five years."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 4, line 22, after the word "For," strike out "ten" and insert "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by the committee: Page 4, line 22, after the word "For," strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of my colleagues—the few who happen to be present in the House at this time—to the fact that a little later on we are going to provide, according to the Republican program, for 6 student interpreters to Japan. Why should we have 10 student interpreters to China, drawing $1,500 a year, for whom we pay $200 apiece tuition, and for whom we pay $600 for quarters, and have only 6 to Japan? If 6 student interpreters to Japan are sufficient, why should not 6 student interpreters to China be sufficient? I merely call it to the attention of my colleagues, who are sensible men and business men—at least some of them are; most of them are, I presume; all of them should be business men—why we should put in 10 for China and 6 only for Japan. If it is necessary for us to have American student interpreters going to school in China, drawing a salary of $1,500, drawing $200 apiece for tuition, and $600 for quarters, why should we not have 10 for Japan? If the committee has been consistent in providing only 6 for Japan, then I am sure my amendment is good, seeking to reduce the number to China from 10 to 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, insert:
"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters in China, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, insert:
"For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,500 each, $9,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the embassy or consulates in Japan so long as his services may be required within a period of five years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 36, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 21, insert:
"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, insert:
"For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Turkey so long as his services may be required within a period of five years."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how many of these students they have in Turkey now actually studying?

Mr. PORTER. What was the question?

Mr. LITTLE. How many of these 10 student interpreters have they actually?

Mr. PORTER. I think they have the full number, although I am not sure.

Mr. LITTLE. How many consulates have they in Turkey?

Mr. PORTER. I do not have the number handy, but I will give it to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, Turkey is a defunct empire. If there was a time when there was reason for having 10 students to learn its language and customs and familiarize themselves with its business, it has gone by. Turkey is divided into other countries de facto and soon will be de jure. There is no reason why we should involve ourselves in these useless expenses. The country should save this money, for the simple reason that Turkey is no longer Turkey, and there is no longer any demand like there was for these students. There never was any, anyway. There never was at any time any necessity for it.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Not just now. I will yield in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LITTLE. At the very least, you ought to cut this down. I am going to ask the chairman if he would not agree to a motion to reduce this from 10 to 4?

Mr. PORTER. I would not care to do so except upon the recommendation of the Department of State. It is only a question of time when we will resume our relations with Turkey. These students in Turkey are absolutely necessary to the service.

Mr. LITTLE. Let me say right here that they are not. There is no business in Turkey to justify any such selection, and if the department is coming to the committee and telling us that we are going to resume relations with Turkey in the very near future there is hardly anybody here who would believe it. There is not any more Turkey, but we will resume relations with some part of Turkey at some time. The 10 student interpreters in China are very useful, but these in Turkey are of no value. Let us save a little money here. What is the use in making this appropriation? We are allowing the Department of State, which, it has developed, does not know much about it, to mislead us here.

The other day I made some suggestions as to certain idiosyncrasies which had been recommended by the department which were found to be mistakes, and it turned out that the thing was in worse shape than I thought, because when the discussion was over and the storm wound up it was ascertained that you did not have enough law to found practically any appropriation upon it at all, and you had to go and frame a rule and have it brought in here to support it. This committee is not to blame for that, however. The other side has done it for years, brought in such a bill, and it is not unnatural that both committees should follow the lead of the State Department. The committees are not to blame; but you are to be blamed if, having these mistakes pointed out to you, you still continue them. There is no one in the State Department who is competent to inform you about this. It is a fact that the reports of the State Department are often incorrect and inaccurate, so that you can not found items in a bill upon such reports. You should get what data you can together, and then do the best you can. Here is an admirable instance where a saving can be made. Here is a country that has gone out of business, where we formerly had 10 students, and we have the same number in China, a country of 400,000,000 people, almost, with 10 student interpreters. Can you not see at a glance that there is a mistake here?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman from Kansas understand that these student interpreters are being educated in order to be of assistance to certain financial interests in this country in establishing industries in Turkey to compete with American factories?

Mr. LITTLE. I did not so understand it.

Mr. KING. We might as well understand what the purpose of this bill is.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "four," on page 5, line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE to the amendment offered by the committee: Page 5, line 24, after the word "For," strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already taken his time on the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I can wait for another amendment, then.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we had better proceed with the consideration of the bill, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am here for, to proceed with the consideration of the bill. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that I am entitled to be heard on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman would have the right, under the rules of the House, to make a speech in advance, and then to make another speech after offering the motion. It could only be done under unanimous consent.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to be heard in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, well, I will get time later on.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "six," to provide for 6 student interpreters instead of 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has moved to strike out "ten" and insert "four."

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out "ten" and insert "six."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a while ago the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who has had wide experience in consular work and is the only man in the House who has had such personal experience, asked the chairman of this committee how many of these students we now have in Turkey. The chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee could not tell him. He did not know anything about it. He brings in a measure before the House to have a provision made law when he does not even know and he can not answer a pertinent question. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asked another question. He asked the chairman of this committee whether or not it was going to be necessary to keep these students there, and how many interpreters we had at this time in Turkey.

The chairman said he could not tell it. He did not know. Now, the committee has brought in a bill here providing only 6 student interpreters to Japan, a great big country like Japan, a country whose language is hard to learn, and yet they have provided for a country like Turkey 10 student interpreters when we have only allowed 6 for Japan. Ah, the gentleman from Kansas touched the keynote Saturday when in discussing this matter he said the item in this bill was pure graft, and in a large measure it is. It is for the purpose of putting a bunch of pet favorites over there who want to take a trip to Japan, a trip to Turkey, or a trip to China, go to school, get $1,500 a year, get $200 for tuition and $600 for quarters, and after getting the education come back here and sell it to the merchants of this country.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware that these students have to sign an agreement to remain in the service for five years?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but what does that amount to, and what is the agreement worth? I have seen lady schoolteachers in my State sign an agreement when entering a State normal school to learn how to teach, that after graduation they would teach so many years in the State, and then when they came out they would marry as soon as they graduated and not a day did they teach. How are you going to reach them? They merely say they will do it, but they do not do it. What comes after that? Nothing. The gentleman from Kansas was right when he said it was monkey business, but we can not expect anything else with the Republican steam-roller power that is in the saddle ready to bleed the Treasury to death.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I make the point of order that that is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this discussion about economy in this appropriation bill, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, induces me to make an observation. I notice the bill takes up the various activities of the Department of State, which has to do with the foreign relations of the Government of the United States. It takes up separately each activity and makes an appropriation therefor. I understood the distinguished chairman of the committee to say that the committee in formulating the bill heard evidence from the Secretary of State and other sources, and then exercised such judgment as the committee was permitted to exercise in agreeing upon the items of the appropriation for these different activities.

I have observed also that in the discussion so far it has been taken up by paragraphs, each appropriation discussed, and amendments offered or otherwise. I am curious to know why that course was pursued with reference to this appropriation bill for the Diplomatic and Consular Service and not pursued with reference to the river and harbor bill. Why, if the steering committee desired to economize, did they not pursue the same policy in this bill that they did with the river and harbor bill? Why did not they adopt the same plan that they did with the river and harbor bill?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will not make any progress by that method.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. All I want is to save time.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will not save time in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SMALL. I am discussing this bill, Mr. Chairman. The committee has brought in items aggregating upwards of $8,000,000. I assume that that was the aggregate of these several appropriations for the various activities of the Diplomatic and Consular Service. Why did not the steering committee say that $8,000,000 is too much and direct the Committee on Foreign Affairs to make it, say, $6,000,000? They could have saved $2,000,000 in that way.

Why not make it $4,000,000? Would the steering committee reply that $4,000,000, when divided up among the activities of the Diplomatic and Consular Service, would not meet the needs of the service or that it could not be intelligently and wisely allocated? I might answer that the suggestion of $12,000,000 for the river and harbor bill was made without rhyme or reason; it had no application to any of the estimates considered by the committee. It had no reference to the various activities for the improvement and maintenance of the rivers and harbors of the country as set forth in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers. Why did not you make this appropriation $6,000,000, and save over $2,000,000, just like you saved it in the river and harbor bill?

Now, gentlemen, I am going to continue to ask this question about the various appropriation bills until Members of the House shall understand the flagrant injustice that has been done to that great activity of the Government, the maintenance and improvement of our rivers and harbors, so closely associated with the prosperity of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more. I want to keep him straight.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the time of his colleague be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I understand, the steering committee intended to make this a lump sum and let the Secretary of State spend it as he saw fit.

Mr. SMALL. In this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I understand that was the program.

Mr. SMALL. I am shocked.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman need not be shocked; that might be the wise thing to do. But they found that the Secretary of State was liable to spend all of it on these secretaries, janitors, and stenographers in getting them into real society.

Mr. SMALL. Could not the Secretary of State allot the appropriations under existing law as wisely as the Chief of Engineers could allot it under the river and harbor bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. The committee did not object so much to that, but they did not want the Secretary of State to pay it all to the secretaries and stenographers and janitors in order to get them into society. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMALL. I thank the gentleman for his explanation. [Laughter.]

I have received a copy of resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Madison, Ind., on January 23, 1920, which, by leave of the House, I append to my remarks:

Whereas the action of the House of Representatives this week in curtailing 70 per cent the usual annual appropriations for river and harbor improvements must inevitably delay the completion of projects important in our national transportation system: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Commercial Club of Madison, Ind., That we view with profound regret what we must consider a backward and most unfortunate step;

That we cite the many years which have elapsed since the construction of the Davis Island Dam, the first upon the Ohio River, an average man's lifetime, and the system still so incomplete as to be comparatively useless.

We cite the fact that 10 years ago, in 1910, Congress passed a resolution affirming its purpose to complete the Ohio River project by 1920. Under the present policy and appropriations it will require at least six more years, and 1920 is here.

We regard as deceptive and illusory the plausible proposition that the unexpended balances in the Treasury are sufficient for all Ohio River work possible this fiscal year.

We contend the customary appropriation of $5,000,000 for new work upon the Ohio River should have been made in order that advantage might be taken of low water, if we have it, or other favorable conditions; that the construction of many locks and dams might be carried on simultaneously; and we urge that this annual appropriation for new locks and dams upon the Ohio River be yet made and be subject to the call of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

We protest against the new theory advanced by the honorable chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that appropriations should only be made to take care of existing commerce. We assert a vast commerce has been driven from the Ohio River by lack of a channel of sufficient depth and the piratical rate cutting and other hostile and illegal practices of railroad corporations; that this commerce will be immediately restored by the completion of the system of locks and dams and the enactment of proper protective legislation; that to propose to wait until the commerce restores itself unaided is fallacious and bears the appearance of being suggested in bad faith or by want of thought.

We, therefore, as representatives of the commercial and manufacturing interests of the city of Madison, and the agricultural interests of this section of the Ohio Valley, respectfully petition and urge upon the House of Representatives the reconsideration of their action in respect to the river and harbor appropriation bill, H. R. 11892, and do hereby earnestly request that it be amended and passed in the form recommended by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the benefit and advantage of the entire country.

Resolved, That we especially call upon our representative in Congress, Hon. JOHN S. BENHAM, to actively and vigorously sustain the views we have presented, and also urge the same effectiveness upon the part of our United States Senators from Indiana, Hon. HARRY S. NEW and Hon. JAMES E. WATSON.

Resolved, That our secretary is hereby instructed to send copies of these resolutions to Hon. CHARLES A. KENNEDY, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, House of Representatives; Hon. JOHN S. BENHAM, Member of Congress; and Senators HARRY S. NEW and JAMES E. WATSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last half of the section. On Saturday I made a motion to change Luxemburg over to Belgium, where it ought to be and was promptly met with a point of order that it was not within the law. It gradually developed that most of the rest of the bill was in the same situation, so that no time was made in that way. Just now I have made a motion to reduce 10 interpreter students to 6, and because the State Department so recommended and without any knowledge of the facts the committee insists upon putting in 10. I have just heard an inquiry from one of the committee in respect to the language spoken over there. In the first place, most of the people in the old Turkish Empire speak Arabic. All of the people who live in Egypt and about Damascus and Jerusalem, and in Mesopotamia, and that country over there, speak Arabic. In Kurdistan, they speak Kurdish. In Armenia, they speak Armenian. The only place where many of the people of the old empire speak Turkish is in Anatolia, a northwestern Province of Asia Minor, and in Turkey in Europe. A very small percentage of this territory was occupied by people who spoke Turkish. Practically all of the trade was done with people who speak Arabic.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In a moment. If you will turn to the bill itself, you will see that it says to teach the people to speak Turkish and the other language in the Empire. That is because the man who originally drew that item knew that Turkish was a very minor language in that country. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TEMPLE. I was merely going to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these student interpreters are to speak not only Turkish but any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service at the embassies and consulates in Turkey.

Mr. LITTLE. But I beat you to it. Just now I gave that information.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman is assuming that the committee did not know when that language was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Evidently some of the committee did not know it, because one of them was trying to tell us why they should be taught Turkish. A very small part of those interpreters would be taught Turkish, as I have suggested to the gentleman. Arabic would be the most useful language. They do not teach Arabic in Constantinople, but it is taught at Cairo and at the American colleges at Beirut and Assiut. Those people should be educated at Assiut and Beirut. There is no excuse in the world for educating 10 interpreters at Constantinople. There is no business through the country that warrants it or makes it necessary. At Roberts College are hundreds of young men, Turks, learning English.

There are scores on scores of American missionaries and students in American colleges there who speak English and Arabic and Turkish. There is, as I said, a college at Constantinople where they teach young Turks English. There are no such high-class institutions in Japan and China, maintained for the purpose of doing that. You do not any more need 10 student interpreters or 1 in Turkey than you need an extra thumb on one of your hands. The committee has just done what the State Department has told them, and has slapped it in. I want to support the committee. They have evidently saved a great deal of money. You can tell that is so by the fuss that is made by the Democrats on the other side of the aisle. You men have been doing very good work from the way they act. A man never groans unless he is hurt, and they would not be howling around here about saving money if you had not done so. But that has nothing to do with the hiring of 10 interpreters for Turkey. Roberts College and the college at Beirut and at Assiut teach men both Arabic and Turkish. There are thousands of young men who are seeking to go to these colleges to learn English, and the committee should not permit the department to waste this $15,000 when so many young men are studying these languages there in the mission schools. Let us be reasonable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I have not any special knowledge to warrant me in giving an opinion on the proposition which has been discussed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE]. I know that he has special knowledge of that proposition. However, Mr. Chairman, I want to give expression before this committee rises to my great satisfaction on the bill which has been presented by the committee. I think they have had in mind the main idea. It consists of two propositions. In the first place, a condition that requires the strengthening of our Diplomatic Service, and a condition that requires that more than ever before, in order that we may be intelligently and adequately represented in the countries to which we will be required to send our representatives, we must enlarge and strengthen the present service. There never was a time in the history of the country when we needed to strengthen our Diplomatic and Consular Service more than at the present. It seems to me that there can not be a man on the floor of this House but must recognize that fact. I think the committee has done well under the circumstances, and within the limits existing, to see to it that the present shall not be a period of retrogression, and that we should generally strengthen the service for the time when we will have to very materially enlarge it. Within a very short time, in order to decently, not to say adequately, represent this country, we will be compelled to enlarge our Diplomatic and Consular Service. I am very glad, indeed, that the committee has done what it could under the conditions that exist with regard to our financial situation and the condition of the Treasury in presenting a bill here which, in my judgment, ought to receive the support of every member of the committee and of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 11, insert:
"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, after line 19, insert:
"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Japan, $600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, insert:
"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The gentleman animadverted to the necessity of interpreters for the future, which I recognize as much as anybody. I want to call attention to an incident which may illustrate to you the absolute fallacy of the idea of expending taxpayers' money to learn Arabic and Turkish. We have a school at Assiut to teach young men the Arabic and the English languages. At Beirut we have a similar school. In the two there have been thousands of young men. They go to those schools and they learn the English language, and there are hundreds of people in that Empire who speak the English language just as well as you and I do. This section is for the purpose of educating somebody and giving him a lift. The opportunity is admirably given at Assiut, Beirut, and elsewhere.

The thing I had in mind, which may illustrate to you the absurdity of it, is a little incident that occurred to me in Montreal a few years ago when I was going down to the depot. I saw a young man who had a book in his hand, with a paper cover on it, that was printed in Arabic. It made me think of the old times. Of course, I know not so many words of Arabic, but I slipped my arm about him as I went along and I said, "Nahar ac zied, effendi." He was pleased to hear somebody speak his mother tongue. I do not know enough Arabic to talk very long, and I exhausted all the little that I had, and then I went to talking the English language, when I found that he had been at Beirut and spoke as good English as I did. And I found that the book he was reading was one of Shakespeare's plays that had been translated into Arabic.

I feel that we are being worked by somebody down in the department who does not know anything about it. This House ought to have more respect for itself. You do not say a word when your President talks about Poland and Czechoslavakia and recognizes them. Why do not you say something about these things? Where is the law that says you can not send a minister to Armenia or to Georgia, when he is sending commissioners to Budapest and Riga? I think the commissioner there gets 75 per cent of a minister's pay. The President does not ask you to do it; he goes ahead and does it. Why do you not take upon yourselves a little responsibility and do what is right about such a little thing as this?

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. PORTER. If the gentleman thinks that we should have embassies and legations in these nations, why does he not introduce a bill to that effect?

Mr. LITTLE. If I thought I would get any more consideration for it than I got for the resolution, or amendment, which I introduced here yesterday, I would do it.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman introduce a bill?

Mr. LITTLE. I will if you advise it.

Mr. PORTER. The gentleman seems to be convinced of the wisdom of doing it.

Mr. LITTLE. As I said, if I do not get any higher welcome than I have so far with my suggestions, it would not be a wise thing to do it. But if the gentleman advises me to do it, I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas has spoken of the institutions to be found within the Turkish Empire and in Egypt, a former dependency of the Turkish Empire. The committee knows, of course, of the institutions mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas. I am personally acquainted with a good many of the professors in the college at Assiut. In spite of the gentleman's acquaintance with conditions in the Turkish Empire he entirely misunderstands the purpose of this paragraph of the bill. He speaks of institutions where natives can learn to speak the English language. It is the purpose of this appropriation to make provision for the reverse of that. It is the purpose to teach the various languages used in Turkey to Americans who are to be employed in the embassies.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman knows that it is one of the requirements of those schools that they shall know Arabic before they begin teaching. You have a splendid array of missionaries in Turkey——

Mr. TEMPLE. You could never get one of them to leave the missionary work and accept the salary of interpreter.

Mr. LITTLE. I had one at Alexandria while I was there.

Mr. TEMPLE. But he continued his missionary work at the same time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield? In what language are the publications of the Turkish Empire printed?

Mr. TEMPLE. They are printed in more than one.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Are they printed in Turkish?

Mr. TEMPLE. In Turkish and other languages.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to the provision which says:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States.

They are not Arabs and Turks who may be taught English but Americans who are to be employed in the embassies and consulates, and who must be American citizens, loyal to this country, worthy of being trusted with confidential business, and must be made familiar with the languages that are spoken in Turkey, including the Turkish, Arabic, and others.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the gentleman tell me how many Americans there are acting as students?

Mr. TEMPLE. I looked in the directory a moment ago and found, in spite of the disorganization of the service which necessarily followed the breaking off relations, there are still persons who are drawing salaries as provided in this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, I would like to say that if the gentleman from Kansas in all of the years he spent in Turkey, and with his distinguished ability, was unable to learn the Turkish language, does it not only emphasize the necessity for providing some method for teaching American citizens the Turkish language in order that they may perform the necessary service?

Mr. TEMPLE. It seems to me it is necessary, if the diplomatic and consular work is to be carried on by Americans who are loyal to this country, to teach our own people these languages, and to begin when they are young enough to learn them.

Mr. LITTLE. That emphasizes the point I am making. There was not anyone in Egypt talking Turkish.

Mr. TEMPLE. But they teach some of the other languages used in that country and referred to in line 2, page 6.

Mr. LITTLE. They teach Arabic out there. The point is made clear by the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] did not say how many of those students there are on the record.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman knows very well that we have broken off diplomatic relations with Turkey, and that all of the diplomatic and consular officers were removed, and we are now looking after American interests under an informal arrangement by means of an American commission as distinguished from an embassy or legation, and are making only partial progress. I call the gentleman's attention to testimony which appears in the committee hearings, as follows:

The situation all over Europe is anomalous; and the action is not to be determined by any prewar principle of international law. In Turkey we have a high commissioner who is an admiral; we have a commissioner who was formerly American consul general, and we have several consular officers who do not function as consular officers, but are unofficial assistants to the high commissioner and the commissioner. It is very necessary that those officials be there as observers and workers in cooperation with the representatives of the allied Governments at those places, for the protection of legitimate American interests.

Outside of the State Department nobody knows, I presume, whether additional adjustments have been made within the last week or in the last 24 hours.

Mr. LITTLE. How many do you find in the record?

Mr. TEMPLE. The record is available to the gentleman. Now, these interpreters, American citizens, who learn the languages of the various parts of the Turkish Empire——

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not catch the question that the gentleman from Kansas asked and what the gentleman's answer was.

Mr. TEMPLE. His question was how many student interpreters there are now. I say our whole Diplomatic and Consular Service has been withdrawn from Turkey and has not been restored. It is impossible to tell how much progress has been made from day to day in the reestablishment of this work through the American mission in the Turkish Empire.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There are no student interpreters needed in Turkey at the present time?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. There is one in Egypt and there are two in Japan and there are five in China and one in Siam.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Have we not passed upon the question as to whether or not we are to have these 10 interpreters?

Mr. TEMPLE. There is an amendment still pending. That is what is under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, did I not have an amendment pending before that was to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. No. It was a motion in opposition to the amendment. The Chair will state that when the committee adjourned on Saturday the committee was dividing on the paragraph on line 24 of page 6. The question is on agreeing to that item.

The item was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters, including exchange of same, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, including such loss on bills of exchange to officers of the United States courts for China, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $810,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the total sum appropriated by this paragraph, $810,000, for the expenses of embassies, seems like a very large sum, but I have no doubt the committee went over it carefully, as they have done with respect to all the items in this bill, the framing of which I very much commend, and it is probably justified.

I listened with much interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], made when the rule was offered to-day, and with most of what he said I entirely agree. He seemed, however, to be somewhat concerned with reference to a matter that never has caused me any worry of late years. If I understood correctly the subject to which he was referring, I take it that he had in mind the salaries which are paid to our ambassadors and ministers. Complaint has been constantly made that they were not sufficient, and that by reason of that fact they had to be filled, as is sometimes stated—and I think the gentleman from Ohio himself so said—from the ranks of the idle rich.

Now, there was a time when it was highly important as to who should fill these ambassadorial posts. Years ago, before the Atlantic cables were established, communication took sometimes a month, and in the early days of the Republic sometimes two months. The ambassador had to conduct the international affairs of our country entirely without any advice from Washington. At the present day, however, the cable is at his instant command, and he gets his directions every day, and sometimes every hour, from here. The principal thing that he does is to make speeches which are noncommittal in nature. He ought to be a very affable man, a very attractive man in personality, one who will get along with everybody, give no offense, and do but little that will commit his Government to anything whatever, except as he is instructed from Washington. For that reason I see no reason why these posts should not be filled by wealthy men. It is altogether different from the situation that would be presented if we undertook to fill the ranks of this Assembly or of the Senate solely with wealthy men, in which event the greater portion of our citizens would not be represented at all.

Mr. BAER. Does not the gentleman think that would be dangerous, in view of the advantages that these men would have in trade relations, which is very important? These men might be connected with large corporations, which would make it inexpedient for us to confine it simply to wealthy men. If you confine these appointments, with all the information that they obtain with regard to foreign trade, to men of wealth, it would be dangerous. I think we ought to pay our ambassadors enough to secure the services of efficient men. I think we should pay them even double, if necessary, so that they would have plenty on which to live in decency and would be respected by the people of foreign nations. I do not think this is the place to economize.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The consuls have more to do with trade relations than the ambassadors themselves. The positions of consuls ought not to be filled solely with the ranks of wealthy men. But the principal qualification of an ambassador is to appear well in high society, to handle himself in a creditable manner in the midst of the society in which he is presented. He should be, as I said, agreeable and affable to all, and very often a poor man might not be so well qualified in that respect. Moreover, he often is compelled to entertain in a very expensive manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, may I proceed for two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A poor man, I say, might not be so well qualified to shine in that class of society as one who has spent all his life in their midst. Our ambassadors have distinguished themselves of late years, not so much by what they have done as by what they have not done. They have not got our Nation into any trouble. They have always expressed themselves in an agreeable way toward the nations to which they were accredited. They often distinguish themselves as after-dinner speakers. They promote friendly social relations and create mutual good feeling, and use their money in lavish entertainment. That is what they are principally for, at the present time. They control nothing of the important matters, and for that reason I think we might well use their wealth in this manner.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Do these foreign ambassadors have anything to do with the determining of the policy of this Government in foreign countries, such as the policy in Mexico?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They do not and ought not to, in my opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Is there anything in the bill that compels a man to be rich or poor in order to be an ambassador?

Mr. ROGERS. It is what is not in the bill that has that effect.

Mr. BAER. If the ambassador does not get enough salary, unless he is rich, he can not live over there.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is said that our ambassadors can not live in proper style on the sums that are appropriated for that purpose. Probably they can not if they make the display and go through the pomp and ceremony that for ages has attached to their position. Many of us, like myself, consider all this as a legacy of folly inherited from the days when kings were considered divine and their representatives were expected by their gilded trappings and retinues of servants to exemplify the greatness and wealth of their sovereign lords. If some wealthy man wants to spend his money in this idle show, which, to my mind, is as senseless as a peacock's strut with his tail feathers extended, let him do it; but I am opposed to using the people's money for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend this paragraph by inserting a comma after the word "expenses," in line 2, which the context clearly requires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to insert a comma after the word "expenses," in line 2. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11606) for a bridge over the Wabash River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3451. An act authorizing and directing the United States Shipping Board to adjust and pay the claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], in a much milder and more genteel fashion than that employed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] on last Saturday, seems to have sought to minimize the dignity and functions of our foreign ambassadors and ministers. Gentlemen who were in the Chamber on last Saturday will recall that the gentleman from Massachusetts, while the question of the appropriation for ambassadors to Russia, Turkey, and Austria-Hungary was under discussion, sought to characterize these gentlemen, not by name but by a sweeping charge, as mere figureheads, and later on in his discussion he referred to some of the United States ministers serving in recent years at least as having been "scum of the earth." Now, I take it that since we were then discussing the ambassadors at Petrograd, Turkey, and Austria-Hungary, the gentleman in employing the language "figureheads" must have referred to some of the gentlemen representing this country at those courts in the recent past.

I repudiate and denounce the proposition that an ambassador representing this country in a foreign capital should not possess large ability, and I also deny that those who have represented this country within the last few years have been lacking in those qualities. I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] in using the word "figurehead" could have referred to Mr. Francis, of Missouri, who rose from a newsboy on the streets of St. Louis to be the governor of a great State, and who so acceptably and capably performed the duties of ambassador to Russia? I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts could have referred to Mr. Morgenthau, the distinguished gentleman who, though I understand he was born in a foreign land, rendered such patriotic service during the war? I wonder if he could have referred to Mr. Penfield, who served at Vienna? I wonder, if he had no reference to those gentlemen, if he included within his description Mr. Sharp, a former Member of this House, who at Paris during the troublous times of the war represented the interests of this Government so efficiently and so admirably as to meet the approval of the whole Nation? Or, if he did not refer to any of these gentlemen, perhaps he had in his mind that other representative of this Government, Mr. Brand Whitlock, who at Brussels during the time of the German invasion succored the needy and interceded for the helpless and held the one lone outpost of justice and of right amidst that savage storm?

I repudiate the doctrine as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that because of the cable it is not necessary for our representatives to be men of large ability and wide vision. It is very easy for one who has not the proper qualifications to involve this country in troubles with foreign powers. It is very easy to do that which he should not do or to fail to do that which he should do and thereby bring about a very critical state of affairs. Of course he should be in communication with Washington by cable, because all our ambassadors are representatives of the President of the United States, who under the Constitution is given the power to carry on the foreign affairs of this Government, and who is responsible for their discharge; but that fact does not necessarily imply that his agents or servants should not be men of large ability and wide experience, and I utterly denounce such a proposition.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment, to reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The CHAIRMAN. Can not the gentleman address his remarks to the next paragraph?

Mr. LITTLE. I want to speak right now in answer to the gentleman from Texas.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] wisely suggested that the American ambassadors ought to be men of ability. That is true. It is singularly unfortunate that more talent is not called into that service. The reason is this: It has been heralded abroad for a long time that nobody except a rich man can afford to take one of these positions. That is done with the direct purpose of preventing men of ability from going after them. Both parties select for these positions men who have contributed to their campaign funds and who, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] suggested, have pleasing address and can get along without breaking the window panes, and who are sent over there in the hope that they will get through without getting us into trouble. For that reason there is no demand for these positions by men of real ability who have not independent means.

In the old days an ambassador was the personal representative of his king, and when he went to another capital he represented his king and was entitled to the same courtesy and attention and ceremonies that his king would be because he was the king's personal representative. So, it was a great thing to be an ambassador. All that remains of that now is the old custom of being ceremonious. It is the one place on earth where fine clothes are the principal distinguishing characteristic of the function. As has been suggested here, the business is largely done from the capitals of the respective countries, and not through the ambassador. The wiser and better he is, the better it is for his country, but if we could get rid of the idea that nobody except a rich man can go, we would have some ability in these positions, and we would not be told that they were such figureheads. There is not much to it. Of course, the consular office is the place where the principal business is done. Practically all of any importance is done through the consul, and the committee can not go too far in backing up the Consular Service, and in sending American citizens with strong arms and strong minds to extend our business relations abroad, and they can not go too far. I wish we could get away from the ideas of these ceremonies and fancy clothes, and these idle men. I said to an ambassador once, "What do you do at home?" He said, "I try as hard as I can to do nothing." He had so much money that he did not have to work, and he did not want to work. The idea apparently is to select an ambassador who has got so much money that he does not have to work at home, and send him abroad. That ought to be stopped.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman understands that when we send an ambassador to a foreign country he must follow their customs. Is not that true?

Mr. LITTLE. No. Why should he?

Mr. LAZARO. He must attend the functions to which he is invited. He must become friendly.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes. He has got to have a set of evening clothes and a white shirt.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman must know that it costs money to do that.

Mr. LITTLE. Benjamin Franklin did not have money, and I have never heard that he made a failure. Who are the representatives of France, England, and Italy here? What difference does it make whether they go to parties or not? How does that assist them in doing the business of their countries? An ambassador is sent to attend to certain duties, and it does not make any difference whether he has a dress suit or not. That does not assist him to carry out the business of his Government. If it does we have a mighty cheap set of skates down there, and the same everywhere else. It is not the man who is successful in society that makes the best ambassador; it is the man of ability and good sense, whether he goes to a party or not.

Mr. LAZARO. I do not mean that it is the man who does society the best, but at the same time if an ambassador is invited to functions he must be courteous and accept.

Mr. LITTLE. A college professor as poor as skim milk may be courteous and a man of good sense. There are several Members of Congress who have not enough money to sustain them through life, but who would make good ministers. Wealth is not necessary to an ambassadorship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

STEAM LAUNCH FOR EMBASSY AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Hiring of steam launch for use of embassy at Constantinople, $1,800.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question for information. I move to strike out the last word. Here is $1,800 for a steam launch over in Constantinople. Why do you want to have a launch when you have nobody to ride in it?

Mr. PORTER. The money will not be used unless there is somebody there to use it. It might be more correct to say that the American Government has a representative in Constantinople who may have use for the launch.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to say, while I have the five minutes, that I overlooked these items on page 7, and thought that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was going to take care of that proposition, and he would cut down the estimates about $200,000, and possibly have offered an amendment himself, but he has left me, and I have no encouragement, and stand no show in getting a reduction of the bill unless the chairman of the steering committee helps me. Therefore I did not call the attention of the House to that item, which is about twice as large as it was in 1917. Possibly we could have saved $200,000 to the program of the gentleman from Wyoming. But I want to say that I am gratified that my friend from Ohio has set me straight on this economy program of this committee. In the report it says that the committee has saved $3,070,000 from the estimates of the department. I thought that was the work of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the steering committee and the Foreign Affairs Committee. I thought we ought to congratulate them, but my friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], a member of the committee, informs the House that this economy was not effected by the steering committee or by Mr. MONDELL or by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but it really was effected by the Secretary of State. He says that the Secretary of State told him that they could cut it out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not recall in any period of the last two Congresses that the gentleman from North Carolina, chairman of the steering committee, endeavored to cut down the appropriations.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, we never had any steering committee. We believed in and had confidence in the committees and their qualifications, and that they would do the right and proper thing. We did not have any steering committee where one man is worth 25 votes. The gentleman from Philadelphia, Mr. Moore, and now Mr. DARROW, is considered by your plan of organization to be worth 25 times as much, with 25 times more sense and 25 times more judgment, with 25 times more influence, than your distinguished leader Mr. MONDELL. We did not have committees appointed in that way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is talking at cross purposes. I was not speaking of the committee on committees.

Mr. KITCHIN. We did not have one.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was talking of the steering committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. We did not have a steering committee.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman from North Carolina is talking about the committee on committees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from North Carolina always refuses to discuss that.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from North Dakota does not understand his own organization and none of the other Republicans understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina can have his time extended so as to answer my question. I think it is important that the gentleman explain the work of his steering committee. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLANTON. The regular order is, Is there objection? If the leader on this side of the House can not have five minutes I object and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the Republicans do not want me to tell them about their own organization——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to have the gentleman tell us about his steering committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was being taken, when Mr. ROGERS asked for tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is out of order when the Chair has found that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ROGERS. The Chair has not announced that there was no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. No; but he knows that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. ROGERS and Mr. BLANTON.

The committee divided.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina can have five minutes, I will withdraw the point of no quorum before the announcement is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not withdraw the point of no quorum.

The tellers reported that there were 2 ayes and 55 noes.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers report on this vote that the ayes are 2 and the noes are 55, so the committee refuses to rise. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Texas has made a point of order that there is no quorum present. That is pending. Pending the point of order that there is no quorum present the motion was made that the committee rise. That has been voted down. The point of order that no quorum is present is still pending unless the gentleman withdraws it.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina is recognized, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his point of order, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present, a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the Chair on his arithmetic, although I counted more than the Chairman did. I really do not want to appear discourteous to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. I really had nothing to say, but he asked me a question, and I was cut off, so that it made it appear that I was very discourteous.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will pardon me, but he took five minutes a few moments ago in evading an answer to my question. Now, will he take these five minutes in answering it? I am referring to the steering committee, and the gentleman was speaking about the committee on committees.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, since I have been in Congress the Democrats have never had a steering committee, for the reason that the chairman of the various legislative committees were selected only with reference to their superior qualifications for the position. We had no such method as now prevails in the Republican organization at all. We appointed all committees with reference to the qualification of the men appointed upon them, and it was never necessary for them to have an overlord or boss. We never jacked them up and said, "Here is what we want you to do or not to do." They reported out the various bills, and they were accepted as such because we had confidence in their judgment, wisdom, and patriotism. While I was the majority leader I never had to call anyone down, because they always did the proper thing; and to show you that they did the proper thing, my friend LONGWORTH voted for everything that was reported out, except one bill—yes; he voted for the revenue bill—in 1916; so you see our committees had sense enough to legislate and recommend legislation themselves. It was legislation that appealed not only to our approval and judgment but to that of Mr. LONGWORTH and the judgment of many others on the Republican side.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is speaking of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The discussion that is now proceeding has nothing to do with the measure under consideration and the motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to get to the point of how this bill comes in here——

Mr. WALSH. Oh, the gentleman told us about that this morning. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not going to insist on violating the rules. Of course, if the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want all of the Republicans present to know the manner of their organization and what unheard-of methods they have adopted, such as were never before adopted in a legislative body in the world——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then, of course, I shall have to wait. Only about half a dozen of you know how it is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALLOWANCE TO WIDOWS OR HEIRS OF DIPLOMATIC OFFICERS WHO DIE ABROAD.

Payment under the provisions of section 1749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to the widows or heirs at law of diplomatic or consular officers of the United States dying in foreign countries in the discharge of their duties, $5,000.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by inserting the words "or consular" after the word "diplomatic," in line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 13, after the word "diplomatic" insert the words "and consular."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, draftsmen, and clerks as are necessary; and for the more effective demarcation and mapping, pursuant to the treaty of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, of the land and water boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, as established under existing treaties, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, including the salaries of the commissioner and the necessary engineers, surveyors, draftsmen, computers, and clerks in the field and at the seat of government, rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing and necessary traveling, for payment for timber necessarily cut in determining the boundary line not to exceed $500, and commutation to members of the field force while on field duty or actual expenses not exceeding $5 per day each to be expended in accordance with regulations from time to time prescribed by the Secretary of State, $55,000, together with the unexpended balances of previous appropriations for these objects: Provided, That hereafter advances of money under the appropriation "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada, and the United States and Canada," may be made to the commissioner on the part of the United States and by his authority to chiefs of parties, who shall give bond under such rules and regulations and in such sum as the Secretary of State may direct, and accounts arising under advances shall be rendered through and by the commissioner on the part of the United States to the Treasury Department as under advances heretofore made to chiefs of parties: Provided, That when the commissioner is absent from Washington on official business he shall be allowed actual and necessary expenses of subsistence, not in excess of $8 per day.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, on page 12, line 8, after the word "Washington," I move to insert the words "and from his regular place of residence."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 8, after the word "Washington" insert the words "and from his regular place of residence."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I do not aim this amendment at this particular individual, but I expect to offer a similar amendment at other places in the bill in respect to other commissions of this kind. My understanding is—and I do not know that this has been true recently, but my attention has been called to at least one case in which a commissioner of this kind had spent a good deal of time at his regular residence away from Washington, and while at home was claiming to have been performing part of his duties, and since he was away from Washington had been collecting his $8 per day expense account. I do not make the charge against the man performing this particular service, but it does seem to me it is a very fair provision to insert in respect to all of these commissions that if the commissioner is at home where his regular residence is, he shall not be allowed to collect $8 a day expenses because he happens to be away from Washington and may be performing some of his duties, such as the preparing of reports and things of that kind. If he chooses to go to his regular residence it does not seem to me that he ought to be allowed to collect per diem expenses. I take it that as far as the point of order is concerned it is a limitation on the appropriation and under the Holman rule it would be in order.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, right there I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the committee can not accept an amendment with a point of order reserved against it.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to ask the chairman a question while he is on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that we dispose now first of the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. It is legislation and it does not reduce expenses. It rather increases them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is right along with that particular proviso. It is no more legislation than the proviso itself. It seems to me that it would be in order. On the other hand, it does not seem to me to be anything more than a qualification and limitation on the language of the second proviso.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, still further reserving the point of order, do I understand the gentleman's amendment is to insert after the word "Washington," in line 8, "from his official place of residence"?

Mr. CONNALLY. From his regular place of residence. A further limitation that I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I rise to ask of the chairman of the committee what the unexpended balance in this section amounts to, and also, if it would not be out of order, I would like to know what the unexpended balance appropriated in section 9 refers to? I am absolutely opposed to the reappropriation of those unexpended balances, because I do not think the House knows just what it is appropriating when that matter is not gone into more fully. And I would like to ask the chairman——

Mr. PORTER. So far as the boundary commission is concerned, the balance will all be used before the end of the fiscal year. There is an unexpended balance in the emergency fund. Mr. Carr, who appeared before the committee, stated that it would be impossible for him to say how much the unexpended balance would be on account of the nature of the fund. They might have use for $100,000 or $200,000 in the next three or four months, and they might not have to use $100.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, as I said the other day, I think it is very bad practice for this House to appropriate lump sums and also to reappropriate these unexpended balances, because the House is not informed as to what an unexpended balance is going to amount to. And it seems to me if the department asks for a certain amount of money for the next fiscal year we ought to appropriate the definite sum of money that they ask for, or that we think they ought to have, and there ought not to be any doubt in carrying these old accounts from one year after another. For years, since I have been on this Foreign Affairs Committee, these unexpended balances have been carried right along on the books of the department. I do not suppose they have ever been closed at the end of the year, because the reappropriation carries it over to the next year and to the next year after that; and so we go on appropriating unexpended balances in these bills year after year. I think it is very bad practice, and I think we should consider it, and we certainly ought to get out of the habit of appropriating these sums without the knowledge of the House and not knowing just what they amount to.

I felt that I ought to say something about this, and I do hope the committee in its next bill will try to get away from that and try to appropriate, as I have said, definite sums for the various fiscal years in accordance with what the gentlemen think is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how long this commission has been in existence? I think it is beyond my memory entirely, and I would like to know how long it is.

Mr. PORTER. I want to say it was provided by a convention in 1903.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Some 16 or 17 years ago, then?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Are they ever going to get through?

Mr. PORTER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will answer him.

The commissioner has done a splendid piece of work. He has completed all of the field work. The line has all been monumented, with the exception of possibly two or three months of work. All of the data are now in Washington, and they are assembling it so as to make the necessary maps. The commissioner impressed the members of the committee with the fact that he was extremely efficient and extremely diligent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is there but one commissioner now?

Mr. PORTER. Just one; yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has not, as I understand, fully answered my question as to when they would be through?

Mr. PORTER. I asked the commissioner that question, and he said he thought it would take three or four years to complete the office work and assemble all of this data and put it in the form of maps so that the official report could be made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What is the salary of the commissioner?

Mr. PORTER. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, I am not surprised that it will be continued for three or four years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU AT BRUSSELS FOR THE REPRESSION OF THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

To meet the share of the United States in the expense of the special bureau created by article 82 of the general act concluded at Brussels July 2, 1890, for the repression of the African slave trade and the restriction of the importation into and sale in a certain defined zone of the African Continent of firearms, ammunition, and spirituous liquors for the year 1921, $125.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] and to the House, and especially to the gentleman on my right here, that I made some very honest and hearty efforts, unavailing though they were, to help in the economy program, reducing items when I was sure they ought not to be in here, or could be cut out or reduced. I want to make one more effort, and if the committee does not feel that it should respond to these appeals for economy, I shall give up, the same as Mr. MONDELL, and let the gentleman take charge himself.

I am in sympathy with this bill, and I think that the committee has done fine work, and I hope that the committee will receive some credit for it and that the Secretary of State will not get all the credit for this economy. I realize that we must have far more appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service now than in prewar times, and the committee has given a very strong and convincing argument in its report as to why we should. I greatly sympathize with them in their statement, and I am speaking sincerely now. [Laughter.]

The reasons for the large increase of appropriations over prewar times are threefold, as contained in the report. First, in the prewar period we were frequently a debtor nation. Now we are the biggest creditor nation in the world, holding the obligations of other nations in the sum of $11,000,000,000 and upward—all under a Democratic administration. For the 40 or 50 years of the Republican administrations we were unfortunately a debtor nation. Now, under Woodrow Wilson, a Democratic administration—and this committee in its report is absolutely right about that—we are the largest creditor nation in the world. I want our Democratic friends to put a peg there. That is one great change in our international relations.

Mr. BAER. Can the gentleman assure us that we will get our money back?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not yield. The second reason that is given for these increased appropriations is that in the prewar period we were without a merchant marine. To-day we have over 6,000,000 tons of shipping flying the American flag and carrying the products of the industries and farms of America to all the markets of the world. For 40 or 50 years of Republican rule less than 10 per cent of our American products were sent abroad in American bottoms. More than 90 per cent of American products were sent out to the markets of the world in foreign bottoms, foreign ships flying the foreign flag. But to-day, under a Democratic administration, this committee in its report solemnly assures us that our merchant marine has grown from nothing to 6,000,000 tons, a larger tonnage than any nation except Great Britain. Every man ought to be proud of this wonderful accomplishment of the Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The third reason the committee give for these increased appropriations is that we practically now control the gold supply of the world. For 40 or 50 years, under Republican rule, we were borrowing money from abroad to get enough gold to run our own domestic industries and enterprises; but now, to-day, under Democratic control, we own and control the gold supply of the world, and every Nation on earth must come to this great United States and ask us to lend them gold—a great accomplishment of the Democratic administration. I know that if the committee had thought about it one minute they never would have put that in the report. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. How does the national debt compare now with our debt under a Republican administration?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, on account of Republican votes during this Democratic administration our debt, incurred to win the war, has risen considerably; not as much as the Republicans wanted it to rise, because they voted for greater appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more to get on to my amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes to speak on his amendment. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I have an amendment here. I now see the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] present. I was going to send for him. Here is another item where we can economize.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir. Here is an item that we can reduce to some extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KITCHIN: Page 12, line 19, strike out "$125" and insert in lieu thereof "$120."

[Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, gentlemen, I have been fighting here for economy for four hours to help out the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I have tried to save $200,000 in one item, and $150,000 in another item, and $138,000 in still another, and I have made up my mind that if I can not save $5 out of this bill I should give up and let the gentleman from Wyoming take charge of the whole thing and economize as well as he can. [Laughter.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that that is a treaty obligation?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, well, I will not violate any treaty in the world. If it is a treaty obligation, I am evidently mistaken in my amendment. If not, I appeal to you let us save $5, at least. [Laughter.] If this is a treaty obligation and we have solemnly bound ourselves to the countries of the world, as it were, in a league of nations to pay $125 a year to repress the African slave trade and keep liquor from going into a certain zone in Africa, I will not ask this House and my Democratic friends to help me violate a solemn treaty obligation. No, sir; I am more afraid the Republicans would vote to cut it down anyway. Maybe they would, with the gentleman from Wyoming overlording this committee completely. [Laughter.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming, if I may be permitted to say so in my five minutes, that during his absence this committee has violated every tenet of economy in the gentleman's program. They have failed to vote for a single amendment cutting down a single appropriation.

Now, I shall have to leave. I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will take this job and keep up with it, and wherever amendments ought to be offered to reduce items in the bill I hope he will offer. I suggest one place where he can offer an amendment that will result in economy. The appropriation provided for this post allowance is $600,000. That was put in there in order to enable the department to increase secretaries' salaries so as to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living, but that was done before we increased the salaries of the secretaries. Now that we have increased the secretaries' salaries a thousand dollars each, which amounts to $130,000, the gentleman from Wyoming can, and in good conscience no doubt he will, offer an amendment when we reach that page, page 22, to reduce the appropriation of $600,000 to $470,000, which would save $130,000. That is perfectly just, perfectly right, and perfectly in accordance with the program of economy. Now, gentlemen, I am not going to try to help you any more in your economy program. You threw me down the very first thing, and I am not going to have anything more to do with you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to strike out "$125" and insert "$120."

Mr. KITCHIN. Since somebody has reminded me that this $125 is in conformity with a solemn treaty obligation, I do not want to put myself in the light of trying to violate a treaty, because I am going to help to keep it in good faith, and I respectfully withdraw the amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I am very much disappointed in the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. I just came into the House to aid him in his worthy effort to reduce this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. We lost the opportunity to reduce it that many thousands while the gentleman was absent.

Mr. MONDELL. I have just come in, only to find the gentleman occupying the time of the House in an effort to reduce the bill $125.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Five dollars.

Mr. MONDELL. Five dollars. He now asks unanimous consent to withdraw his motion.

Mr. KITCHIN. To keep the treaty.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very painfully disappointed, but under the circumstances I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KREIDER. Reserving the right to object, I think it is unreasonable and unfair to the representatives of the Democratic Party on the floor of the House to stop their agitation for economy in the usual Democratic way. Whenever there is a chance to cut off $5 we see them on the job, but when there is a chance to save $5,000,000——

Mr. KITCHIN. We are still on the job.

Mr. KREIDER. They forget that they are present. If the $5,000,000 is to be saved, it is up to the Republicans to save it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—— [Laughter.]

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. KREIDER. I think we should have a vote on this amendment, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to withdrawing the amendment. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do this because the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in his last speech called attention to the fact that in the report of the chairman of this committee it was pointed out that we had long been a debtor nation and that now we are a creditor nation to the extent of about $11,000,000,000. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] seemed to think the credit for that ought to belong to the Democratic Party. He further pointed to the item in the report which refers to the increased shipping that is flying the American flag on the seas, and again he wanted to lay claim for the credit for that to the Democratic Party.

I want sincerely to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, Does he also claim credit for the Democratic Party for the 70,000 graves of American manhood, the cleanest, purest, and brightest that ever lived under the Stars and Stripes? Does the Democratic Party want credit for those 70,000 graves, those 70,000 boys, in each of whose homes there is a vacant chair? Does the gentleman from North Carolina want to claim credit for the Democratic Party for the fact that there are over 100,000 boys in this country compelled to go through life without an arm or without a leg or with their faces disfigured beyond recognition? It seems to me that the gentleman from North Carolina has been in Congress too long and occupies too high a place in the esteem of the public, not only among the Democrats but, may I advise him, among the Republicans as well, to make light of a bill of this kind and to treat with ridicule and burlesque a thing that ought to be sacred to every American. As far as giving the Democratic Party credit for our being a creditor nation, there were many millions of Americans who were not Democrats who gave just as loyally of their sons and just as generously of their dollars in order that the Great War might be won with the minimum of sacrifice. The immediate and unusual prosperity that has come to America is not due to any act passed by the Democratic Party while in power. It is due to a disaster, to a calamity that struck the human race, and I deplore the fact, as a member of the opposite party, that the gentleman should allow his words to go out to this country in a spirit of jest, because many a mother will say, "I wonder if I owe to the Democratic Party the sacrifice of my son?"

Mr. KITCHIN. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PORTER. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this item close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that I only claimed credit for what the report gives us credit for. I do not claim credit for the Democratic Party for the 100,000 Americans who were killed over there or for the nearly 200,000 who were wounded. Who ever heard me claiming any credit for the Democratic Party for that? If I had had my way, not one of them would have been killed or wounded. I so voted, but practically every Republican in the House, as well as every Democrat in the House voted for the war. It was not a Democratic war. It was not a Republican war. It was an American war, and of course I will not give credit for it to either party. I think the Republican Party is entitled to as much credit for the 100,000 men who were killed or died and for the 200,000 men who were wounded as the Democratic Party, and I have not tried to take any credit from the Republican Party on that. But I will tell you what we Democrats do claim credit for. When those 200,000 boys came back—boys with arms and legs shot off or with eyes shot out—and the question before this House was how to rehabilitate those boys, your party almost to a man voted against a $4,000,000 appropriation, while we Democrats voted for $4,000,000 to help make life worth living for those boys. [Applause.] We do claim that we have done and will continue to do all in our power to help these maimed, crippled boys. We sent them abroad to risk their lives and limbs, and when they were brought back here wounded and maimed I do want to resent and protest against the action of the Republicans in Congress in refusing to give them the little pittance of $4,000,000 to help rehabilitate them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their necessary actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $8 per day each, and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, is hereby appropriated, $30,400: Provided, That in probate and administration proceedings there shall be collected by said clerk, before entering the order of final distribution, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, the same inheritance taxes from time to time collected under the laws enacted by the Congress of the United States from the estates of decedents residing within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 17, after the colon strike out balance of paragraph and insert:

"Provided, That hereafter in each private and administration proceeding in said courts there shall be, and is hereby, levied on each respective estate and there shall be assessed and collected by the clerk of the court before entering the order of final distribution, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, as fees of court, an amount of money equal to the amount of inheritance taxes that would be due and collectible under the laws of the United States in the case of the estate of a decedent who resided within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States of an equal value."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the language already contained in the bill has been made in order by a special rule. The amendment which I offer does not change the effect.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, yes; the amendment uses the word "hereafter," which makes it not in order. I am simply reserving the point of order. I do not know that I will make it.

Mr. GARNER. The word "hereafter" makes it permanent law.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize that, and that is one reason why I offer the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That makes it subject to a point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman may be correct about that. I am not a parliamentary expert. My object in offering the amendment is to make clear what I think was the intention of the committee in drafting this provision. It seems to me that, although we call these amounts fees of courts, in a sense it is really the levy of inheritance taxes prevailing in the United States on the estates of decedents whose estates are administered by the United States Court for China. It seems to me that we ought to make it clear that Congress is levying it and collecting it according to the same standards that prevail in the United States. The language used in the bill is:

Provided, That in probate and administration proceedings there shall be collected by said clerk, before entering the order of final distribution, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, the same inheritance taxes from time to time collected under the laws enacted by the Congress of the United States from the estates of decedents residing within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

I believe that if the chairman of the committee will consider the language of my amendment he will have no objection to it. I can see no reason why these citizens who reside in China and whose estates pay no inheritance tax by reason of the residence of the decedents in China should not contribute to the expenses of maintaining the court in China. I can see no reason why they should not be forced to pay their share of the administration of the United States court in China.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand this provision. The probate administration proceedings are upon the estates of whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. American citizens residing in China.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They would not be citizens of the United States unless they were residents of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. They might be; there are a great many people, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, who have property in China and are American citizens. I will say that the United States court for China was established through treaty relations with China which expressly confer upon that court jurisdiction not only over the estates but over persons of American citizens, residents in China. The Chinese laws have no jurisdiction over American citizens in China.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true; but the jurisdiction of the court will depend upon the settled principles that apply to citizens of this country. I should suppose that a man's citizenship in this country would depend somewhat on his intention as to coming back here.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa—he is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means—if the Federal inheritance tax now in force could be collected from an estate of an American citizen residing in China. And I would like to observe that if it does not, this amendment ought to be adopted, because they ought to pay an inheritance tax—I mean a Federal inheritance tax, the same as the estate of an American citizen residing in the United States would pay.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman on that; but the point I raised, and which I am not absolutely sure about, is one upon which I would like information. At first blush it seems to me as if the whole proviso was not necessary. However, it may be necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. We had the judge of the United States court for China before us, and he gave it as his opinion that the Federal inheritance-tax law did not apply to American citizens residing in China. It was on his approval and at his suggestion that the committee inserted this language in the bill, in order that the inheritance tax from the estates of American citizens might be paid and help to defray the expenses of that court and maintain the court.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not examined personally into the subject, and I will yield to the judgment of the judge of the court for China and the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to say that the rules of the House provide that the paragraph be permitted to remain in the bill, and it may be perfected by a germane amendment; but that does not permit an amendment which would add additional legislation. It has been held that an amendment on all fours with this was out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment with the word "hereafter" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not make the ruling on the word "hereafter," but on the general proposition that it adds new legislation to the existing legislation in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the attention of the Chair been called to the language of the bill as it stands on page 16? That is new legislation, if the Chair please, and that was made in order this morning by the special rule.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the only reason the gentleman's amendment would be in order, if it is germane.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to know wherein it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not hold that it is not germane. The Chair simply holds that while it is germane, it adds new legislation to the legislation carried on page 16 of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will examine that language he will see that the intended effect of the language is identical. It simply changes the language in order to make it clearer how the clerk will arrive at the amount which he shall be required to collect in each case. The effect of it is identically the same, and if the language on page 16, as contained in the printed bill, is in order, there can be no question on earth that my amendment is in order. Since the Chair holds that the word "hereafter" does not render it out of order, I insist that my original amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets very much to be obliged to differ with the gentleman. If this were on a legislative bill, the Chair thinks that he would hold the amendment to be in order, but this is an appropriation bill, and what applies to a legislative bill does not apply to an appropriation bill. Anything that adds new legislation to the pending section under the rules of the House can not be in order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend, in line 17, by striking out the figures "$30,400" and inserting as a new paragraph at the bottom of the page the words and figures "Total, $30,400." That is simply an oral change, so as to have the item showing the total carried at the end of the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 17, strike out the figures "$30,400" and at the bottom of the page insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Total, $30,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the International High Commission arising in such work and investigations as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why this has been changed from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of State. In the current law, if I read it correctly, it says that this expenditure shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered that matter very carefully and concluded it would be better to make the expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of State on account of its diplomatic character. It was formerly under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TILSON. The bill provides—arising in such work and investigation as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

It was formerly under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing, and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $25,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission or secretary, except for actual and necessary expenses, not in excess of $8 per day each, when absent from Washington on official business: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for salaries of commissioners in excess of $3,500 each per annum.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 19, line 12, by inserting after the word "Washington" the words "and from his regular place of residence." It is the same amendment that I offered to the other commission.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 12, after the word "Washington," insert "and from his regular place of residence."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses of interpreters to consulates and guards.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 3, page 23, by inserting the words "and guards" after the word "interpreters," and by striking out in line 4 the words "and guards."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PORTER: Page 23, line 3, after the word "interpreters," insert the words "and guards," and in line 4, strike out the words "and guards."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Interpreters and guards to be employed at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $103,700.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the reason for this expenditure and for the employment of interpreters to courts and consulates? Is that to China, Japan, and Siberia?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. And in the Turkish dominions?

Mr. PORTER. Yes. We lumped the two items.

Mr. TILSON. Last year there were two items, and the result is different.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. We were requested to increase it by $15,000 by the Secretary of State, for very good reasons, which he stated. It is an increase of only $15,000.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, there are a good many places outside of the oriental countries where expert linguistic assistance is required. For example, take the new Republic of Jugoslavia. That is made up of several different peoples, who are linguistically different. A man to be an efficient and useful officer at that legation is expected to speak six different languages. It is exceedingly difficult to get a man who can fulfill those requirements anywhere. We have insisted from year to year in this bill that Americanizing of the service shall go forward just as fast as possible. But in some places, such as the one I have cited, and in the Orient, it has been practically impossible to get the right sort of Americans who could speak several languages. In order to overcome that situation the State Department asked this year for a new item for salary of alien employees, amounting to $50,000, so that here and there throughout the capitals of the world it might be able to procure competent alien subordinates. The committee was not inclined to broaden the capacity of the State Department to go afield and hire alien employees to any great extent. But the representations of the State Department were so urgent as to certain places which are to be raised to legation or embassy rank, as a result of the war, or at which consulates have been or may be established, that we concluded that we could help out the State Department without deviating from our principle by increasing this interpreter item by $15,000.

So the actual effect of the committee action was to cut down by $35,000 net the estimate of the State Department.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has not explained why in the current law it is specified that the expenditure is to be made at certain places, naming some 8 or 10 of them. Now, it is combined into one item, and no place whatever is named, so it might be expended anywhere over the whole world.

Mr. ROGERS. The fund is not a very large one, and of course the need of interpreters is limited to a relatively few portions of the world. It seemed to us that a certain degree of fluidity or elasticity could not do any harm to the service and might make more effective operation possible. Therefore we simply grouped the three items into one, so far as the amount asked for was concerned, and then cut $35,000 from the total.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman a question in reference to an item we passed and a claim that is made by the chairman. I notice in the report the chairman filed that he stated the post-allowances estimate by the State Department was $1,800,000.

Mr. PORTER. That is a mistake of the printer. He made a mistake of a million dollars.

Mr. FLOOD. Then the difference in the estimates of the State Department and the amount carried by this bill is less by one million——

Mr. PORTER. No; the totals are correct. The original manuscript which I sent to the printer shows $800,000, but the printer made it $1,800,000, and it was too late to change it.

Mr. FLOOD. The total of $11,913,000 is correct?

Mr. PORTER. It is not included in the total. The $800,000 is included in the total.

Mr. FLOOD. Then the amount stated in the total is correct?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES, PASSPORT-CONTROL ACT.

For expenses of regulating entry into the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, and Public Act No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, when the latter act shall have become effective, $250,000, in addition to the remaining $150,000 of the sum appropriated by section 4 of said Public Act No. 79.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CONNALLY: Page 25, line 23, at the end of the paragraph insert:

"Provided, That a fee of $5 shall be collected for each citizen's passport issued from the Department of State, and a similar fee for each visé by United States diplomatic or consular officers on each foreign passport, to be applied by the Secretary of State to create a fund for the carrying into effect of the purposes of this paragraph and the reduction of the sum therein appropriated."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the announced intention of the committee to adopt measures to reduce expenditures and to adopt a policy of economy. All of us ought to exercise the most strict economy of which we are capable. As Representatives it is our solemn duty to do so. While this item appropriates $250,000 in addition to an unexpended balance of $150,000 already appropriated for carrying into effect the passport control act, if the House will adopt the amendment which I propose and which I really believe a goodly number of gentlemen on the committee favor, every dollar of this $400,000 appropriation will remain in the United States Treasury and not one cent will have to be expended.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LITTLE. Is there not a fee now of $2?

Mr. CONNALLY. One dollar. The present fee, Mr. Chairman, is only $1 for each passport, and a dollar for the viséing of a foreign passport when presented to our consuls and diplomatic officers in foreign lands.

Mr. ROGERS. The fee is $2 in each case, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Here is the statute on the subject. I have it before me. The gentleman from Massachusetts is no doubt confused by the fact that when a person makes an application for a passport away from Washington he is required to pay 50 cents for an affidavit and the clerk of the court 50 cents. But that does not go to the State Department at all.

Mr. ROGERS. One dollar for the department and another dollar either to the State court or the Federal court where the application is made.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. ROGERS. The application is made before the Federal court and goes into the Federal Treasury, but in the case of the visé, which is covered under this paragraph, the unvarying fee is $2, according to the testimony before the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that only $1 goes into the Federal Treasury for the issuance of a passport. The other goes to a notary public or clerk, or somebody. The testimony before our committee discloses, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the Secretary favors an increase of the passport fee, and Mr. Carr, of the consular department, suggested that by increasing these fees the expenses of the department could be materially reduced. In the hearings on page 24, Part I, Mr. Carr testified:

Mr. ROGERS. In the earlier hearings before the committee.

Mr. CARR. The passport bureau itself is collecting fees at the rate of—for instance, it issued passports at the rate of 150,000 a year here in Washington.

Secretary LANSING. I think you could make a considerable increase.

Mr. CARR. It used to be $5 and it was reduced to $1.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if you really want to economize, if you will adopt this amendment it will bring into the Treasury of the United States more, I believe, than $1,000,000. The bill appropriates in this one item $400,000. To do what? To compensate clerks and employees in foreign countries. To do what? To visé passports for foreigners who are desirous of coming to the United States. Now, I believe that the Congress of the United States is justified in assuming an attitude with reference to such foreigners that will require them to contribute at least a part of the expense of maintaining that service, and it will not be contended that it is not worth $5 to secure the visé of a passport in a foreign country. In the case of our own citizens who travel in foreign lands, most of them either go there for business purposes or on pleasure trips; and in their case, I submit to this committee, they are more than able to pay the small sum of $5 for a passport. The Government of the United States is now expending stupendous sums in maintaining the passport bureau and in maintaining its agencies in foreign countries. I believe if the members of the majority in this House are sincere in their desire for economy, if they really believe we ought to reduce expenses, if they believe that all the money ought not to go out of the Treasury, but at least a little ought to be brought into the Treasury, this amendment should be adopted. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS. I understood the gentleman to say that the Secretary of State had testified before the committee that he believed in this increase. My recollection is otherwise. I wondered if the gentleman could refer to the page of the testimony.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think I could if the gentleman would give me a little more time.

Mr. ROGERS. The testimony on this point appears on pages 23 and 24 of part 1 of the hearings, and, so far as I know, that is the only place where this subject has been discussed by the Secretary.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is in the hearings. I looked it up last night. I remember it distinctly. If the gentleman will refer to the hearings, part 1, page 24, I think he will find the statement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to submit some remarks on the point of order. I assume that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS], who I believe it was reserved the point of order, will urge the Chair to hold the amendment not in order, because it is legislation; but I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the Holman rule anything that reduces an appropriation, even though it be in its nature legislative, is in order on a general appropriation bill.

By the exact language of the amendment itself it directs that these sums be applied by the Secretary of State to create a fund—to do what? To carry out the purpose of this section and reduce this appropriation. What else do we find? We find in the hearings the testimony that here in Washington at least 150,000 passports are issued each year. An increase from $1 to $5 would make quite an increase in revenue. Four dollars per head for 150,000 passports would amount to $600,000, a sum more than sufficient to wipe out the entire sums appropriated in this particular section. This is without taking into account the great number in foreign countries.

I want to call the attention of the Chair to a fact that will not be disputed. Under existing law the fee for issuing passports is only $1. Under the Holman rule it seems to me obvious that this amendment is in order, because its effect is to reduce the appropriation and to reduce the expenditures by reason of this particular provision.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The gentleman says the only charge now is $1?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I was at the Department of State on day before yesterday with some friends, and I saw them pay for a passport. The bill presented was $2.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from West Virginia was not in the Hall a moment ago when I explained that only $1 goes to the Federal Government. The other 50 cents is for a notary fee and 50 cents for other expenses.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I am glad to be informed.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me this would not impose a burden on the person applying for a passport. I am not urging this as a partisan, but I am urging it here as a Representative, believing that when we have an opportunity to thus easily bring into the Treasury of the United States more than a million dollars, which will materially assist in defraying the expenses of maintaining this service, we ought not to hesitate to do so. I very much hope that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] will not make the point of order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am wondering, in view of the discussion by the gentleman, and in view of the fact that this whole question was discussed in the committee, why it is that the gentleman did not present some sort of provision of this kind when the bill was up for consideration before the committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] did bring the matter up.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My recollection is that the whole matter was to be left pending, for time to include this, as well as other matters, in the way of new legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I said a moment ago, I am not urging this as a partisan matter. I thought the gentleman had in mind some permanent legislation.

If objection is to be made to the amendment on the ground that its effect will be to make permanent the raise in passport fees from $1 to $5, I shall be content that the amendment be so modified as to make it operative for the life of the present appropriation bill.

I shall within the next few days introduce a bill providing by permanent law that passport and visé fees shall be $5 instead of $1.

The records of the Department of State disclose that passports are being now issued at Washington at the average rate of 156,000 per year. Before the war immigrants were arriving in the United States on an average of about 1,000,000 annually. At the present time the average is 540,000 per year.

Fees on the present average issuance of passports and inspection of passports of aliens will bring into the Treasury nearly three and one-half millions of dollars annually.

When conditions of foreign travel become more settled hundreds of thousands more tourists will leave the United States to visit foreign countries within the next year or two. An increasing number of other citizens will go abroad in connection with foreign trade. Each of them will spend hundreds of dollars on each trip, and a passport fee of $5 will be a mere bagatelle as compared with the expense of such trip and will in no case deter a single individual from embarking on such a journey. Foreigners will apply to our consulates and embassies in foreign countries to have their passports examined and approved for entry into the United States. The passport fee of $5 will be to them, as compared with the expenses of their voyage, a mere trifle.

However, in the aggregate the fees if increased will bring into the Treasury of the United States annually about two and a quarter million dollars more than now received, to assist in defraying the expenses of maintaining the passport control system.

American consulates, legations, and embassies are maintained in foreign lands for purposes of maintaining international relations and for the convenience of American citizens and for the protection of their rights as they relate to foreign countries.

This service in its larger aspect is national in its character. It pertains to the welfare of the whole people and the prestige of our country. It involves the possibilities of peace and war and trade and commerce as they may be affected by our relations to the other nations of the earth.

But as to that portion of the foreign service that deals with the issuance of passports it may be said that this is a service particularly enjoyed by those of our citizens who journey abroad. Is it not fair and equitable that they should make at least a slight contribution to its maintenance in the payment of a small fee for a service which to them is of great value and usefulness? Is it not just that foreigners intending to journey to the United States should be required to pay a reasonable fee for a service which facilitates their entry into the United States?

It has been urged that the raising of the passport fee constitutes the levy of a tax. That is only partially true, and yet if it were wholly true is not a valid or persuasive argument against the amendment. A passport fee is a tax only in a sense that it is a tax upon those individuals who derive a particular and peculiar benefit or privilege not enjoyed by the public at large. It is only a requirement that the enjoyment of a special service shall entail on those so enjoying it the duty to at least partially compensate the Government for the expenses incurred in rendering the service.

The fees collected through an increase in the raise will make it possible for the tax laws to bear a little more lightly in some other form or feature. The fees collected by the Department of State for passports will operate to very materially reduce the expenses of that department and to reduce the amounts which otherwise would have to be appropriated out of the General Treasury.

If the Congress really desires to lighten the tax burden, if gentlemen of the majority party in truth desire to be economical in the financial affairs of the United States, they now have an opportunity to put into practice their pretentions by the adoption of this amendment. A little later they will have another opportunity of justifying their widely heralded profession by passing the bill which I propose to introduce raising the passport fees from $1 to $5.

At this time when the national expenditures are so stupendous in their proportions, when unprecedented sums in the form of taxes must be laid upon the people of the United States to maintain the various agencies of government established for the protection of the rights of the people of the United States and the convenience of its citizens, the Congress should exercise the most careful and painstaking economy in the fiscal affairs of the Government.

Gentlemen, will you refuse or decline to accept this concrete, tangible proposal to bring money into the Federal Treasury from a source that can contribute it without inconvenience. Here is an opportunity to bring money into the Treasury and not to take it out of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. ROGERS. I propose to make it, and if the Chair is in doubt I would like to be heard on it. I want to say one word, however, before the point of order is made. There may be a great deal of merit in the fundamental proposal of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. On the other hand, I was present during the entire discussion, when the Secretary of State and his assistants were before the committee, on these matters and allied matters. I listened very carefully, and I have no recollection whatever that the Secretary of State advocated larger fees. I do not know what the plan of the chairman of the committee may be, but I assume that he would say in a matter of this importance, where the policy of the country has been otherwise for a good many years, that we should go into this specifically and carefully and take testimony from all sides, and then, if so decided, bring a substantive proposal before the House. For that reason and for that reason only, and without seeking to prejudge the matter adversely, I make the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment solely on the point of order. I submit to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is clearly in order under our rules. It is legislation, it is true, and apart from the Holman rule it would be out of order. Further it will not be in order under the Holman rule, unless this particular provision of law proposed by the gentleman from Texas, will operate to bring about a reduction in the amount carried in the bill. If it brings about a reduction in the amount carried in the bill, then it comes clearly and absolutely within the Holman rule. It is not necessary for an amendment to be in order, that it shall be directed to the reduction of some particular item in the bill. It is enough if the proposition that is proposed, in the judgment of the Chair, will in its operation fairly operate by its own force to bring about a reduction of expenditures. Speaker Kerr and Chairman W. L. Wilson both ruled that the purpose of the Holman rule is most beneficent and proper, and the rule should have a liberal construction. (Hinds', vol. 4, p. 594.)

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this legislation will operate to furnish an additional fund, and thereby reduce the present amount required from the Treasury.

This amendment will provide a fund from new sources, that will render unnecessary the full amount of the appropriation of $250,000 which the bill now carries. The fund to be provided by the legislation contained in the amendment is set aside for application to the very objects provided for in the specific appropriation of $250,000.

Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the following citation from Fourth Hinds' (RECORD, 1st sess., 52d Cong., p. 1792) from a ruling made on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Judge De Armond. I desire specifically to call attention to the fact that the effect of this amendment was nothing like so apparent on its face as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The amendment of Judge De Armond was to a pension appropriation bill and consisted merely of these words, "was, or other." The effect of the amendment was to increase the number of persons prohibited from receiving the benefits of a clause in the pension law, thereby as a necessary sequence reducing the number of pensioners. The point was made that the amendment did not show on its face that it reduced expenditures. But it was easy to see that a reduction in the number of pensioners, necessarily reduced the amount that would be required for the payment of pensions, though the amendment was not directed to the amount of money actually appropriated by the bill. The amendment was held to be in order under the Holman rule.

While it was not specifically directed to reducing the amount of money carried in the bill for the payment of pensions, the Chair was justified in concluding—and in order to make his ruling he had to so conclude—that in the execution of the pension laws the amount required for the payment of pensions would be reduced by the effect of the amendment.

I thoroughly agree that it is not in order to propose legislation on an appropriation bill, and at the same time reduce the amount carried in the bill, when the legislation is not related to and does not effect the reduction. In such a case the legislation is not in order. The legislation itself must effect a reduction. It must appear to the Chair that it will effect a reduction. If the Chair is satisfied from the law of the land, the evidence in the hearings, and his knowledge of public affairs that in consequence of the legislation proposed a reduction will be effected, then the amendment will come within the Holman rule. This principle can not be gainsaid.

This is an appropriation for $250,000 for definite purposes. The gentleman from Texas proposes legislation which will raise a fund that will be applied to the same purposes, and to the extent of the new fund raised by the taxation provided by this amendment, the amount of the present appropriation may be reduced. It will therefore effect, so far as the bill is concerned, a reduction in the amount carried in this bill, because the amendment is directly applied to the very purpose of creating a new fund by new taxation for the payment of the expenses provided for by the present appropriation. Hence, the legislation being related to the reduction, and the chairman knowing the public business of the country, knowing the laws of the land, and knowing the very large number of persons that will be chargeable by the increased taxation proposed is in a position to say that in his judgment a reduction will be effected by the legislation proposed and that therefore the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Much as I respect the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] upon all parliamentary questions I can not agree that the Chair is permitted to exercise such broad discretion as he now contends as to the probable effect of legislation upon the reduction of expenses. For instance, where in this bill an appropriation is provided to pay our share of the expenses of the Palace of Peace at The Hague, it occurs to me that under the gentleman's contention it would be germane under the Holman rule to offer a provision that a certain admission fee should be charged to the Peace Palace at The Hague, on the theory that the expenses of the United States in keeping up its share of the expense would be reduced. That is a far cry. It seems to me the Holman rule never contemplated to go so far as that, but that the rule in its essence must be construed strictly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Upon what earthly principle, except the principle I have undertaken to state, was the De Armond amendment held to be in order, simply the addition of the words "was or other"?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I concede that the gentleman has a precedent there which is very much in point.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I can cite many more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But I also say to the gentleman that I have studied pretty thoroughly the precedents on the Holman rule, and I think the gentleman can find under that rule a precedent for almost anything he desires.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; not at all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because, after all, it is left to the discretion of the Chair, and I do not think too much should be left to the discretion of the Chair. I do not think the Chair should be left to do too much guessing.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I agree to that. Unless the Chair is reasonably satisfied as an intelligent man, from his knowledge of public affairs and the application of this amendment to the business of the country, that it is going to produce this fund and thereby bring about a reduction in the expense, then the amendment is not in order. But he has only to apply the principle of the De Armond amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In such a case as that, the Chair might believe that if an additional amount were charged for the issuance of a passport there might be as many passports issued at $5 apiece as at $1 apiece, but the gentleman can not say for a certainty that fewer applications might not be made for passports at $5 apiece than at $1. It is a guess on the part of the Chairman, and is bound to be—and I am one of those who believe it is the duty of the Chair to construe the Holman rule strictly—that he must not engage in any speculation whatever. It must be apparent to him as a man of common sense that an actual saving will be made by virtue of the legislation proposed, or the amendment is not in order, and I do not think it necessarily follows here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The law now provides that a fee of $1 shall be charged and collected for each passport issued from the State Department. We have before us the paragraph of the bill providing for the expenses of regulating entry into the United States in accordance with the provisions of an act passed on the 22d of May, 1918, and to carry that act into effect. That act provides that the power shall be given to the Secretary of State to regulate the issuance of passports and, as the Chair understands it, in a measure to limit the number of people who enter the United States. The gentleman from Texas proposes an amendment now to the appropriation which is made to carry out the provisions of that act, which amendment provides that a fee of $5 shall be collected for each passport issued by the Department of State, and he contends that if the amendment is adopted it will reduce the amount of the appropriation on its face.

Clause 2 of Rule XXI of the House provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The law further provides that no such amendment shall be in order unless reported by a committee of the House having jurisdiction over the subject.

It must be apparent to the members of the committee that there is nothing on the face of this amendment to indicate a reduction in the amount of the appropriation. Of course, it is true that if the amendment should be adopted it would raise revenue, but the revenue would go into the Treasury to the credit of the general fund, and there is nobody here wise enough to say what that revenue would be appropriated for. It might not be appropriated for the payment of the expenses of the State Department at all; and on the face of the facts as the Chair sees them, he can not see any possibility of the reduction of the amount of the appropriation on its face resulting from the amendment of the gentleman from Texas nor can it be said that it will even increase the amount covered into the Treasury. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. PORTER. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, prior to rising, I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion has been carried.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to keep my status.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PORTER. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit, which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I doubt the right of the gentleman to offer a motion to recommit, unless he is opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is no point of order pending. Is the gentleman from Texas opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I think as a member of the committee I ought to make the motion, unless somebody claims a prior right.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, but the Chair has asked the gentleman if he is opposed to the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does anyone who is opposed to the bill desire to offer a motion to recommit? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONNALLY moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendments: Page 25, line 22, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$200,000"; and after line 23, page 25, add the following:

"Provided, That a fee of $5 shall be collected for each citizen's passport issued from the Department of State, and a similar fee for each visé by the United States Diplomatic and Consular officer on each foreign passport, to be applied by the Secretary of State to create a fund for carrying into effect of the purposes of this paragraph and the reduction of the same therein appropriated."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on the motion to recommit I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the motion to recommit, and the gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order. What is the point of order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, no existing law authorizing the collection of $5 for passports, the law now providing for $1.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, although I have recently taken the floor in connection with this point of order, the principle involved is so fundamental that I will ask the indulgence of the Chair for recognition. His ruling in this matter will set a new precedent, with respect to amendments under the Holman rule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought to state to the Chair that the same amendment was ruled out of order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio is slightly in error. This is not exactly the same amendment. The gentleman from Texas has modified his amendment to meet, in part, the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not catch what the modifications were.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. He reduces the amount appropriated from $250,000 to $200,000. I do not think that is necessary, but if it is necessary, then the necessary correction has been afforded. It was also stated in the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, that the amendment should come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but I submit that this is not necessary. Rule XXI provides in part as follows: "Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill."

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, but the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This is an amendment that I submit comes within the benefit of this citation.

The SPEAKER. Is that the only ground on which it is supported by the Holman rule?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I submit, as I said, that this amendment comes within the protection of the rule, because it is an amendment that reduces the amount of money covered by the bill. It is not necessary for an amendment to show upon its face that it effects a reduction. Yet this amendment does make that showing on its face. It is sufficient to make the amendment in order, if it is apparent to the Chair, having in mind the law of the land, his knowledge of the public business, and the reasonably likely effect of the law proposed, that the amendment proposed will fairly operate by its own force to reduce the amount of money covered by the bill.

I call the attention of the Chair to a ruling on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, to a pension appropriation bill. There was nothing in his amendment except the words "was, or other." The amendment did not show a reduction upon its face. But it was evident upon consideration of the effect of this language, as applied to existing conditions, that it would operate of its own vigor to reduce the number of pensioners. The fewer the number of pensioners, the less the amount to be appropriated under existing law on pension account. In other words the Chair reasoned the matter out, and drew a conclusion as to the effect of the amendment before ruling. It was not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the vigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It was only necessary for the Chair to conclude that the amendment would fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the ways contemplated by the rule. Unless the chairman had devised this conclusion of reduction from the insertion of the words, "was, or other" in the bill under consideration he could not have held the amendment in order. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (52d Cong., p. 1792). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] contends that this rule ought to be strictly construed. The precedents do not so hold. See ruling of Speaker Kerr and Chairman W. L. Wilson, IV Hinds, 594, that the Holman rule is a beneficent and proper rule, and should have a liberal construction. See also ruling of Chairman Crisp, Manual, p. 507. There are many other precedents to the same effect.

The rule should be both reasonably and liberally construed as stated by Speaker Kerr, and others, because it is in the interest of retrenchment, and in the language of Chairman CRISP, "it is intended to have a beneficial effect upon the Treasury of the United States."

Now, what is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas? He offers an amendment in the way of legislation to create a new fund by increasing the tax upon certain people. While the number of persons to be affected by this tax can not be stated with precise accuracy, yet it is known that it will be very large. It is perfectly competent for the Chair to take knowledge of that fact; it is perfectly competent for the Chair to take knowledge of the fact that an increase in the way of 400 per cent in the tax to be imposed upon these persons will create a very large fund. This fund is to be utilized for the very purposes for which the specific appropriation of $250,000 is made.

The gentleman from Texas by his amendment sequestrates this fund for these very purposes. The chairman of the committee was in error in holding that this result of reduction would not follow from the amendment, that it did not show on its face that this result would follow. The fund to be raised is directed, as stated, to be used in lieu of the $250,000 appropriation. And if only a single dollar should be raised by the new taxation in excess of the amount now raised, it would make possible to that extent a reduction in the $250,000 appropriation. But as a part of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas this appropriation is reduced to $200,000. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] insists that the Speaker should not guess about this reduction. I agree with him. If it is altogether problematical and uncertain whether any reduction will be effected, the amendment is not in order. But for an amendment to be in order under the Holman principle it is not necessary that the fact of reduction be established beyond a reasonable doubt or with the rigor of a mathematical demonstration. The likelihood of reduction under the legislation proposed is left to the Chairman. If the Chairman, after looking to the whole situation, concludes that reasonably speaking the legislation will operate of its own force to effect a reduction, then that will be sufficient ground upon which to hold that the amendment is in order.

I call the attention of the Chair to rulings under the Holman rule that were made in connection with the Army appropriation bill, rulings which I think were approved by the judgment of the House at that time. In one case an amendment was offered reducing the number of Cavalry regiments from 15 to 10. The Chair held that having reference to known facts, the maintenance of 10 regiments would not require so large a sum as the maintenance of 15 regiments. The Chair could not determine how much reduction would be effected by this cutting down of the number of these regiments, but it was perfectly clear that a reduction would be effected, and this conclusion was neither problematical nor conjectural. It was a reasonable conclusion, fairly certain from the entire body of facts submitted to the Chair, and considered in the light of reason and common sense.

May I call the attention of the Chair to further citations from this particular case?

The precedents say in this connection that the amendment, being in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate ex proprio vigore to effect a reduction of expenditures. The reduction must appear as a necessary result; that is, it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment will operate of its own force to effect a reduction. (Manual and Digest, p. 409; Hinds, vol. 4, p. 595.) But is it not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. This result must be a necessary result, not a conjectural result or a problematical result. It is true that having reference to the difference of minds, one Chairman might hold that retrenchment would be the necessary result of an amendment, while another Chairman or the committee on appeal might be of a different opinion. But this is inevitable. The law is clear, for instance, that at times a court upon the facts can hold as a matter of law that there was no negligence. Still upon the same facts one court will derive this conclusion, while another court on appeal will reach a different conclusion. (See Manual, p. 509.)

If the Chairman, looking to this amendment which provides for a new fund to be raised by new taxation, and which is set aside to be used for the purposes for which $250,000 is created, is satisfied that the amount so raised will reduce the amount necessary to be appropriated under this head out of the General Treasury; if he reaches that conclusion, then, under the rulings—and I can cite many of them, but none stronger than those already cited—he should hold that this amendment is in order. Of course, if it is contended that this increase of tax on the vast number of persons that will be affected by the increase will not bring into the Treasury a larger sum than the present rate, and that contention is sustained by the Chair, then the amendment is not in order. But if that suggested contention is sound, then the Ways and Means Committee, which has been raising many rates to raise more funds, has been sadly at fault in that action. But that contention can not be sustained. There is not a man on this floor that is not satisfied that this increase in rate will bring a large additional sum into the Treasury. If so, then the legislation proposed will effect a retrenchment in expenditures and a reduction in the amount of money covered by the bill in this item, to wit, the sum of $250,000. This being so, and the legislation being responsible for this reduction, it is not necessary to determine the exact amount of the reduction. Any reduction that is appreciable in the amount of money covered by the bill and that is effected by the legislation proposed in the amendment will make that amendment in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is true that this amendment is not precisely in the same form as offered and ruled out by the Chair on a point of order in the committee. But the difference is a matter of form rather than of substance. I agree, however, with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] in his contention that that makes no difference under his construction of the Holman rule. If under the Holman rule any sort of legislation can be offered to an appropriation bill the result of which may, in the opinion of the Chair, be eventually to decrease that appropriation, he opens up a field so wide that the Holman rule, I think, might be construed to cover any sort of legislation under any circumstances. Now, I believe the Holman rule ought to be construed strictly. I concede, as the gentleman from Virginia says, that its use may be beneficent where it actually curtails expenses. So far, so good, but I see also great danger in a construction of the Holman rule which, under the guise of reducing expenditures, permits legislation on appropriation bills. I am opposed to legislation on appropriation bills, and I think it ought to be guarded most carefully.

Now, take this case. It is contended that the raising of the fee on passports from $1 to $5 would increase the revenue and thereby tend to diminish the expense eventually. That may be true. But does anyone contend that it would be in order on the Post Office appropriation bill, for instance, to increase the rate on first-class postage from 2 cents to 5 cents, or from 2 cents to 10 cents—the proportion of increase in this case—on the ground that that increase of itself would eventually result in a decrease of expenditures?

I can not see very much difference between the two. You are raising the fee five times, increasing it by 400 per cent, as my friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says, and the Chair has got to take the view of it that that is going to necessarily decrease expenses, if his view is to be sustained.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker—conceding that you can find almost any precedent for any proposition under the Holman rule if you search the precedents carefully enough—that the Chair is justified in this case in assuming that as a matter of necessity the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is going to result in a decrease of appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not ask for recognition to submit any further remarks on my account, but wish to conclude what I have to say with a citation from a ruling by a gentleman who is regarded by this House as an eminent parliamentarian, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia. It will be found on page 507 of the manual, under the head of Important Decisions. I read:

Now, the Chair, as before stated, believes the Holman rule is intended to have a beneficial effect upon the Treasury of the United States. If the Chair is in doubt about whether or not an amendment is in order, he believes it his duty to resolve that doubt against the point of order, for by so doing the Chair works no hardship upon anyone, but submits to the committee itself the privilege of passing upon the amendment. If the committee favor it, a majority can adopt it. If they are opposed to it, a majority can reject it.

The Chair believes the amendment in question comes clearly within the spirit of the Holman rule.

A number of citations from Hinds' Precedents supporting this ruling will be found on the page of the manual cited above.

The SPEAKER. It is argued that this amendment, which is clearly legislation and therefore out of order, is in order by the terms of the Holman rule. That rule provides—

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

This amendment certainly does not do that. Again—

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

This certainly does not do that. Then again—

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It must be then under that third clause of the rule that this must be sustained, if sustained at all. It is well settled that the amendment must clearly and certainly and necessarily cause a reduction. But it seems to the Chair that it is impossible for the Chair to be sure that this amendment really and finally reduces the amount of money appropriated in this bill.

To be sure the appropriation is reduced from $250,000 to $200,000 on its face; that brings it within the Holman rule. But while the face of the appropriation is thus reduced on the one hand, on the other hand an indefinite increase of the appropriation is made. By the terms of the amendment it is provided that an additional fee—in other words, additional revenue—shall be provided, which shall be put into the same fund from which this appropriation is drawn and which increases that fund by the amount derived from the tax. How much money that tax will produce no one has estimated. Therefore, whether that fund will be larger or smaller than it is now, after this money is collected, it is impossible for the Chair to tell. It may be $200,000; it may be $400,000.

It does not seem to the Chair that it is a fair interpretation of the Holman rule to say that by creating a new source of revenue and making a specific appropriation of that revenue, and at the same time reducing the amount which was before appropriated, a real reduction of appropriation is effected. Certainly you are not sure that any economy is secured. The expenses of the United States are not necessarily reduced in any way. On the contrary, it may very well increase them, because if the sum is larger than the original appropriation, then the department has so much more to spend and the outlay of the department would be so much larger. It seems to the Chair that this is not an economy, but on the other hand it might, under the guise of economy, be a very large increase in the expense. It is a novel suggestion that new taxes are economy or lead necessarily to a reduction of expenses. The Chair thinks the amendment does not necessarily reduce the appropriation of this bill and sustains the point of order. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PORTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3451. An act authorizing and directing the United States Shipping Board to adjust and pay the claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was necessarily called from the Chamber on account of sickness in his family, and he requested me to nominate, to fill a Democratic vacancy on the Committee on Elections No. 1, Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I move that the gentleman nominated be elected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas nominates the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] as a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1, to fill a Democratic vacancy, and moves his election. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] may have five days within which to extend his remarks in connection with the memorial exercises for Mr. RAGSDALE. He was unavoidably absent yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] be given five days in which to extend his remarks in connection with the memorial exercises concerning Mr. RAGSDALE. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have it stated in the RECORD that my colleague, Mr. WHALEY, who is confined to his apartment with the "flu," could not for that reason vote on the bill relating to the increase in the pay of men in the Navy last Friday. If he had been here, he would have voted aye.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by enumerating still further citations from the opinions of Judge CRISP, which I cited, and other citations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the citations referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 27, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting request for change in the wording of estimates for "Repairs and preservation of public buildings," so as to include buildings controlled by the Public Health Service (H. Doc. No. 637); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report showing the number of documents received and distributed by the Treasury Department in the past calendar year; to the Committee on Printing.

3. A letter from the president of the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, transmitting report of the Washington & Old Dominion Railway for the 12 months ending December 31, 1919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FULLER of Illinois, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12012) concerning the administration of the pension laws in claims for pension of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and by the widows of such persons, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 585), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2259) for the relief of Edward S. Farrow, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 587), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HERNANDEZ: A bill (H. R. 12077) to amend section 6 of the Federal-aid road act; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 12078) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditures," approved February 23, 1917; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BRITTEN: Resolution (H. Res. 449) directing the Secretary of War to furnish the House of Representatives certain information regarding the mutiny on board the U. S. S. America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 12079) granting an increase of pension to Adelia Doersh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 12080) to advance Capt. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 12081) granting an increase of pension to Dwight F. Cummins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12082) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Holt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 12083) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 12084) granting an increase of pension to James F. Hughes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 12085) granting a pension to John L. Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12086) granting a pension to Mary Wessel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE: A bill (H. R. 12087) granting a pension to Richard Oddy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 12088) granting a pension to Ella E. Carbonell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RODENBERG: A bill (H. R. 12089) granting a pension to Anna Redding; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12090) granting a pension to Flora A. Nelson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEAGALL: A bill (H. R. 12091) granting a pension to Kesiah Garrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12092) granting a pension to John Van Dyne; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12093) granting a pension to Lloyd Newell; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12094) granting an increase of pension to William L. Snider; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VAILE: A bill (H. R. 12095) granting a pension to Joseph Stocker; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12096) granting a pension to Elizabeth Schliemann; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12097) granting an increase of pension to Henry Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 12098) for the relief of Annie M. Eopolucci; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1113. By the SPEAKER: Petition of City Council of Cincinnati, Ohio, urging Congress to make sufficient appropriation for the early completion of the improvement of the Ohio River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1114. By Mr. BRIGGS: Petition of Texas City Post, No. 89, American Legion, indorsing the Davey sedition bill, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1115. Also, petition of the National Association of Commissioners and Departments of Agriculture, opposing the repeal of certain features of Federal farm and joint-stock land banks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1116. Also, petition of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, relative to better understanding between the United States and Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1117. By Mr. CARSS: Petition of sundry citizens from the State of Ohio, regarding railroad legislation now before Congress; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1118. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the National Association of Chewing Gum Manufacturers and Allied Trades of New York City, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1119. Also, petition of W. C. Whish, John E. Gray, Thomas E. Ryan, and John Fitzgibbons, representatives of the four great railroad organizations, opposing the Cummins and Esch railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1120. Also, petition of the United Restaurant Owners of Greater New York, relative to the treatment of Jews of the Ukraine; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1121. Also, petition of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1122. By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petition of the Robert Emmet Literary Association, of Fall River, Mass., relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1123. By Mr. JAMES: Petition of the Women's Welfare Club of Marquette, Mich., relative to certain legislation in regard to the cold storage of food products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1124. By Mr. McCLINTIC: Petition of Oklahoma Employees' Associations, favoring legislation that will prevent the production and exhibition of any picture purporting to show the impersonation of any desperado, bandit, train robber, or alleged outlaw; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1125. By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Petition of Muskegon National Farm Loan Association at its annual meeting held January 13, 1920, protesting against the increase of maximum loans under Federal farm-loan act, also protesting against the taxing of Government farm-loan bonds; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1126. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of W. C. Whish, John E. Gray, Thomas E. Ryan, and John Fitzgibbons, representatives of the four great railroad organizations, opposing the Esch and Cummins railroad bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1127. Also, petition of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1128. By Mr. NOLAN: Petition of the Carpenters' Union, No. 483, of San Francisco, Calif., against the unseating of Victor Berger; to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

1129. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1130. Also, petition of the National Association of Chewing Gum Manufacturers of New York, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1131. Also, petition of W. C. Whish, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Thomas E. Ryan, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; John E. Gray, Order of Railway Conductors; and John Fitzgibbons, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, opposing the Esch and Cummins railroad bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1132. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of J. B. Murray and D. H. Gould, of Yonkers, N. Y., regarding the peace treaty and the League of Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1133. Also, petition of Association of State Farmers' Union Presidents, regarding the interest of farmers and the demands of organized labor; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1134. Also, petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, regarding proposed relief to manufacturers and importers from results of demoralization in customs service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1135. Also, petition of the National Association of Chewing Gum Manufacturers of New York relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1136. Also, petition of the United Restaurant Owners of Greater New York, relative to the treatment of the Jews of the Ukraine; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1137. Also, petition of H. A. Paterson, of New York, favoring all provisions in the Esch-Cummins railroad bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1138. Also, petition of W. S. Price, of New York City, opposing certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1139. By Mr. VAILE: Petition of the Canon City (Colo.) Lodge, No. 610, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1140. By Mr. WOODYARD: Petition of the Rotary Club of Parkersburg, W. Va., relative to the "red" menace; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the abundant life that Thou hast ministered to us and for all the institutions of this great land that minister to the abundant life. We thank Thee for the presentation of ideals that constantly lure us to the better and the higher life, for the influence of Thy providence that is always stimulating us to endeavor to reach the highest and the best. Grant us to-day the constant ministry of Thy spirit, that we may strive after the things that are pleasing in Thy sight and attain to the end for which Thou hast created us. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. SMOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	New	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Harris	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harrison	Overman	Smoot
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Trammell
Colt	Kenyon	Pittman	Wadsworth
Culberson	King	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	Moses	Sherman

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are detained by illness.

I wish to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is absent on public business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. Call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. WOLCOTT answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. NUGENT, and Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Georgia calling attention to Point Peter, in that State, an abandoned military reservation, and requesting authority that it may be transferred to the State of Georgia. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An act to be entitled "An act to memorialize Congress to cede the military reservation known as Point Peter to the State of Georgia, to be used as the site of a State-owned warehouse, and calling the attention of Congress to the value of same for said purpose."

Whereas the United States of America owns 720 acres of high land in the county of Camden, in the State of Georgia, known as Point Peter, which lies adjacent to land owned by the State, and which is only 2 miles from the Atlantic Ocean and near water of a depth of 40 feet and also near the port of St. Marys; and

Whereas with the completion of the proposed St. Marys-St. Marks Canal the said water-front property owned by the State will be of untold value for wharfage purposes, and with the property known as Point Peter could be utilized by the State for the purpose of erecting a State-owned warehouse, which would give the farmers of Georgia adequate warehousing facilities on a direct waterway from New York to all the South American nations; and

Whereas the United States Government is not utilizing the Point Peter land, and has never done so, though it has owned same for more than a hundred years: Therefore be it Enacted by the General Assembly of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, (1) That the General Assembly of Georgia does request the Congress of the United States of America to cede the Point Peter Military Reservation to the State to be utilized for the purpose of erecting thereon a warehouse for the use of the farmers of the State, at a rate of storage which will be fixed for the purpose of paying operating expenses only.

(2) That the Senators and Representatives of the said State in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to have a bill for the purpose of carrying this resolution into effect introduced in Congress without delay.

(3) That the governor of the State is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this act to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

(4) Be it further enacted that all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

JNO. N. HOLDER,
Speaker of House.
SAM L. OLIVE,
President of Senate.
E. B. MOORE,
Clerk of House.
DEVEREAUX F. MCCLATCHEY,
Secretary of Senate.

Approved August 18, 1919.

HUGH M. DORSEY, Governor.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of Oscar Bartlett Post, No. 233, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Lamb; of Fairbanks Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Detroit; of E. R. Stiles Post, No. 174, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Hancock; of A. Colvin Post, No. 59, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, of Gobleville; and of sundry inmates of the Soldiers' Home of Grand Rapids, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Common Council of Detroit, Mich., and a memorial of the board of directors of the American State Bank, of Oakwood, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the suspension of the work of widening and deepening the River Rouge, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jackson, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 680, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Cadillac, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of anarchy and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan Central System Federation of Railway Shop Employees, of Jackson, Mich., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins-Esch railroad bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Charles A. Learned Post, No. 1, American Legion, of Detroit, Mich., praying that the present hospital located at Fort Wayne, Mich., be turned over immediately for use of the Public Health Service, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of James Shields Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Wellington; of Dick Yates Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Eureka; of Antietam Post, No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Parsons; of Reno Post, No. 83, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Hutchinson; of Mulvane Post, No. 203, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Mulvane; of John Brown Post, No. 44, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Belleville; of Joe Hooker Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Hutchinson; of Victor Post, No. 293, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Fort Dodge; and of John A. Dix Post, No. 59, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Columbus, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the early passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and I submit a report (No. 395) thereon. I give notice that to-morrow morning after the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3472) for the relief of the owner of a drill boat known as drill boat No. 3 and a dredge known as dredge No. 9, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 384) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2274) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller (Rept. No. 385);

A bill (S. 2452) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co. (Rept. No. 386);

A bill (S. 3293) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Capitol (Rept. No. 387);

A bill (S. 3294) for the relief of the owner of the derrick Concord (Rept. No. 388);

A bill (S. 3518) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Urubambra (Rept. No. 389);

A bill (H. R. 909) for the relief of Ellen Agnes Monogue (Rept. No. 390);

A bill (H. R. 946) for the relief of James A. Showen (Rept. No. 391);

A bill (H. R. 1317) for the relief of Robert T. Legge (Rept. No. 392);

A bill (H. R. 1865) for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Ship Building Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md. (Rept. No. 393); and

A bill (H. R. 5346) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co. (Rept. No. 394).

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 288. The resolution authorizes the Committee on Commerce to employ an additional clerk during the present session of Congress, at an annual salary not exceeding $1,680 per annum. The committee recommends that the sum of $1,680 be reduced to $1,500. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator from New York whether or not, with the clerks which the committee now has, there is a necessity for additional help?

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Washington can reply as to the necessity.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I delayed presenting this resolution just as long as I could, because I am in hearty sympathy with keeping the number of the employees of the Senate as low as possible; but the Committee on Commerce is now holding meetings with reference to the shipping problem, the river and harbor appropriation bill has come from the House, and the work of the committee is such that the present force is absolutely unable to take care of it.

I did not present the resolution until I was practically forced to do so. I ask for the appointment of this additional clerk only for the present session. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I consulted the Sergeant at Arms several days ago to see if it were not possible for him to detail some of his force to take care of the matter until the expiration of the session, but I found that that could not be done. So, by force of necessity, I presented the resolution.

Mr. KING. I make no objection to the consideration of the resolution in view of the statement of the Senator from Washington.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 2, after the word "rate," to insert "of"; and in line 3 to strike out "$1,680" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3803) for the relief of certain landowners of New Castle County, in the State of Delaware; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3804) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase a tract of land with sufficient water right attached for the use and occupancy of the Temoak Band of homeless Indians located at Ruby Valley, Nev.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3805) to provide and adjust penalties for violation of various navigation laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3806) for the relief of Jonathan D. Long; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 3807) granting an increase of pension to Lilla May Pavy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3808) for the relief of Constance Davies Lathrop; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out at once the provisions of paragraphs A and B of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JAPANESE-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a series of questions and answers on the subject of the American-Japanese relations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE JAPANESE TIMES,
New York, N. Y., January 15, 1920.

Hon. JAMES DUVAL PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: It is reported by several newspapers to the effect that you are to introduce in American Senate a bill which prohibits children born in this country of Japanese or Chinese parents from becoming citizens of United States of America, and, further, constitutional amendment to prevent Asiatic immigrations.

I will very much appreciate your kindness if you will answer following questions, as it will give us great help in securing a better understanding among our people:

1. Do you or do you not satisfy the recent announcement by Japanese Government that the picture bride be prohibited strictly from February of this year?

2. How far, in your opinion, Californians will continue their anti-Japanese movement?

3. Is Japanese people in California or elsewhere in United States destruct American living standard and their safety than those bolshevik, communist, or some other movement?

4. Do you favor that Japan to keep Shantung or Siberia or elsewhere in Asia in order to settle her immigration problem?

5. Will you state me what would be a best policy for Japan to keep her good relations with America?

6. Do you believe war between Japan and America? If it is possible, will you state your reason?

I will dispatch your answer briefly by cable, and full translation will follow by mail. Your frank advice and an earliest possibly reply will be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully, yours,

Y. FUWA,

New York Correspondent to the Taisho Daily News, of Osaka, Japan, Care the Japanese Times, 35 Sixth Avenue, New York City.

—

UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 17, 1920.

Mr. YASUO FUWA,
Care the Japanese Times,
35 Sixth Avenue, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of January 15, submitting to me six questions to which you politely request an answer.

1. Question. Do you or do you not satisfy the recent announcement by Japanese Government that the picture bride be prohibited strictly from February of this year?

Answer. I am well pleased with the decision of the Japanese Government to refuse passports to "picture brides," but that is not sufficient to meet the objections of California. Other remedies must be found.

2. Question. How far, in your opinion, Californians will continue their anti-Japanese movement?

Answer. California desires very properly to preserve her white population, which is being driven off the soil by the influx of Japanese who have bought or leased land. The law forbids them to purchase land and still they are doing it by taking the land in the name of their children or in the names of corporations, both of which practices are clear evasions of the law. California will, I believe, continue to carry on this movement until the soil is in possession of the white race.

3. Question. Is Japanese people in California or elsewhere in United States destruct American living standards and their safety than those bolshevik, communist, or some other movement?

Answer. There is no comparison between the Japanese and the bolshevik movement. The Japanese dispossess the American people of the land and other means whereby to live, on account of destructive competition, while the Bolsheviks are corrupting their political opinions. The Government has taken action against the criminal Bolsheviks and is deporting them from the country. It would be a solution of California's economic troubles if the Japanese there would return to Japan or concentrate in other countries.

4. Question. Do you favor that Japan to keep Shantung or Siberia or elsewhere in Asia in order to settle her immigration problem?

Answer. I am in favor of giving Japan an outlet in Asia for her surplus population in order to protect my own country.

5. Question. Will you state me what would be a best policy for Japan to keep her good relations with America?

Answer. Japan could best keep her good international relations with America by keeping her people out of America and encouraging those in this country to go to other lands. As long as they are concentrated on the Pacific coast, the Japanese will be a source of irritation. The situation is acute in California, Washington, and Oregon. Australia has been able to protect itself. American public opinion has condemned Japan for her course toward both Korea and China, and good relations could also be improved by changing her policies in these respects.

6. Question. Do you believe war between Japan and America? If it is possible, will you state your reason?

Answer. America will never go to war with Japan or any other country unless under the greatest provocation, and I believe that no such provocation has arisen. All warfare is misunderstanding, and I trust your questions and my answers will serve a good purpose. If the Japanese would put themselves in our place, they would understand the situation. If Americans spread over Japan, and with improved and patented machinery cultivated the soil, and acquired it in large tracts, displacing the native population, what would Japan do? She would be obliged to stop it to preserve her people. Japanese travelers, students, scholars, and diplomats will always be welcome in America, but not the inexhaustible supply of laborers who can not assimilate with the white race and who destroy the character of the population. Our Government is a Republic and has to preserve the standard of its population in order to exist.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES D. PHELAN.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11960. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AWARDS OF NAVAL DECORATIONS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 285, being Order of Business 333 on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The motion of the Senator from Maine is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable before 2 o'clock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	Nugent	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	Overman	Spencer
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Stanley
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Poindexter	Townsend
Colt	Kenyon	Pomerene	Trammell
Culberson	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kirby	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sherman	Williams
Gerry	Moses	Simmons	Wolcott
Gore	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Hale	New	Smith, Md.
Harris	Norris	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 285. On that motion the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has requested the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. I am paired with him during his absence, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I am unable to secure a transfer of that pair, and therefore can not vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], with whom I am paired, is absent. Under the circumstances I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DIAL. I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I have been unable to secure a transfer and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] on account of illness.

I wish also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] are absent on official business.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are detained by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Ball	Frelinghuysen	New	Sutherland
Brandegee	Gronna	Norris	Townsend
Calder	Hale	Page	Wadsworth
Capper	Kellogg	Poindexter	Warren
Colt	Lodge	Smoot
Cummins	McCormick	Spencer
Curtis	Moses	Sterling

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Stanley
Chamberlain	King	Robinson	Trammell
Culberson	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	McKellar	Sherman	Walsh, Mont.
Gore	Nugent	Simmons	Williams
Harris	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Harrison	Phelan	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—40.

Bankhead	Gay	La Follette	Phipps
Beckham	Harding	Lenroot	Ransdell
Dial	Henderson	McCumber	Reed
Dillingham	Johnson, Calif.	McLean	Shields
Edge	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Swanson
Fall	Kendrick	Nelson	Thomas
Fernald	Kenyon	Newberry	Underwood
Fletcher	Keyes	Owen	Watson
France	Knox	Penrose	Wolcott

So Mr. HALE's motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 6863. It is the bill to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia, known as the zoning bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this bill has been read through once, and was amended upon motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I ask that the committee amendments be considered at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to hear the bill read. I was not here when it was read before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but I did not hear it, and I should like to know its provisions. If some Senator will explain it, that is all right.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I will explain the bill, as the Senator requests.

This bill provides facilities for subdividing the city of Washington into certain zones in which the erection of different characters of buildings may be prohibited. The real purpose of the measure is to safeguard the city from the construction of all sorts of objectionable buildings. About five years ago a law was passed in the city of New York providing a system similar to this. Recently in Baltimore and in St. Louis and in Philadelphia a measure accomplishing the same object has been put into effect. The commission is to consist of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Buildings and Grounds. Under the bill this commission will determine the different areas in which, for instance, business houses, factories, garages, or apartment houses may be constructed, and may fix the maximum height of buildings. It seems to me, from its operation in other large cities of the country, that it is a meritorious measure.

I shall be glad to answer any questions the Senator from North Carolina may wish to propound.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I simply wanted to know what the provisions of the bill were. I am rather inclined to support the bill. What is the commission to which the Senator refers?

Mr. CALDER. As I have just stated, the bill provides for the appointment of a commission consisting of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Buildings and Grounds, who will divide the city into certain zones. In some of these zones no business building may be constructed, in some no factories, in others no apartment houses. Of course, these different zones can be changed at any time at the request of 75 per cent of the residents in a given district. As I explained a moment ago, a similar scheme has been adopted in the city of New York, and it has done a wonderful lot of good in preventing the erection of objectionable buildings.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does it affect the height of buildings?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; the height and the area to be covered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask what will be the status of improvements that are already standing?

Mr. CALDER. The bill does not in any way affect improvements already standing, nor buildings for which permits have been granted.

Mr. WARREN. In a given zone, if factories are already there they remain there?

Mr. CALDER. They will not be disturbed.

Mr. WARREN. And the same with residences, and as to height, and so forth? It corrects none of the evils now existing?

Mr. CALDER. It does not. Of course, you can not take away a man's property and destroy it by law.

Mr. WARREN. Nor does the bill attempt it?

Mr. CALDER. Nor does the bill attempt it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I understand this bill, there is a feature of it to which I have no objection. That is the feature which regulates the height of buildings. That is a thing to be done in the general interest, and does not and could not sacrifice any proper private interest. But it always struck me that while it was very good policy for a city like Paris—a show city to a large extent—to say to a man, "You shall not build a residence upon a piece of property you have"—maybe the only piece he has, and maybe he can not sell it very well—"but you shall build, if anything, a factory upon it," it is going a little bit outside of what ought to be the right of the public, and is infringing upon private rights, to do the same thing in other cities.

If I understand this bill, there would be a right under it, if I owned a lot in some particular part of Washington and wanted to build a residence upon it for my family, either to deprive me of the use of the lot, or to force me to build a factory upon it, or to build something else which perhaps I would not have the money to build, or else to sell it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that is not quite correct. If the bill should pass, under its terms one would be permitted to build a residence in any part of the city, but it would prohibit objectionable buildings in purely residential sections.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What does the Senator mean by objectionable buildings?

Mr. CALDER. The Senator might own a very nice home in some residential section of this city and a man might come along with a building permit to construct a public garage adjoining it, it being a residential section, and a building of this character would be a good investment. This bill would prevent such a situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have very little sympathy with the idea that my home must be protected from somebody building a garage if he wants to do it. But, leaving that aside, as I understand the bill, if you establish a factory zone you can not have a residence in it.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator is mistaken. There is nothing in the bill to prevent the owner of a lot from constructing a more desirable building than is prohibited in the particular zone.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is distinctly prohibited?

Mr. CALDER. Wherever a similar law has been in effect—and I speak with knowledge, because it has been in effect for five years in New York and has worked splendidly—residences are permitted in any part of the city; but a building like a great laundry or a factory or a garage, or a high office building, is prohibited in the purely residential sections of the city.

My reason for presenting the bill, I will say to the Senator, was to protect the beauty of this city and not permit it to be destroyed by all sorts of objectionable buildings. Suppose some one wanted to build a factory in one of the fine residential sections of the city like Massachusetts Avenue or Sixteenth Street; that certainly would not only be objectionable to the people in the neighborhood but it would destroy the value of the adjoining property, and it is not fair to the people who own homes there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has instanced Sixteenth Street. I owned for quite a while a residence upon Sixteenth Street. I would have disliked very much, of course, to have seen a garage go up next door. I would have disliked very much to have seen a factory built on the street near me. But that is another matter. If people are to portion out parts of cities to be used for fine residences and get to dictating what sort of houses are to be built, it will finally culminate in their saying to a man of very moderate means that he shall not build a $3,000 house in the neighborhood where houses cost $20,000.

I think it threatens to trench very much upon the rights of private property. I do not believe in the system at all. I think if a darky wants to build a house somewhere, and can not afford to pay over a thousand dollars for it, and happens to own the lot, he ought to be allowed to build it. If somebody wants to build a garage next door to me, and owns the property and I do not, he ought to be allowed to build the garage. If anybody is fool enough to build a factory in a residential part of a city—generally they do not do that, because they want to build close to the railroads or close to the water, one or the other, for shipment purposes—I think he has a right to do it. I very much doubt the right of the public to say to him that he shall not do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment of the committee will be found on page 1, line 8, where, after the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert "the chairman of the Fine Arts Commission."

Mr. CALDER. The committee ask the Senate to disagree to this amendment. When it was inserted in the committee it was not known that the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds of the District was himself a member of the Fine Arts Commission. The amendment would provide for two members of the Fine Arts Commission on the board, and it is thought that one is enough. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 2, after line 5, where it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, reading as follows:

There is hereby authorized for the expenses of said commission, including the employment of expert services and all incidental and contingent expenses, the sum of $5,000, payable one half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, after the word "used," insert a colon and the following words: "Provided, That such regulations may differ in the various districts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, after the word "Provided," strike out the comma and the word "however" and insert the word "further," so that it will read "Provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of section 2, after the amendment already agreed to, insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the height of the apartment house now in construction, adjoining and immediately in front of Meridian Hill Park, on Florida Avenue, be limited to 67 feet.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if that amendment is urged, the bill will not get through before 2 o'clock.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the basis of the Senator's objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment affects a building that has been under way for quite a while and upon which a great deal of money has been expended; I think nearly $2,000,000 of bonds have been issued and sold and are now held by innocent parties, and the amendment proposes to cut the building in two.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; it does. I am pretty familiar with the proposition. It was before the District Committee formerly, and the committee did not report it, but refused to report it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand the matter, the committee reported the proposition favorably.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; it came out, and then it was referred back to the committee, and the committee refused to make a favorable report on the proposition.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was not advised as to that development.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the situation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My only object in offering the amendment was to prevent the destruction of the view from Meridian Hill Park, one of the most superb views in the city. In fact, that is the only park in the city which now has a commanding view of the Capitol and the vistas around for a great distance, and to have such a view obstructed and destroyed by the unsightly top of an apartment house is, it seems to me, to impair most seriously the value of the park to present and coming generations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator should press it as a separate measure and not try to put it on this bill. It will involve the United States in lawsuits and suits for damages, and will involve it in a great deal of cost. It will cost probably several hundred thousand dollars. I hope the Senator will not press the amendment upon this bill. It is all right if he wants to press it as a separate measure, and then, if the Senate sees fit to adopt it, very well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me add this statement in justification of my action. I am advised that the rough framework of the building is now at the fourth story, and that to limit the height on the part of Congress would simply take off some of the top of the structure, which is not yet permanently built.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many floors are there to be?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The building was to be about 80 or 90 feet high, if I remember accurately.

Mr. OVERMAN. About 8 or 10 stories?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Something like that. I do not recall the exact number.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator if Congress did not appropriate about $400,000 to buy that park property in order that it might be a place of beauty, and that there might be a great park looking over the city?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly it did, and mainly because it was about the only site left affording such a magnificent view.

Mr. OVERMAN. What authority did these people have for letting a contract to build a 10-story apartment house? Did they get permission from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They did get that permission.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me the officials have been very derelict in their duty.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Immediately afterwards a petition was presented to the commissioners, signed by the engineer commissioner, by the Fine Arts Commission, by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, Col. Ridley, asking that the permit be revoked. In view of the attitude of the Senator from Washington, of his statement that the Senate committee passed unfavorably on this measure finally, and of his statement that the pending bill will not be permitted to pass if this amendment is insisted upon, I shall not press it. I want to protest, however, against the destruction of one of the most superb views in this city, the destruction of an artistic value that would have grown with the years. Does the Senator from Washington say that he will oppose the amendment to such an extent that the bill can not pass before 2 o'clock if the amendment is insisted upon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well. Then I withdraw the amendment. I do not desire to imperil the passage of the bill. I realize that if debate continues until 2 o'clock the bill will fail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word now on the bill that has just been passed. I did not desire to delay its passage, but I wish to say that, in my judgment, the construction of the apartment building will not do what the Senator from Texas fears.

When this matter came up, I went to Meridian Hill Park and to the highest point on it, and took in, as far as my inartistic eye could, the artistic beauties of that place, and how it might be affected by the construction of the building. While it would probably be better not to have the building there, yet it is not going to interfere very much with the outlook. It is not going to affect very seriously the scenic beauty as observed from Meridian Hill Park, in my judgment. The Government of the United States could not afford, for what little interference there might be, to stop the building at this time. It could better afford, after the building is constructed, if it thinks that it should be lowered, to condemn it and pay the damages.

We would enhance the view from Meridian Hill by far by condemning a building across Sixteenth Street to the west of it, which does cut out a very great part of the view from Meridian Hill; but I judge that if Congress were to attempt to do that, those who are opposing the construction of this building would object very strenuously, indeed. The scenic beauty from Meridian Hill Park will not be very seriously damaged by the construction of this building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Meridian Hill Park is the place where they have been building walls out there on Sixteenth Street?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is Meridian Hill Park.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Should they not tear down those walls? Would not that afford a better view?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not pretend to be an artistic man, but I think that is really an outrage, and we had better take down that wall rather than cut off the top of apartment houses that have been authorized under the law, under a permit in the regular and ordinary way, and which will not, as a matter of fact, affect the view from Meridian Hill.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3383, to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and so forth.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the words "Public Health Service," to insert the words "contract surgeons, warrant officers, Army field clerks, and field clerks Quartermaster Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "50 per cent" and insert "20 per cent" and the following proviso, so as to read:

That the base pay of all officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, contract surgeons, warrant officers, Army field clerks, and field clerks Quartermaster Corps be, and the same is hereby, increased 10 per cent per annum; and the pay of all enlisted men and of members of the Female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 20 per cent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me this is an important bill——

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. It involves the expenditure of a good deal of money. I think it would be well for the Senator from New York, before the amendments are acted upon, to make an explanation of the bill in general, so that at least the few Senators who are now in the Chamber may know something about the legislation, the extent of the increases provided for, what the bill is for, and what it will cost to meet the requirements of the bill if it becomes a law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at this hour of the day I hesitate very much to suggest the absence of a quorum, and I shall not do so unless the discussion proceeds in such way as to show its necessity. Nevertheless it is unfortunate that for the moment really so few Senators are present, for the bill as drawn and reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate provides for an increase in pay of the officers and enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service, all in one bill.

I might say that in the preparation of the bill I and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs consulted with the chairman and several members of the Committee on Naval Affairs to ascertain whether or not they would have definite objection to the Committee on Military Affairs presuming to legislate on the question of naval pay.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, at a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs this morning this very question came up, but on the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who could not be present, the meeting adjourned to reconvene later. The Committee on Naval Affairs is interested in the provisions of the bill so far as they affect the Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to hear from the Committee on Naval Affairs, however, before saying that opposition will be offered to the bill and its passage at this time. I think the Committee on Naval Affairs will offer an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As far as I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] on many occasions, and with several other members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I understand there will be no objection from him as to the terms of the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from New York will yield at this moment, I think this is of sufficient importance to require the presence of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and others, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum to see if we can not get some Senators here to listen to the discussion that will take place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Ball	Harrison	Nugent	Sterling
Borah	Hitchcock	Overman	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Townsend
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Trammell
Capper	Kenyon	Pittman	Wadsworth
Chamberlain	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Cummins	McCormick	Sheppard	Watson
Dial	McKellar	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Moses	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Gerry	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Gronna	New	Smoot

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is absent on official business.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, owing to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, when the absence of a quorum was suggested I was commencing to explain the terms of the bill. As I said at that time, the bill provides for an increase in the pay of the officers and enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service. The Committee on Military Affairs has been presumptious enough to attempt the legislation in one bill. As I said, I and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs have consulted members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate in order to have their ideas as to the needs of the Navy.

The reason for our presumption in attempting to legislate on the pay of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service all in one bill is just this: All of these services, in greater or less degree, are requesting increases of pay, and to those of us who have looked into the matter it is entirely apparent that great distress exists in all of the services, varying in degree as we regard the grades and the commissioned ranks of the enlisted men and the officers of the several services.

The Committee on Military Affairs feared if the matter of the increase of pay for these different services was dealt with by several different bills emanating from several different committees of the Senate and of the House, that when the legislation was finally completed in that fragmentary form it would inevitably be found that some service would have received a greater increase in pay than some other service. So our hope has been that, whatever shall be done in the matter of increasing pay for these services, the increase shall be exactly the same in all of the services, in order that, after the legislation is finished, neither the Army nor the Navy will have any complaint against its sister services, nor the Coast Guard or the Public Health Service have any complaint against any of the others. I submit that, Mr. President, as a wise legislative policy in the matter of increasing the pay of these services, which, to a greater or less degree, can be classed in the same category, in that they are at all times a part or are potentially a part of the national defense.

Mr. President, it must be well known by all Senators that if we once increase the pay of the Army or the Navy by adding on a certain percentage in cash to the present pay it will never be reduced, for though the cost of living, which has increased so tremendously in the last few years, may, after a period of years, go down, it will be found in the Congress of that time, I apprehend, to be almost impossible to pass a bill reducing the pay of the officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy. I submit that as almost amounting to a legislative axiom.

The Military Affairs Committee has endeavored to find and to insert into a pay bill an element of elasticity in the matter of pay; an element in the matter of pay which will respond to the rising or the lowering of the cost of living as the years proceed in the future; and we have hit upon this scheme, which I desire to explain to the Senate.

It is well known, of course, that the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy receive a ration from the Government free of charge. The Quartermaster General of the Army estimates the cost of that ration, and the appropriations are made each year for the rationing of the Army based upon the estimated cost of the ration for the next ensuing fiscal year. The same is true of the Navy, and the same is true, to a greater or less extent, in the other services, among the enlisted men of the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service.

The cost of the ration varies from year to year. It may interest the Senate to know that the ration used in the Army about six or seven years ago cost the Government about 23 cents; at the time of the Mexican border mobilization it had risen to about 32 cents; and to-day it stands at 55 cents. In other words, the Government has been compelled to pay more and more money for the food which it issues to the soldiers, as a result of the increase in the cost of living, and it will be found by examining statistics and tables that the cost of the ration to the Government has very closely followed the rise in the general cost of living to the public; in other words, the cost of the ration in the last four or five years has approximately doubled, and it is fair to say that if the cost of living in the years to come goes down the cost of the ration to the Government will go down. So the committee has provided in this bill that, so far as the commissioned officers of the Army and the Navy and the other services are concerned, the bulk of their increased pay shall not be given them in cash in the first instance, but shall be given to them in the form of a commuted ration, and the several grades of the commissioned strength of the Army and the Navy are to get their proportionate increase in pay, under the terms of the bill, by means of the payment to them of commuted rations in proportion to their rank.

The machinery which we have devised to bring that about is very simple and is just this: Every officer in the Army and every officer in the Navy is entitled to so many rooms as quarters. For example, a second lieutenant in the Army is entitled to two rooms, which he receives in kind or else the rent value of those rooms, fixed at $12 a room, is commuted and paid to him in cash. A first lieutenant in the Army is entitled to three rooms; a captain in the Army is entitled to four rooms; a major in the Army is entitled to five rooms; a lieutenant colonel in the Army is entitled to six rooms; a colonel is entitled to seven rooms; and so up the scale through the ranks of brigadier general, major general, lieutenant general, and general. The same thing is true in the Navy, that wherever rooms are necessary for the housing of a naval officer on shore, where he can not get his quarters in kind, he also is entitled to rooms. An ensign in the Navy is entitled to two rooms, just as is a second lieutenant in the Army; a junior lieutenant in the Navy is entitled to three rooms, just as is a first lieutenant in the Army; and so on up the grades of naval rank, by exactly the same degree of progression, are naval officers entitled to quarters.

The bill provides that the officers of the Army and the Navy shall receive one ration per day for each room they are entitled to under quarters; in other words, the second lieutenant in the Army will receive his base pay, and, under the terms of the bill, that base pay will be increased only 10 per cent in cash, as an original cash payment; but as he is entitled to two rooms under quarters, he will receive the value of two rations per day; and, as the ration is now worth 55 cents, a second lieutenant will get $1.10 a day added pay. The first lieutenant will get the value of three rations per day, the captain will get the value of four rations per day, the major will get the value of five rations per day, the lieutenant colonel will get the value of six rations per day, and the colonel will get the value of seven rations per day added pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is hardly a net increase, because the old ration cost something.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Mississippi interrupts me to say that it is not a net addition, because the old ration used to cost something, but under existing law the officers of the Army and the Navy do not receive any rations at all. I have no doubt that Senators understand that perfectly well, but a large portion of the public fails to realize that the officers of the Army and Navy have to feed and clothe themselves, whereas the enlisted men are fed and clothed by the Government.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that by injecting this element of increase of pay, brought about by the payment of a commuted ration, we have put in the legislation an elastic element, which in the future, as the years go by, will respond, up or down, to the cost of living.

In other words, the bill provides that for the first ensuing fiscal year after the passage of the act the value of the ration shall be regarded as 55 cents, and that annually thereafter the value of the ration shall be restated and reestablished in conformity with the actual cost of the ration to the Government; so that if the cost of living goes down, we will say, two years from now, and it only costs the Government 45 cents per ration, the pay of the second lieutenant, who is drawing commuted rations at the rate of two a day, will go down proportionately; if the cost of living goes up two years hence, and it is necessary for the Government to pay 60 cents for a ration, the pay of the officer will go up just that amount; in other words, this whole scheme of pay for the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service is put upon such a basis as not only are the officers protected in the matter of their ability to live within their pay, but also the Government and the taxpayers are protected, so that the Government will get the benefit which should accrue to the Government in the event that the cost of living goes down in the years to come.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Perhaps I ought not to ask the question, but I know very little about military affairs. The Senator has made the bill very clear, even to me, as to pay of the commissioned officers; but what happens to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men who happen to be married?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to cover that.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, I fully understand that a noncommissioned officer or an enlisted man gets his board from the Government; but in the case, we will say, of sergeants—and there are a great many of them who have served for 30 years; I know several of them—they get a base pay of $38 or $44, the highest that any of them gets, I believe, being $60 per month. Now, what happens to them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was about to explain to the Senate what the bill proposes to do for the noncommissioned officers and the enlisted men.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the matter of the officers I wish he would be kind enough to explain to me section 2, which begins:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of May 11, 1908, the act of May 13, 1908, the act of May 12, 1902, and the act of August 14, 1912, as respectively specifically limit to $5,000, $4,500, and $4,000 the pay of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major in the Army and Marine Corps—

Then comes—and captain, commander, and lieutenant commander in the Navy; and captain commandant, senior captain, and captain in the Coast Guard; and assistant surgeon general, senior surgeon, and surgeon in the Public Health Service are hereby repealed.

Does that apply to all of the acts mentioned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it applies to all those acts. I can explain what that means.

Mr. LODGE. Down to the words "Marine Corps," in line 7, it reads like a preamble, and I had supposed substantive provision began at line 8.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; it reads:

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of May 11, 1908, the act of May 13, 1908, the act of May 12, 1902, and the act of August 14, 1912, as respectively specifically limit to $5,000, $4,500, and $4,000 the pay of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and major in the Army and Marine Corps; and captain, commander, and lieutenant commander in the Navy; and captain commandant, senior captain, and captain in the Coast Guard; and assistant surgeon general, senior surgeon, and surgeon in the Public Health Service are hereby repealed.

Mr. LODGE. The words "as respectively specifically limit" seem to me to constitute a somewhat awkward phrase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It expresses, however, exactly what is desired to be done. I do not object to changing the wording so long as the meaning is not changed.

Mr. LODGE. Why is the pay of colonel, lieutenant colonel, and other officers mentioned there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The acts which are recited in the first four lines of section 2 of the bill are a series of enactments which limit the progressive increase of the pay of officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service to a certain figure. The Senator will remember, for example, that in the Army officers receive a 10 per cent increase in pay for each five years of service.

Mr. WARREN. Up to 40 per cent, not including the limits which the Senator——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Up to but not exceeding an aggregate increase of 40 per cent; but in no event, under existing law, must the pay of a colonel go above $5,000, the pay of a lieutenant colonel above $4,500, or the pay of a major above $4,000. The same law applies to the corresponding grades in the Navy. In other words, the "fogy," or 10 per cent increase which accrues every so often in the pay of an officer in the Army or the Navy after so many years of service under existing law, must stop at these figures in those three respective grades. This bill repeals those provisions of law and permits the officer to continue to receive the increase, ordinarily called, as I remember, the "fogy."

Mr. WARREN. But the 40 per cent maximum remains?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The 40 per cent maximum still remains.

Mr. LODGE. I understand what the first clause means. Now, what happens to the lower grades—captain, commander, and lieutenant commander of the Navy; captain commandant, senior captain, and captain of the Coast Guard; assistant surgeon general, senior surgeon, and surgeon of the Public Health Service, and so on?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The captain in the Navy is one of the officers who are now limited to the figure fixed in the law—$5,000. The commander in the Navy is limited to $4,500, and the lieutenant commander in the Navy is limited to $4,000. We repeal that limitation for the Navy, just as we do for the corresponding ranks in the Army.

Mr. LODGE. I understand what the Senator says it means.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what it does mean.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to criticize the language, but I think it is one of the blindest sections I ever saw. I am only trying to find out the facts. I am thoroughly in favor of the bill. I am interested in the Coast Guard, however, because they were not legislated for or placed in the Navy until the war came on, and none of the acts dealt with here affected them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but, Mr. President, I think the Senator forgets that the war-time legislation gives the Coast Guard officers assimilated rank with the Navy. The Senate has passed a joint resolution continuing that in time of peace. Therefore, they should be included here with their corresponding officers in the Navy, as well as the Navy officers included with their corresponding officers in the Army.

Mr. LODGE. They were put in in that way, and a joint resolution, I know, passed continuing it. Now, what is it that is repealed in their case?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no specific law on the statute books which prevents a captain commandant of the Coast Guard receiving a salary of more than $5,000; but now that he has been given assimilated rank, pay, and allowances with a naval officer, you do not want that naval statute to apply against him.

Mr. LODGE. I see. None of the statutes that the bill repeals do apply against him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do apply against him, now that he has become a potential part of the Navy. He is brought under the pay and allowances provisions of the Navy by the action of the Senate just the other day. Therefore, we must protect him as well as we do the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. I see. Now, where does it leave him? Does it affect his rank?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. It leaves the rank that was granted him under the war provisions of the Navy?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly so.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, as I understand, that joint resolution has only passed the Senate. It has not passed the House; and, if I remember correctly, I think the resolution does not touch any of the district superintendents of the Coast Guard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. GERRY. So that, as I understand, under the act of 1915, when the Coast Guard was created, no provision was made for the rank of the superintendents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. GERRY. Then the Coast Guard went under the Navy under the act of 1918, in which case they received rank and pay as naval officers. Now I understand that they have gone back to the Treasury Department, and that as soon as peace is declared they will lose the rank that they held under the Navy. In any event the joint resolution that was passed by the Senate does not cover the superintendents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. GERRY. So that those men will really be in worse position than the keepers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is true. This bill, however, does not bring that about. That is due to other things.

Mr. GERRY. Therefore, I will say to the Senator, I shall at the proper time suggest an amendment to cover that situation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Would it disturb the Senator from New York if, as a matter of information to the Chair, the Chair could ascertain what the 40 per cent increase would bring this pay up to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The 40 per cent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The Chair understands that with this repeal they are permitted to increase the pay 40 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can give that information, Mr. President, in a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Also, the time that a man has to serve to get the 40 per cent. The Chair ought to know that, but he does not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For example, Mr. President, a major in the Army to-day receives a base pay of $3,000. If he has had 20 years of service in the Army, however, his fogies bring the total amount up to $4,000. Under this bill he will get $4,620 as annual pay, and his commutation of rations adds another $1,003.75; so that his total pay, exclusive of the $12 a room for quarters allowance when it can not be furnished in kind, and exclusive of heat and light when it can not be furnished in kind, will be $5,623 after 20 years of service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, can the Senator say what those additional items would amount to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those additional items are as follows: For annual commutation of quarters, he gets a total of $720 to pay his room rent for a year——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And then rations?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The rations become a part of the pay under the terms of this bill, and that is the large body of the increase—the ration commutation, amounting to $1,003 in increase in pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The rations are included in the 10 per cent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no. The officers of the Army and Navy under this bill receive a 10 per cent increase in pay, plus the payment of the commuted ration, as I have explained.

The Senator from North Dakota asked me about the enlisted men. Very much the same problem is found among the enlisted men, but it is found to a very large degree among the noncommissioned officers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has not quite made it clear whether the $5,620.75 includes the item for rations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then to that should be added $720 for rooms?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the officer, a major, is living away from an Army post.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I am taking such a case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; then he would be given $720 a year to pay his room rent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What besides that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The heat and light, which I have read, I think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would that amount to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and fifty-nine dollars and two cents to pay for his heat and his light for a year. Those are the present allowances. The heat and light allowance and the quarters allowance are the present ones, and we do not disturb them at all. He would receive the total which I gave in cash after 20 years of service, and had reached the rank of major.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would that total come to, then, including rooms and heat and light and increase in pay?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The whole thing would be $6,602.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As against what total now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Four thousand nine hundred and seventy-nine dollars.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is nearly a 50 per cent increase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; it is a 31 per cent increase. That has all been figured out, Mr. President. Let me say, for the information of the Senate, that the 10 per cent increase given to officers under this bill, plus the payment of the commuted ration, amounts to a fraction underneath 31 per cent net increase in pay.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota asked me about the enlisted men, and I should like to proceed in an attempt to say what the bill does for them.

As I said a moment ago, the same condition is found among the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy, but it is found mostly among the noncommissioned officers. I do not need to tell the Senate that the noncommissioned officers in the Army, and the corresponding grades of the enlisted personnel of the Navy—I think they are called the petty officers, and have other designations—are the backbone of the services. Your Army is no good at all unless its sergeants are good men. You may have the best officers on earth, but if your noncommissioned officers, who are the natural and proper "go-betweens" between the officers and the enlisted men, are not first-class men, you have neither morale nor efficiency. Therefore it is to the interest of the Government so to treat the noncommissioned officers that they will reenlist after each term of enlistment expires, that they will make a life career of the Army; and the same is true of the Navy. They are the ones who exert the influence upon the young private soldiers and the young apprentice seamen. Without their influence, without their power, without their steadying effect in the matter of morale and discipline, you have nothing.

Now, you can not expect men to go into the Army and rise up through the grades of corporal, sergeant, first sergeant, quartermaster sergeant, and other noncommissioned grades and pay them at such a low rate that they can not afford to marry. You can not ask a man to live that kind of a life. It turns out that the pay of the noncommissioned officers of the Army—and the same is true about the Navy—is so low to-day, as compared with the cost of living, that they can not support their families. Furthermore, they can not get out of the Army in very many instances; they have been in it so long that it has become their life work. It would be mighty difficult for them to go out into civil life, after 20 or 25 years' service in the Army, and start all over again to make a living and support a wife and three or four children. Nevertheless, that wife and those three or four children must be supported by the noncommissioned officer while he is in the Army, because the Government gives nothing to the support of a noncommissioned officer's family.

The noncommissioned officer himself is fed and clothed by the Government. But his wife is not fed and his children are not fed, nor is his wife clothed or the children clothed or the children educated by the Government. He must still support his family very much as a civilian does, except that he does not have to pay for what he actually eats or what he actually wears.

The noncommissioned officers of the Army in the upper grades are entitled to quarters under certain regulations wherever quarters are available. For example, the quartermaster sergeant stationed over here at Fort Myer, if there are quarters suitable for a noncommissioned officer and his wife at that post, is entitled to them, and he is entitled to so many rooms under the regulations of the Army.

This bill gives him a commuted ration for each room that he is entitled to under the regulations and raises his pay 20 per cent besides.

Mr. GRONNA. How much would that amount to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It amounts to different sums in different grades, and I will give the Senator the figures. This, to my mind, is just as important as the provision for officers; and yet I will say to Senators that the distress now being experienced not only among the noncommissioned officers and their families but among the commissioned officers is very great, indeed. I have been told on the most reliable authority that there are wives of Army officers who to-day are selling their household linen and ornaments out of their houses in order to try to get together enough money to make both ends meet. Two thousand two hundred officers, one-fifth of all the officers, have resigned from the Regular Army in the last six months. The poor noncommissioned officer can not resign. He would if he could. He is enlisted for a term of years, and he must serve out his enlistment unless the Government, for some reason or other, is willing to let him go; and the Government can not let him go. It has to have his services.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask the Senator a question. These noncommissioned officers are given an increase of 20 per cent under the bill, and then they are given the rations. If you calculate a ration upon a percentage basis, what would it amount to for a first sergeant, let us say?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A noncommissioned officer, Mr. President, who is entitled to quarters under present regulations will, of course, get a ration for each room of his quarters plus 20 per cent of his present pay. The payment of rations at the present value of 55 cents per ration amounts to a fraction over 20 per cent actual increase in pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, at the present cost of living and at the present price of rations, he would get a real increase of 40 per cent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, in the cases where they are entitled to rooms; and he gets, in any event, an increase of 20 per cent.

The Senator has asked me how it would work out.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator begins on that, because I do not want to interrupt him in it, I wish to call his attention to a matter which I think ought to be corrected by a proviso in section 2. When the Coast Guard was amalgamated with the Navy for war purposes, under the act of 1918, at that time very properly under the naval bill they made provision for the district superintendents and the senior superintendents, and assimilated them in rank, so that they had naval rank, and they have it now. But under that provision of the appropriation act it was to terminate at the conclusion of peace, and those men, who are the finest officers in the Coast Guard Service, will lose thereby their assimilation; they will be thrown out practically altogether. They will not get the pay of a keeper of a life-saving station.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. They ought to be covered. A very simple amendment will do it. There are only 14 of them altogether. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] has an amendment which covers it. It is very simple.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will present it after the committee completes its statement on the bill?

Mr. GERRY. That is my purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I shall have to leave the Senate in a moment, and I thought the Senator would forgive me for calling his attention to it now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. President, we will take the case of a first sergeant. His present pay is $51 a month. He will get a 20 per cent increase of that, which will make his pay $61.20. If there are quarters available at the post at which he is stationed, his family can occupy those quarters, and he saves room rent. That is the case to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Suppose there are no quarters available. Then what happens?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government under present law does not pay room rent for the families of noncommissioned officers.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Is there any reason why he should not have compensation equal to the cost of the room rent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might be arranged by a regulation.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If a room could not be found, it seems to me he ought to be entitled to compensation equal to the cost of a room.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government, of course, would have to put on a flat rate per room.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It applies to commissioned officers, and it seems to me that if a noncommissioned officer is entitled to rooms, if they can be had, he ought to be entitled to the cost of the rooms when they can not be had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Take the case of a master electrician. His present pay is $81 a month. He will get $97.20 per month as the result of this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Would the Senator object to an amendment providing that in cases where noncommissioned officers can not occupy quarters, an allowance shall be made? I agree with the Senator in his statement of a moment ago, that the noncommissioned officers are really the important part of the Army, so far as its morale is concerned, and why should not a noncommissioned officer have the same opportunity to get an allowance for quarters as a commissioned officer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I would have no objection at all, provided it were confined to the upper grades of the noncommissioned officers. I think when a man has reached the upper grades, it ordinarily means he has had 12 to 15 or 20 years' service. I think it is good policy on the part of the Government, and money well spent, to make that man's life and his family's life a comfortable one, rather. It will never be too easy for him.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest to the Senator that he prepare an amendment which will provide for that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say frankly to the Senator that this bill did not attempt to change any existing law as to those who should have quarters and who should not. It merely took existing law as we found it in that respect and built upon it to get our increases.

Mr. GRONNA. But we do change existing law so far as it will apply to commissioned officers. We repeal two or three statutes, and I can see no good reason why we should not undertake to provide for these men, who have been faithful in their service for 15 or 20 years, and some of them for nearly 30. I know some of these men who have been in the service since the Spanish-American War, and who are in the service at this time. Of course, they were promoted for a short time, but they will have to go back. Some of those who are now lieutenants will have to go back to the rank of sergeant. They will get in the neighborhood of $60 a month. How are they to live on $60 a month? It seems to me it would be impossible.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have already stated that to be the fact.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand it, the Senator will have no objection to an amendment to provide for quarters for these men or making an allowance when there are no quarters?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection at all, Mr. President, to the principle involved in that suggestion. But I warn the Senator it must be very carefully drawn; we will have to give a great deal of consideration to it. But I think it is applicable to a bill of this sort; I do not mean to discourage the Senator, but we have to work out what grades it shall apply to.

Mr. GRONNA. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the chairman of the committee, because he knows a great deal more about it than I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not sure I do. My mind, Mr. President, has been puzzling about these things. I am not sure I know which is right and which is wrong.

Again speaking of the enlisted man, if you will examine the bill you will find that the bill does not bring any increase of pay to the privates in the Army or the apprenticed seamen in the Navy. Their pay was increased 100 per cent only two and a half years ago. The private in the Army gets $30 a month the instant he enlists. He is almost invariably a bachelor. Of course, almost invariably he is a young man. The Government feeds him, clothes him, gives him medical care, transports him when he is on duty, pays practically all his expenses, except what might be termed pocket expenses for tobacco and for entertainment. He gets $30 a month as it is.

It may be said that $30 a month is too low to attract men into the Army. The answer to that is that you will never be able to make it high enough to compete with private employment, anyway. The only thing that will attract men into the Army in time of peace is the prospect for advancement and better pay after a comparatively short period of efficient and faithful service. In other words, a young man would be willing to go into the Army at the base pay of $30 if he felt sure that after a year or two or three years of faithful, efficient service he could become a private, first class, and get an increase, as this bill would provide, of $9 per month in his pay. And if he made good there he would become a corporal and get another increase. If he made good there, he would become a sergeant and get another increase. So that after 6, 8, or 10 years' service in the Army he would really be on an excellent basis. It is the inducement held before them by a properly balanced pay schedule of that kind which will recruit your Army. You never can go out into the market and outbid industrial wages to-day in getting men in the Army in the first instance. If you attempt it you will bankrupt the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator's argument is most excellent; but it only goes to show that the more you remunerate the noncommissioned officers the more attractive it makes the service to the enlisted man. Therefore I think it shows the importance of taking care of the noncommissioned officer as soon as possible and giving him something to look forward to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will just show what this bill does in that respect.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is not that he shall be a commissioned officer, but he has something to look forward to as a noncommissioned officer.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. The Senator speaks of the inducement in getting the private soldier in, that he has a chance to be promoted and become a corporal. As compared with the number of privates in the Army, there are, of course, only a small number of corporals. They can not all be corporals. Is that really much of an inducement when it must be confined to so few?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are more than the Senator supposes.

Mr. NORRIS. I have known of regiments where they had only one private and all the rest were officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is speaking about Central America. The privates of the Army comprise about 49 per cent of the enlisted strength; the first-class privates, about 24 per cent of the enlisted strength; and the other 26 per cent, approximately, of the Army is made up of corporals, sergeants, and the higher grades in the noncommissioned ranks. This bill leaves the pay of the private at $30, just where it is to-day. The pay of a first-class private, instead of being $33, as it is to-day, is made $39.60, quite a big increase. The pay of a corporal, instead of being left at $36, as it is to-day, is made $43.20. Fourteen per cent of the Army are corporals.

Mr. NORRIS. How does the private become a first-class private?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By good service.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that open to all privates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. So that if they all performed good service we would have an Army composed entirely of that class?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the law limits to about 25 per cent the number of the men who can be made first-class privates.

A sergeant, instead of getting $38 as he gets to-day, would get $45.60—that is, the line sergeant. The staff sergeant would be raised from $44 to $52.80. Then when we get above the line and staff sergeants we begin to get into the noncommissioned class, where men have had quite extensive service and are apt to be married, and there the same increase in proportion extends. These are the ones whom the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] thinks might well be given quarters as a matter of right whereever they are stationed. They are now given quarters only when the quarters are available at the Army post.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator what proportion of Army posts will have such available quarters?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I could not answer that accurately. Before we went into the war with Germany a good many Army posts did have them, because the Army was largely stationed at old Army posts, such as Fort Myer, for example, but since the war the Army has been moved into these big cantonments and is largely stationed at the big cantonments, which consist, as the Senator knows, almost entirely of barracks for the men alone, and there are no officers' quarters or noncommissioned officers' quarters worthy of the name at these cantonments. If it is intended to build them, it can be done, but we must remember all the time that we are spending the people's money.

Mr. President, the bill as drawn will increase the maintenance cost of the Army to the extent of $28,738,000 per year, of the Navy $26,685,000 per year, the Marine Corps $2,657,000 per year, the Coast Guard $806,000 per year, and of the Public Health Service $642,000 per year. I have left off the hundreds and fractions of hundreds.

The total increase which the bill would carry and impose upon the Treasury for the horizontal raising of the pay of officers and enlisted men of all five services would be $59,530,000. I know full well that is somewhat discouraging. It means another increase in appropriations. I do not like it, and I assume that no other Senator likes the prospect of spending approximately $60,000,000 more. But the alternative is a very serious one. If we do not spend that amount of money, or approximately that amount of money, or unless there is a most marked change in the conditions of life within one or two years, we will not have any army and we will not have any navy. When these noncommissioned officers' terms of enlistment expire, they will not reenlist. They can not reenlist at the present rate of pay. The commissioned officers of the Army are getting out of it just as fast as they can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many have gotten out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twenty-two hundred have resigned from the Regular Army during the last six months.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator know how many naval officers have resigned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know, but I know a large number of them want to resign. Their families are in distress; they can not educate and clothe their children decently. It is no fault of theirs, and, as a matter of fact, it is no fault of the Government in the first instance. It is the fault of the famous "H. C. L."—high cost of living.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment. Let us remember that in the case of the Army, for example, the pay of the officers has not been increased one iota since 1908. The cost of living has a little more than doubled in that interval.

The pay of the enlisted men of the Army was very largely increased shortly after the outbreak of the war, so the bill does not provide as large an increase in pay for the enlisted men clear through all the grades of enlisted men as it does for the officers; but if you take the increase given to the enlisted men in May, 1917, and add to it the increase provided for in this bill you will find that since 1908 the enlisted men will have been increased by a much larger percentage than the officers will have been increased as a result of this bill alone.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator know how the resignations of officers from the Army are distributed as to rank, or has the Senator data showing that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have it in my office and will get it here in just a moment; but I will say that they have occurred in every rank from colonel down. Of course, the greater number are in the grades of captain, first lieutenant, and second lieutenant. I will tell the Senate why. These men have not been in the Army too long; they can get out and take their chance in civil life in making their living; but when a man has been in the Army 20 or 25 or 30 years and has reached the upper grades and has a family of half-grown or almost fully grown children he takes a terrible chance when he leaves the Army, and he feels that he has to stay on until he reaches the age of 64 and can be retired on three-quarters pay. So the majority of the resignations occur in the grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain. Those are the young men, and, incidentally, those young men who are resigning from the Army to-day in the lower commissioned grades are the most valuable men if they could be kept in the Army. They are men with initiative, with gumption, with enterprise, who are not afraid to leave the Army and go out and make their own living. We are losing the best. The tendency is for the lethargic young man, the slow-minded, slow-thinking young man, the young man without much enterprise, to stay in the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The timid one, too.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I have not had an opportunity to hear the entire argument of the chairman of the committee. Perhaps I am asking him to repeat, but I am anxious to know if he has any data connected with the raise to show the relation of the increase of salary to the increase in the cost of living since the last appropriation fixing the existing rate some 10 years ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can tell the Senator in a word. The pay of officers of the Army was fixed last in 1908. They have had no increase since of any kind whatsoever. The pending bill gives them a net increase of a fraction under 31 per cent. The cost of living has gone up more than 100 per cent. The bill does not bring them up to the increased cost of living. It only goes one-third of the way.

The enlisted men, particularly the privates, in 1917 were increased 100 per cent. The base pay of the private was raised from $15 a month to $30 a month. The base pay of other grades of enlisted men was increased but not quite in the same ratio, but the private got 100 per cent in 1917. This bill does not raise the pay of the private, but it raises the pay of all the other enlisted men, up through the noncommissioned grades, 20 per cent.

The Senator from South Dakota asked me about resignations.

Mr. STERLING. Yes. Has the Senator the data now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have it. Four lieutenant colonels resigned, 25 majors, 199 captains, 816 second lieutenants, and 1,106 first lieutenants. These resignations are distributed as follows: Eight hundred and thirty-five officers have resigned from the Infantry, 409 from the Coast Artillery, 344 from the Cavalry, 284 from the Field Artillery, 149 from the Medical Corps—and that is a very serious loss, which actually threatened the proper care of the sick in our hospitals—96 from the Engineers, 33 from the chaplains, 25 from the Dental Corps, 19 from the Veterinary Corps, 10 officers from the Philippine Scouts, 4 from the Quartermaster Corps, and 2 from the Judge Advocate General's Department. That is one-fifth of all the officers in the Army.

Mr. STERLING. I understood the Senator to say that the officers' increase amounted to 31 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Counting the commuted rations.

Mr. STERLING. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill gives officers a 10 per cent flat increase in pay plus the payment of a ration per day for each room they are entitled to under quarters, and that means a uniform increase of 31 per cent clear up the line. That applies to the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service. They are all treated exactly alike.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. When I was in the House four or five years ago my attention was called to the fact that at that time there was practically a standing offer from various fields of engineering, steel plants, and the like, for capable young officers of the Army at very much larger pay than the Government provided. Does that condition still exist?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; more so than ever. A bright young officer who has had the education which the Government has given him can get twice as much pay on the outside as he can in the Army. He likes to stay in the Army because he likes the Army life. That is the only thing that keeps him.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Can my colleague inform me what is the pay received to-day by a second lieutenant in the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I can give my colleague the figures exactly. A second lieutenant gets $1,700 a year base pay. If he can not get quarters in kind and has to rent rooms at the place where he is ordered to serve, he will get $288 allowed to him to pay his room rent for a whole year, which would not pay it for four months here in Washington.

Mr. CALDER. I thought I might contrast that with the fact that I am employing to-day in New York several alien laborers who can not speak the English language, and I am paying them $7 a day, which for 300 days in the year would make $2,100 a year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Our hearings disclosed the fact that bricklayers in Washington receive $9 a day wages——

Mr. CALDER. Ten dollars a day now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are all glad they get that amount, but a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps operating in the operating room of Walter Reed Hospital every day, with the lives of men dependent upon his skill, only gets $6.50 a day. How can they stay in the service? The young man who testified to that effect told us he had put in his resignation four times. They can not let him go because he must continue to operate at the Walter Reed Hospital. In the last fiscal year that man has run into debt $1,200 living here in the city of Washington with his wife. They have no children. They live in two rooms. They cook their breakfast in one room and eat it in the other—in the bedroom. They never can invite anybody to come to see them, and by the same token they can not accept invitations for entertainment elsewhere. They are crowded out of all entertainment and all the joys of social life. That was a specific instance given to us. As soon as that man can do so, he is going to leave the Army. He is running into debt at the rate of $1,200 a year, and he was brave enough and frank enough to submit to us his expenses and those of his wife, item by item and day by day, to show just how they struggled to keep within his salary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would he not be not only a fool, but dishonest, if he did not leave the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, he must leave the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He would be dishonest if he did not do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He owes something like $2,000 for his medical education, which has not yet been paid for.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I may have been absent when the subject has been up, but I desire to inquire does this bill make any provision for an increase in the pay of privates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not of the lowest-class privates, but it does increase the pay of privates of the first class and of the other enlisted men.

Mr. BORAH. What would it leave the pay of privates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. At $30 a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they got an increase of 100 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. When?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two years ago.

Mr. BORAH. An increase from $15 to $30 a month. Is it the purpose of those Senators having charge of legislation with reference to these matters to leave the pay of privates at $30 a month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Then, I am against the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, I regret that the Senator is against the bill on that account. I do not know that I am justified in retracing my steps in explaining to the Senator why the committee took that action.

Mr. BORAH. It may be possible that the committee has a good reason for having done so, but I can not imagine what it could be. It is, perhaps, no argument that the pay of the other men should not be raised, but it is a discrimination which, in my judgment, can not be maintained upon any ground of equity or justice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I deny that it is a discrimination or that there is anything unjust or inequitable about it. If the Senator from Idaho will listen a moment, I shall try to convince him of that fact. It is very easy to say that things are discriminations and inequitable, but let us see what this case is.

A man enlists in the Army and receives the pay of $30 a month. He is invariably a bachelor, a young man. He is fed and clothed by the Government; he is housed and sheltered by the Government; he is transported whenever he moves according to the orders of the Government; and all his medical care is given to him by the Government. The $30 is pocket money. It is perfectly true that $30 of and by themselves do not attract men into the Army, because the man could probably make twice that amount in civil life.

Mr. BORAH. At least twice that amount.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He could get at least twice that amount in civil life in cash. He gets at least $60 in civil life, we will say, in cash; but he would have to clothe himself, feed himself, transport himself, pay his own doctor's bill in civil life, which he does not have to do in the Army.

It is utterly impossible for the Government to bid against industrial wages in the matter of the payment of privates upon first enlistment in the Army; it can not be done.

Mr. BORAH. It is equally impossible for the Government to bid against private corporations in the matter of the employment of the men who occupy positions in official life. The Government can not pay the man who works for it what the private corporation will pay men who perform similar work. That is out of the question. Senators who are capable of making $60,000 or $100,000 a year at their professions come here and work for $7,500 a year. The Government can not bid against that situation; there is no use to undertake it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is just what I am saying.

Mr. BORAH. And it ought to apply to one class just as much as to the other.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. BORAH. I will wait until the Senator concludes his statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How does the Government get men to go into the Army?

Mr. BORAH. That is a long story.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the Senator from Idaho desires to answer my question.

Mr. BORAH. There are numerous ways in which the Government gets men to go into the Army, but it certainly does not get them to go into the Army by paying them $30 a month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly not; and I was about to explain why. The Government could not get them for even $50 or $60 a month.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Government get men to accept the positions in which the salary has been increased for the salary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir; not for the salary alone. A man goes into the Army, in the first place, because that kind of life attracts him; it is a healthy and largely an out-of-door life. He regards it as a manly kind of occupation; it appeals to him. He has what might be called the soldierly instinct; perhaps he has the spirit of adventure. He feels that, perhaps, at some time or other during his enlistment he will encounter some adventure in connection with service in the Army, which will be attractive to him. That accounts very largely for the fact that the Marine Corps is always at war strength. Why? Not because the Marines are paid more than are the soldiers in the Army, for they are paid exactly the same, but the men who enlist in the Marines are of an adventurous nature, who seem to figure out that there is a chance that they may get into a little scrap somewhere, whether it be a little revolution in Central America, or a Boxer rebellion in China, or whatever it is, or may see something of the world. That is what brings them into the service. It is not the money.

Now, what is going to keep a proper percentage of them in the Army? It is the prospect for advancement; the prospect for greater power and influence among their fellows; promotion to first-class private, paying $9 per month more pay under this bill; promotion to corporal, bringing an even larger increase in pay; promotion to sergeant; and then a settled, secure, honorable status in the Army until they are 64 years old. That is what brings men into the Army and keeps them in the Army.

The trouble has been, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, not that the pay of the private has been too low, but that the pay of the noncommissioned officer has been too low. That pay being too low, there is no inducement or but little inducement for a man to enlist in the Army as a private, because there is no outlook, no prospect for his reaching a good scale of pay and a good status in the service.

It would not make any appreciable difference in our recruiting figures if we should raise the $30 pay for the private by 20 per cent, as is done for corporals and sergeants and sergeants major; it will not bring any more men into the service. Twenty per cent of $30 is $6. If we make the pay of the private $36 instead of $30 a month, I venture to say it would not bring in a total of 500 men in addition to what we now get under the $30 pay. It is what he is going to get after he has been in the service, so that if he gets a square deal and likes the life and reaches the grade of noncommissioned officer, where he can afford to marry and support a family in decency and comfort, then he is happy in the Army. Those are the kind of men we must keep in the Army, for they are the backbone of the Army. So there is nothing unjust about the matter.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand the provisions of the bill, the increases are not for the purpose of inducing officers to come into the Army. Ordinarily the commissioned officer enters the Army as a cadet, and the object of the bill is to prevent the exodus of officers from the Army after we have educated and prepared them for the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one of the principal reasons.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am going to support this bill. I would be better satisfied with it if it provided for some increase in the pay of the privates. In that respect I sympathize largely with the position taken by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I hope that subject may be taken up later; but if such an increase is not to be granted now, that is no reason why we should be unjust to the officers of the Army.

I rose for the purpose of reading into the RECORD a portion of a letter which was written to one of the Representatives in Congress from my State. I know the young man who wrote the letter; he is one of the young officers of whom Ohio is very proud. What he says corroborates the splendid statement made by the chairman of the committee in support of the bill. The letter is a very interesting one and in part is as follows:

I am a Regular soldier and very proud of it, a graduate of West Point; served overseas considerably more than two years; won the distinguished-service medal at the age of 24; but I am also a farm owner and taxpayer from your district. * * * I request your favorable consideration of an increase in pay for Army officers. As you know, the pay has not been increased since 1907, but we are required by law to live as we did then, in a manner "becoming an officer and a gentleman"; required to be well dressed, yet a poorer uniform than I bought in 1916 for $48 cost me $126.30 a few months ago. I have not purchased any new shoes or boots since October, 1917, and do not see how I can before February, at the earliest. I have lived in camps or in the field since my graduation. * * * I am a captain and a bachelor, because I can not afford to get married. Were I to get married it would simply mean bringing myself and the girl to downright poverty. How junior married officers live is more than I can see. Many can not and are being driven out of the service, for which they spent the beginning years in training, believing that the Government would at least give them a fair chance to serve it. I would resign myself were it not for the fact that I love the service, ask only a chance to go on serving, and can not believe that the rich and generous United States, that extends charity to all the world, even its late enemies, is going to abandon its faithful service.

The returned soldier is rewarded when he is discharged, but the Regular that sticks is punished. My pay overseas was $302.50 a month; my reward upon my return was demotion and a loss of $82.50 a month. I do not care about the rank—I serve where I am placed—and I would not care about the pay were it not a downright hardship.

Over 2,000 Regular Army officers have resigned since the armistice—a fourth of us forced to go out in the world and start anew, with the handicap of years lost in service. That means, too, that they are the bravest and youngest of us. What is the Army going to do when they should have been our leaders? The reason that more of us have not gone is, the situation is unbelievable to the rest of us; but every day more and more are becoming discouraged, losing faith, and leaving behind them our sacred old motto, "Duty, honor, country."

Help to hurry this thing up before more say—to themselves—"Country will not care for me; why should I serve country?"

I know that is shocking, but so is seeing the demoralization of your true and loyal friends, and the terrible lowering of efficiency of the whole Army, our loyal old Army, that has obeyed your commands without asking the why of it since the time of Washington. Is it possible that men can be so selfish that Members of Congress play politics for self-advancement while they ruin what little protection the whole Nation has? Is it keeping their trust with the people? Why has Congress never tried to really understand the Army? Why are we applauded in time of war and damned again before we have returned from it? Why are we heroes when the enemy is in front of us, and scheming plotters, seeking self-advantage, when we try to improve ourselves so that the enemy will not come so near beating us the next time, and so that the next time you will be safer and have fewer sacrifices? Why accuse the Army of everything mean under the sun, when it is well known that your own order is behind us not to speak even in our own defense, and you know we will obey you?

Mr. President, I will not read any more of the letter. I have been long persuaded from the information that I have had that it was necessary for Congress to do something for the Army, and I would extend the scope of this relief to the private.

I realize that I am not in a position to speak authoritatively on that subject, because I am not a member of that committee, and have not had an opportunity to study the subject; but we love to think that every branch of the service, whether it is the military, the naval, the marine, or the civil service, attracts to it the best of the young men of the country, and, in the case of the civil service, the best of the young women of the country; but we can not attract this kind of talent if we are always going to be niggardly and pay to them less compensation than they can go out into private life and get in private employment. I do not think it is anything to the credit of the country to realize that many of these men have to go about almost threadbare in their apparel; and this applies to the civil service as well. I am sure the public does not expect the Congress to deal in a niggardly manner with its servants.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may we complete the committee amendments first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the pending amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "increases," it is proposed to strike out "50 per cent" and insert "20 per cent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time to discuss this matter, because I am considerably in the position of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. Not being a member of the committee, and not having had an opportunity to go into the details, it would be useless for me to undertake to discuss it. I only rise to say that the letter that the Senator from Ohio has read is a much better argument for the position which I assume in regard to this matter than anything I could say. There is not a line nor a phrase in it of argumentative force that does not apply to doing justice to the privates equally with the officers. I suspect that one of the reasons why the matter is not taken up is because necessarily we have to stop somewhere and consider the Treasury, and it is thought that we can do this by piecemeal, and perhaps later take care of the privates. My only fear is that it will not be done at all; that after the bill as it is now proposed is passed, interest in the privates will cease.

I repeat, of course, without any imputation upon the sense of equity and justice of the committee, that to my mind the bill is unfair and discriminatory in undertaking to take care of the official life, as it were, of the Army, without giving any consideration at all to the interests of the privates.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and to insert in lieu thereof "thirty," so that, if amended, it will read:

Thirty per cent: Provided, That such increase—

And so forth.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am only going to make a few remarks in regard to this amendment.

It developed in the address made to the Senate in regard to this bill by the distinguished chairman that the bill carries an increase of 31 per cent to the officers. It is also very apparent upon the face of the bill that it carries an increase of only 20 per cent to a certain part of the body of the privates, not even to all the privates. Unless a private is in class 1 he does not participate in any increase whatever under the provisions of this bill.

I submit, Mr. President, that if the conditions in this country justify any increase of the officers' salaries upon a basis of 31 per cent—and that is what it amounts to when you figure the 10 per cent flat increase and the ration allowance which is also provided—the same conditions that surround the officers and the same elements of justice that surround them also surround the private soldiers, and for my life I can not draw any distinction between the merits of the two cases.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What is the effect of the amendment? I did not catch it as it was read. What does it do?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The effect of the amendment is to allow the privates an increase based upon 30 per cent instead of 20, as provided in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the amendment does nothing of the sort, if the Senator will permit me. It amends the bill by striking out the words "20 per cent" and inserting the words "30 per cent." The privates of the Army are not affected by this bill at all. The privates of the first class are, and all other enlisted men. The Senator's amendment would not apply to privates as drawn and presented.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I stated in my argument in regard to the matter that there was no increase provided for a certain class of the privates; that they had to be in the first class before they were even entitled to the benefits of the increase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true; but does the Senator's amendment affect that?

Mr. TRAMMELL. My amendment would effect an increase of 30 per cent, rather than 20 per cent, as provided by the bill, to the class of privates that are within the purview of the bill at present. Then I think the other privates ought also to be put in a class where they would receive a certain increase of compensation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I notice that after the amendment which the Senator has proposed there is a Senate amendment which reads as follows:

Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

Suppose that Senate amendment were eliminated. Then the text would read in the particular we are now discussing:

And the pay of all enlisted men and of members of the Female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 30 per cent.

If that were the final text, would not that increase apply to all privates under the phraseology of the bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is true; and of course if I succeeded in getting my amendment adopted, I would then offer a further amendment to strike out the proviso, and that would entitle all of the privates, both of the first class and those below the first class, to the increase.

Mr. POMERENE. That was the thought I had in mind when I rose to make the suggestion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to understand: If the amendment of the Senator from Florida is adopted, and then the clause which the Senator from Ohio has read is stricken out, the bill will cover all privates?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is my understanding of it, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. That was my understanding.

Mr. TRAMMELL. And that would put the privates on an equality with the officers as far as the percentage of increase of salary is concerned, and in all fairness and justice I am unable to see why we should not give them the same percentage of increase that we give the officers.

I have a great deal of appreciation and esteem for the officers who command our Army and who command our Navy, but on account of that esteem and appreciation for them I have no less esteem for the privates who constitute the Navy and constitute the Army. The officers are essential and the privates or enlisted personnel are essential. Take the condition during the recent war: What would have happened if we had had a war carried on only by officers? Instead of our having had a great and glorious victory, our Nation and our allied nations would have gone down in hopeless defeat. So I submit that in justice you must consider the enlisted personnel as well as you consider the officers when you come to dealing with the question of maintaining your Army and when you come to consider the question of morale.

Senators talk about some officers having resigned from the Army. They will keep on doing that, regardless of the salary. There are doubtless some officers who could make more in private industry, and there are a good many more who are enjoying better salaries than they could secure if they went out into the fields of private endeavor. I know quite a good many officers personally. I know of some of them who made some sacrifice in serving their country at the salaries they were getting during the recent war; but, on the other hand, I know of quite a few of them who enjoyed emoluments to the extent of $500 or $1,000, or maybe $1,500, per annum more than they were getting in the private employment in which they were engaged prior to connecting themselves with the Army.

If you are going to argue that they might command greater emoluments in the private walks of life, can you not with equal merit and with equal justice and logic also argue that a great many of the privates can command more in private industries?

It is true that the demands and the necessities of the officers are greater, and I recognize that fact; but when you make an increase based upon a stated percentage of the salary of the officer and the private you necessarily, as far as the number of dollars is concerned, give a great deal more and a much larger sum to the officer. Therefore you are contributing more, even upon the same percentage of increase, to meet the necessities and the requirements of the officer.

Take a major, for instance: At the present time, with his commutation and his salary, he draws from the Government, we will say, approximately $3,800 or $3,900, does he not? I will ask the chairman of the committee whether I am correct in that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It depends upon how long he has been in the service. His base pay is $3,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. His base pay is $3,000. I will say that a major under the present law draws in compensation and for his commutation, lights, and so forth, approximately $3,800. Now, I am not arguing that he should not have some increase; but what does the average man over this country, who is paying the fiddler, think when you tell him that in the case of an officer who is drawing $3,800 or $4,000 per annum you have to increase his salary to the extent of 31 per cent in order that he may meet the necessities of his situation, which would be approximately $1,200 increase, and in the next breath you tell him that the private who is drawing $30 a month is getting sufficient because he happens to get a place to sleep and his meals, and that he should not have an increase of $9 per month; that you would give him no increase whatever?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I am in sympathy with the proposition that the pay of the private should be increased; but, at the same time, we must be entirely fair about this. The private has his keep, whether it is at a high cost or at a low cost. This only applies to cash pay.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I realize that. I said they would say that he should not have an increase because he was getting a place to sleep, getting shelter, and was being provided with food and raiment, and offered that as an excuse why a private should not have an increase of $6 per month; and yet an officer, who was already drawing his salary of $4,000 per annum, should have an increase of $100 per month, speaking in round figures.

Mr. President, I can not quite discern between the two, why officers should enjoy a 31 per cent increase and the others should enjoy no increase, or that a certain class of the privates should enjoy an increase of only 20 per cent and about half of all of them should not be given any increase whatever. Those omitted are those who receive the smallest salary at present.

Mr. President, I do not feel that we have been dealing quite fairly with the rank and file of the American Army and Navy. Ever since the termination of the war we have been called upon to legislate, and there has been a disposition to legislate, in favor of increasing the salaries of officers, in favor of providing certain special recognition to certain officers on account of the service that they rendered during the war, and a deaf ear, almost, has been turned to the rank and file of the American Army and Navy in the matter of paying a Nation's tribute to them for their valor, for their courage, and for their sacrifices during that terrible conflict which tested the manhood of the Nation.

I submit, Mr. President, that our officers performed a commendable service, that they reflected credit upon themselves, upon the American Army, upon the American Navy, and upon their Nation, and that they are entitled to some recognition. But I also assert, Mr. President, that the private soldier and the officers of lower rank, such as lieutenants and captains, and occasionally a major, who led the charges from the trenches and won victory against a foe which had seemed almost unconquerable and invincible until the time America entered the war, are, too, entitled to a meed of praise and a token of the Nation's gratitude greater than we have given to them.

The average officer does not undergo the hardships that the private undergoes. He lives under more congenial and pleasant surroundings. He has more comfortable quarters. He enjoys a far greater salary, and yet the great rank and file of the Army, who endured the greater hardships, who met the enemy face to face, many of whom sacrificed their lives in defense of their country, are to be passed along until some more convenient season. We say to them, "At some more convenient season we will consider your case." That is no reflection upon the officers. I have no reflection to make upon the officers.

I was astounded and I was chagrined and made to feel ashamed for my country when it developed in a hearing before a meeting of a subcommittee of the Naval Affairs Committee recently that the different commanding officers, in selecting men to be recommended for the Navy cross and the distinguished service medal, overlooked the fact that out of the great number of men in the Navy who were so unfortunate as to not be officers only a very few had been recommended for any kind of special decorations. The excuse was that when the request came for recommending men for special decorations they did not have the records of the enlisted men. I then developed information that they did not have the records of the officers. But those commanding officers, with a great deal of diligence, soon procured the records of the officers, and as a result a very large majority of them were recommended for some special decoration in one form or another. But I say, Mr. President, that the poor enlisted man, who endured the hardships, who served his country for the pittance of $30 or $33 a month, was passed over, was forgotten, and he had no friend at court.

I can not bring myself to such a frame of mind, Mr. President, as to feel that it is quite just that we shall keep on and keep on enacting legislation in favor of the more fortunate of our Army, neglecting the interests and the proper consideration, as I see it, of the less fortunate.

Therefore I offer this amendment, and I feel, Mr. President, that justice, the interests of our country, and fair play demand that the amendment be adopted, and that it can not be said, and again said, that the United States Senate practically ignored the great rank and file of the American Army and Navy, and that the Senators wear glasses that could only see the officers. I want all of them to be justly dealt with.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Can the Senator, or some member of the Military Affairs Committee, inform us just what class of enlisted men in the Army and Navy, if any, are given any increase under this bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not sure that, with the peculiar wording, any of them get an increase. If a person reads the bill and does not do a little thinking, he is rather impressed that the enlisted man has been given a 20 per cent increase. But if he reads it closely and dissects it he finds that that is what you would call a little "moonshine," or a little shadow, and that it means nothing so far as doing anything in behalf of the great majority of the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the Senator if, in his experience in business houses and manufacturing establishments, when they undertake to raise salaries it is not a fact that they usually do not confine the raises to the officials, but raise the individual employees as well as the officers?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is true, Mr. President; and the Congress of the United States has gone on record in that matter in dealing with clerks' salaries. Congress passed a measure providing for a bonus of $240 per annum to the clerical forces of the Government in various departments, but the limitation placed upon it was that the $240 should not be paid to persons receiving a salary of more than $2,500 per annum. Congress has gone on record as considering that those who are not so fortunate as to draw the larger salaries are more entitled to an increase of pay than those who occupy the more fortunate positions and draw the larger salaries.

Of course, some officers might leave the service, as has been stated. But, Mr. President, they are having great difficulty in building up the Army, as far as enlisted men are concerned. I have noticed in my own State within the last few days that they were having meetings for the purpose of trying to encourage the boys of those communities to join the Army. The mayor of Tampa, Fla., one of the large cities of my State, made an address at a meeting held especially for the purpose of encouraging the boys to join the Army. Mr. President, do you think or does any other Senator think that when the report goes out through the press of this Nation that the United States has provided an increase of 31 per cent for all of the officers and has not provided an increase for a very large part of the enlisted personnel of the Army, and this is only 20 per cent, that will be very encouraging news toward getting enlisted men into the Army of this country?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield further to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I believe the Senator from Florida is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate. Am I correct?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to know whether he or any members of his committee had anything to do with the drafting of this bill, which purports to increase the salaries of naval officers as well as Army officers?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I can speak for myself only, as one member of the committee. I knew nothing whatever of it, as far as I myself am concerned, and I know that it was not before the committee for consideration. Whether the individual membership of the committee, different ones, had any knowledge of it I do not know; but it was not given any consideration before the Naval Affairs Committee; and as far as I myself am concerned I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that if it had been before the committee I would have recorded at least one vote against it in its present form.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So we have before us a bill to increase the pay of Navy and Army officers which has never been referred to, deliberated upon, nor considered by the committee in this Chamber having charge of our naval affairs.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that statement is correct. I have attended the meetings, and no longer ago than this morning this question was up; but it has not been officially considered by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. As a matter of fact, the Senator knows that the Senate Naval Affairs Committee was considering this morning the House bill on this subject, which was introduced in the House by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that is correct; and a further consideration of it was deferred only for the reason that Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, was absent and asked that it be carried over until he could attend the committee meeting. He was detained on other business this morning.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, as is the Senator from Florida. I heard the explanation offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] as to why this bill is rather an omnibus measure, and it seemed to me that it was a very appealing and a very strong reason.

I can readily understand that if the Military Affairs Committee, the Naval Affairs Committee, the committee that has charge of the public health, and some other committee were considering increases in salary and compensation of persons where there is a sort of relation in the character of the service rendered there might be disparities and discrepancies that would lead to heartburnings and to discriminations that would be unfair. It seems to me, therefore, that one committee ought to originate this legislation. But if I had had my way, it would have been a joint committee, representing each of the committees of the Senate that have to deal with those subjects. But the matter having been considered by the Military Affairs Committee, and a bill having been produced which, upon its face at least, seems to be fair, does the Senator think there ought to be a recommitment, or that this bill ought to be defeated because the Naval Affairs Committee did not have anything to do with it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I made no suggestion of that kind; I had made no reference to that fact and I had not made a motion that it be recommitted. We are guilty of what I consider discrimination in the bill in providing an increase of 31 per cent to officers and only an increase of 20 per cent to a small part of the privates of the Army and Navy, and leaving entirely aloof without any increase whatever a large number of privates of the Army and Navy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator from Florida to say that this very morning the Committee on Naval Affairs was considering legislation to increase the pay of naval officers, and yet this afternoon in the Senate Chamber we are discussing a bill which was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs actually increasing the pay of naval officers. Am I correct?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator will agree that there is enough business here for Senators to do without wasting their time at cross purposes on legislation which different committees have under consideration and which one committee has handled.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think it would have been better for it to have been considered by a joint committee composed of the membership of the two committees, the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think that would have been better, but of course I did not rise to launch any fight upon that particular feature.

I rose to call to the attention of the Senate what I consider to be a discrimination against the privates, or you might say the rank and file, of the Army and Navy, and to appeal for justice not only for the officers, many of whom enjoy splendid salaries at the present time and live in more or less comfort and affluence, but also for the rank and file of the American Army and Navy.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gronna	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Calder	Harrison	New	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Overman	Townsend
Colt	King	Page	Trammell
Dial	Kirby	Phelan	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lodge	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HALE, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SPENCER answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCNARY] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. BALL, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is necessarily absent on account of the illness of his wife. During that absence I have agreed to take care of him by pair, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. BALL (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I find he has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], which I transfer to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]. I note that he is not in the Chamber, therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WATSON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Borah	McKellar	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Dial	McNary	Poindexter	Stanley
Gerry	Norris	Pomerene	Sterling
Gronna	Nugent	Ransdell	Townsend
Harrison	Overman	Robinson	Trammell
Kenyon	Phelan	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.

NAYS—26.

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Wadsworth
Brandegee	Hale	New	Walsh, Mont.
Calder	Harris	Page	Warren
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Sherman	Watson
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Colt	Kirby	Spencer
Curtis	Lodge	Sutherland

NOT VOTING—45.

Ashurst	Gay	La Follette	Shields
Bankhead	Gore	Lenroot	Simmons
Beckham	Harding	McCormick	Smith, Ariz.
Culberson	Henderson	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Cummins	Hitchcock	McLean	Smoot
Dillingham	Johnson, Calif.	Moses	Swanson
Edge	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Thomas
Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Underwood
Fall	Kendrick	Owen	Wolcott
Fernald	Keyes	Penrose
Fletcher	King	Phipps
France	Knox	Reed

So Mr. TRAMMELL's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "10" and to insert "2."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment is to cut down the increase contemplated for the officers to where they will be drawing an increase of about 23 per cent as against the 20 per cent that is allowed to the enlisted men. The Senate has gone on record in opposition to raising the percentage of increase to privates and enlisted personnel to the percentage provided in the bill for officers. Therefore I desire to test the sentiment of the Senate on the question whether it is desired to cut the officers' increase down to where it will be at least close to the percentage allowed to the enlisted men.

The enlisted men—that is, those that come within the purview of the bill at all—are only allowed 20 per cent. The chairman of the committee stated that the flat increase of 10 per cent and the extra-ration allowance provided in this bill for officers made a total percentage of increase of a fraction less than 31 per cent for the officers. Even those enlisted men who will enjoy the benefits of this bill—and I submit that the proviso is so worded that a great many of them will be excluded from its benefits—will only be allowed a 20 per cent increase.

I first sought to equalize the matter by raising the percentage of the increase of the enlisted men to the percentage of the increase given to the officers; but the Senate, by a vote of 26 to 24, in its wisdom has decided that it does not want to increase the percentage of the salary increase to the enlisted men to a point where it will be equal to that provided for the officers. Therefore I desire now to offer this amendment, and to ascertain whether the Senate is willing, as I see it, to do justice by the enlisted men by bringing the increase proposed for the officers down to a point where it will be only 3 per cent more than that provided for the enlisted men, instead of leaving it approximately 11 per cent more than that given to the enlisted men.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator in his argument does not give us the information that the private soldier has had his pay doubled since there has been any increase made for the officers.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not think the fact that the private soldier might have had his pay increased and the officer did not has any bearing upon the merits of the case. The reason given for increasing the salary of the officer at the present time is that in justice he is entitled to it; that he needs it in order that he may provide the necessities of life. I submit that the private and the enlisted man of this country is living under the same conditions, in the same atmosphere, as far as the value of a dollar is concerned, and has the same proportionate increased demands that the officer has. I think that is an answer to that statement.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator must, in comparison, admit first that the private soldier's pay has been doubled during the war, and, furthermore, that he has received, if on the other side, 20 per cent in addition to that, where the officer has not had any increase whatever, and gets only 10 per cent increase when he is abroad. Again, so far as the living of the private soldier is concerned, it is all furnished by the Government, except his tobacco; so that the rise in the cost of living has been on the part of the Government and has not operated against the men.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, it is the same old story of penalizing the man who has been penalized heretofore, and continuing to deprive him of justice and his rights, as I see it. The mere fact that the private soldiers and the men of the Navy in years gone by were only given a little pittance of $13 and something per month and have had that increased, I say, has no bearing upon the merits of the question at this time. The same logic, the same reasons that you use as to why an officer's salary should be increased, apply with like effect to the private.

If it is a financial problem, if it is a problem of justice, if it is a problem of equalizing the remuneration of a man who is in the Government service with that of people in private industries, then, I say, with like effect and with equal justice you may apply to the enlisted men the same reasons and the same logic that you base your contention upon in behalf of the officers.

I want to reiterate that I appreciate the officers, I appreciate their loyalty and their patriotism and the great work that they did during the recent war. That is not the question. The question is that we are dealing with the American Army and the American Navy; and I submit that this great force of men comprising the Army and the Navy, who, in my opinion—and I do not mean any reflection by the statement—had no representative at court when this bill was prepared, should now be considered and given justice. I would not take from the officer his honor, his credit, nor justice for him; but I think we should deal with equal justice toward the privates, and I reassert that I can not recognize this line of demarcation that is, you might say, the twilight zone, that enables members of the committee to say that an officer should have his salary increased approximately 31 per cent, but that only a small part of the ranks of the Army and of the Navy should have an increase of just 20 per cent. That is the reason why I have offered these amendments, and hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just a few sentences.

In view of what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] remarked a moment ago, I thought it might be of interest to the Senate for me to say that in drafting this pay bill the committee, of course, had not the slightest intention of discriminating against the enlisted men, whether they be of the grade of private, or private first class, or any of the other enlisted grades, nor of extending to commissioned officers any help over and above that which they need. We simply knew that the pay of the Army as a whole had been last fixed in 1908, that the pay of a portion of the Army had been changed since that period, and in drafting this bill we thought we would make an effort to make the percentage of increases given to all the different grades of the Army, from private up to general, conform somewhat to a definite scheme of progress.

As illustrating that, let me say that if you take the last Army pay schedules which were made for the Army as a whole in 1908, and then take this bill and figure out the percentages of increase given to the officers and men in the several grades, you will find, particularly in relation to the enlisted grades, the following results: That, as compared with the pay of 1908, the pay of the private soldier under this bill will be increased 100 per cent; the pay of the private first class will be increased 120 per cent; the pay of the corporal will be increased 105 per cent; the pay of the staff corporal will be increased 80 per cent; the pay of the line sergeant will be increased 52 per cent; the pay of the staff sergeant will be increased 46 per cent plus; the pay of the battalion sergeant major will be increased 44 per cent. All of these increases are far above the increases received by the officers in the same period of time, which in the aggregate can not exceed 31 per cent.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How do these increases compare with the salaries fixed in the bill providing for the permanent Military Establishment? Do they provide the same rate of pay for these officers that is provided in that bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not quite.

Mr. KIRBY. I was just trying to find out what the necessity was for two bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Army reorganization bill, as will be developed later on, groups several grades into one group, and reduces the number of noncommissioned and enlisted grades of the Army from 49 to 9, but makes no considerable change in the pay of the men who will occupy those new grades; so the discrimination against the enlisted men is not apparent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend, page 1, in line 10, by striking out the words:

Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment will be to allow the enlisted men to draw the 20 per cent which is provided by the committee without having a very large number of them excluded by the proviso. Unless we adopt this amendment striking out the proviso, a very large percentage of them will be excluded from participating in the increase even of 20 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair advise the Senator from Florida that the same conclusion would be reached by voting down the committee amendment in lines 9 and 10.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think so, Mr. President, because the committee amendment strikes out the "50 per cent" that was in the bill as introduced and inserts "20 per cent," so I think we had better have a vote on the amendment as I have offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is the amendment on lines 9 and 10 of the first page and the first and second lines of the second page divisible, so as to vote first on the 20 per cent?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, my amendment only applies to the proviso. It provides that that shall be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the amendment could be divided.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is no reason to divide it, I think. The Senator, I think, was laboring under a misapprehension. He thought it also referred to the percentage, but it does not refer to the percentage.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York inform us what percentage of the enlisted men will receive a 20 per cent increase in case the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. All of them.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator tell us what percentage of the enlisted men are given an increase under the language of the bill as reported by the committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can tell the Senator the percentage, so far as it affects the Army. I can not so far as it affects the Navy. The privates in the Army comprise approximately 48 to 49 per cent of the enlisted strength. They would not receive an increase under this bill. The privates, first class, would receive an increase, and all the other grades from that up

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So that, to put it in another way, the increase would affect 51 per cent of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About 52 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And that includes all commissioned officers and privates of the first class?

Mr. WADSWORTH. All noncommissioned officers and privates of the first class.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. I notice that the Senator from New York introduced this bill on November 3, and it was reported out on December 8. When the Senator introduced it the bill provided that the increase in the pay of the enlisted man should be 50 per cent. That is stricken out by the committee and 20 per cent inserted. May I ask the Senator whether there was quite a division of the committee on that proposition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President, I do not recollect that there was any marked division. The committee was moved by two considerations, as I recollect it, in reducing the 50 per cent increase to a 20 per cent increase. One of the considerations was that the pay of the privates, privates of the first class, and corporals in the Army had been increased since the last Army readjustment and pay bill had been passed by over 100 per cent, and that it would not be necessary to increase them another 50 per cent in addition.

The second consideration was that the Treasury of the United States has a limit in its resources, and that we could not afford to raise the pay of all the enlisted men of the Army by 50 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. Some of us on this side have a very high respect for the Senator's judgment in this matter, and seeing that he was of the opinion on November 3 that it should be increased 50 per cent and that this change was made by the committee on December 8, may I ask the Senator whether the committee convinced him that he was wrong in thinking that it should be 50 per cent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very frankly, yes; I think I was wrong, after having seen what the increase would amount to and the recruiting figures. The Senator must remember that the amendment applies to the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand. I was just curious to know whether the Senator was convinced that he was wrong.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We went into the matter at great length with a number of officers and enlisted men. We had enlisted men before us, very interesting men, who had served for a long time in the Army and Navy, and asked them about it. They talked to us in a very straight and very manly, square way. The emphasis was placed on the necessity of helping those persons in the Army who are married, not the persons in the Army who are bachelors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GRONNA. May the amendment to the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, strike out the proviso beginning on line 10, after the words "per centum," in the proposed amendment of the committee. The proviso reads:

Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement previously made with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair from the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent on account of the illness of his wife and I promised to take care of him during his absence. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Dial	Kenyon	Ransdell	Sterling
Gerry	McKellar	Reed	Townsend
Gronna	McNary	Robinson	Trammell
Harris	Nugent	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison	Overman	Simmons
Hitchcock	Poindexter	Smith, Ga.
Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.

NAYS—25.

Brandegee	Hale	Nelson	Walsh, Mont.
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Warren
Capper	Kellogg	Page	Watson
Chamberlain	King	Phelan	Wolcott
Cummins	Kirby	Spencer
Curtis	Lodge	Sutherland
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—45.

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lenroot	Shields
Ball	France	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gay	McLean	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Gore	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Harding	Myers	Stanley
Colt	Henderson	Newberry	Swanson
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Thomas
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Underwood
Edge	Kendrick	Penrose	Williams
Elkins	Keyes	Phipps
Fall	Knox	Pittman
Fernald	La Follette	Sherman

So Mr. TRAMMELL's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to reserve the right when the bill gets into the Senate to have a vote on the first amendment which I offered, and also on the amendment just voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments may be offered then. It is not necessary to reserve the right to offer the amendments in the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The vote just taken having been a tie, I desire to have a recapitulation of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be recapitulated.

The Assistant Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator from Nevada was not in the Chamber at the time the result of the vote was announced. Can we open up the roll call again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator has no right now to vote.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed to a new roll call on the amendment to the amendment. I think that is only fair. I think the Senate of the United States ought to have a right to say how it wants to vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like very much to know what my privileges are. I understood that the Secretary was tabulating the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a recapitulation. The vote had already been announced.

Mr. GRONNA. I renew my request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that there be a new roll call.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. WARREN. I understand objection has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from New York if he intends to finish the bill to-day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is up to the Senate. I should like——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows whether he has it in his mind to finish it to-day. As he knows, there is some injustice in the bill with reference to the noncommissioned officers, and I am quite sure the Senator will agree with me that it ought to be remedied. I am not in a position now to draw the proper amendment, because, as the Senator has suggested, it must be very carefully drawn. In all justice to those men, it seems to me the amendments ought to be prepared and at least we ought to have an opportunity to vote on them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in sympathy with what the Senator from North Dakota desires to bring about with respect to quarters for noncommissioned officers. It is very difficult at this moment to say whether I can support such an amendment until I know the final action of the Senate on the amendments which will be offered again in the Senate by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator from Florida succeeds to-morrow in increasing the pay of all the enlisted men 30 per cent, I think then the amendment suggested by the Senator from North Dakota is not necessary. If the Senator from Florida does not succeed in that, I will join with the Senator from North Dakota in endeavoring to provide quarters under the bill for the men whom he and I have discussed.

Mr. GRONNA. I was quite sure the Senator from New York was in sympathy with my suggestion. It is after 4 o'clock now——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let us finish the committee amendments.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be very glad to finish the committee amendments, but I suggest to the Senator from New York that after they have been disposed of we should adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. LODGE. There is one other amendment with regard to the district superintendents of the Coast Guard, which I think can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May we proceed with the committee amendments first? They will only take a moment, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee amendment pending is on page 1, line 9, where it is proposed to strike out "50 per cent" and insert:

Twenty per cent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that question divisible?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not divisible.

Mr. HARRISON. Can we not vote first on the question of striking out "50 per cent" and inserting "20 per cent" and then vote on the proviso?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not divisible under Rule XVIII. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not a sufficient number.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the other side be counted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Nugent	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	Overman	Stanley
Capper	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Phelan	Trammell
Cummins	Kenyon	Pittman	Wadsworth
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Kirby	Robinson	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Williams
Gerry	McCormick	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Hale	New	Smoot

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 28, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we seek Thy holy influence that we may be guided in the duties of the hour. If haply we may feel after Thee, and find Thee, though Thou be not far from every one of us: for in Thee we live, and move, and have our being.

In the midst of peace we are in war, since we are a twofold being, physical and spiritual. We need the incarnation of Thy spirit that we may beat down the animal and rise to the spiritual and thus meet the obligations of life; and so rise to the better part, living for the things that are eternal and thus gain an eternal crown. After the similitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. SEARS, for 10 days, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. THOMPSON (at the request of Mr. RICKETTS), indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency appropriation bill. And pending that motion I desire to see if we can not agree on time for general debate.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GOOD. I have urgent requests for time on this side aggregating two hours and a half. I think it will take 30 minutes to explain the bill, which will make three hours' time asked for on this side.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then I suppose the same time will be taken for this side. I would be perfectly willing to agree on a less time.

Mr. GOOD. I have tried hard to hold down the requests to less time than that, but I do not think we can get along with much less.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are these three hours to be devoted to the bill or will we have a political harangue?

Mr. GOOD. Thirty minutes will be devoted to the bill. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has prepared a speech on another subject, and I think there are one or two speeches on other subjects on that side. I think the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to speak on the general subject of hospitals, which is more or less connected with the bill. I have not tried to regulate the matter as to what Members shall speak about.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Of course the gentleman and that side of the House are responsible for facilitating the business and getting through this measure. I want to inquire whether the gentleman shares the views of the majority leader in his declaration that he hopes to get away from here on the 1st of June?

Mr. GOOD. I have not given any consideration to when we shall get away. I think it is more important that we should do the work necessary to be done. If we can do the work and get away by the 1st of June, I shall be glad of it; but I do not believe we can do it. I do not know what the plans are.

Mr. GARNER. I asked the question in view of the fact that the gentleman is asking for six hours' general debate on this bill, 10 per cent of which will be devoted to the bill and 90 per cent to general debate. That does not look much like facilitating business.

Mr. GOOD. Here is a bill that carries $88,000,000. The estimates were for $134,000,000. I do not believe that six hours is an unreasonable length of time.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. I notice the bill says "appropriations for deficiencies for the year ending 1920 and prior fiscal years." How many fiscal years are we appropriating for?

Mr. GOOD. There are one or two items where there was a deficit running back to the years 1915, 1916, and 1917.

Mr. LITTLE. If we are going that far back we may need more than six hours' general debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Those matters will be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask whether there will be any rule brought in making in order any possible sums or amounts that may be in this bill that are now unauthorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. I hope no such contingency will arise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that no quorum is present, and evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify absentees. The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Davey	Graham, Pa.	Madden
Andrews, Md.	Dooling	Graham, Ill.	Mansfield
Ashbrook	Doughton	Hamill	Martin
Bacharach	Dunbar	Hamilton	Mason
Benham	Dunn	Haugen	Moon
Booher	Eagan	Hayden	Moore, Ohio
Britten	Eagle	Houghton	Morin
Burke	Edmonds	Howard	Mudd
Candler	Elliott	Jefferis	Neely
Caraway	Elston	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nicholls, S. C.
Carew	Emerson	Johnston, N. Y.	Nolan
Carss	Ferris	Kahn	O'Connell
Casey	Fields	Kelley, Mich.	Osborne
Christopherson	Focht	Kennedy, Iowa	Parker
Clark, Fla.	Fordney	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter
Cooper	Foster	Knutson	Reavis
Copley	Fuller, Mass.	Larsen	Reed, N. Y.
Costello	Godwin, N. C.	Longworth	Reed, W. Va.
Cramton	Goldfogle	McCulloch	Rowan
Crowther	Goodall	McKinley	Rowe
Curry, Calif.	Gould	McPherson	Sabath

Sanders, La.	Sells	Stoll	Watkins
Sanders, N. Y.	Sinclair	Sullivan	Whaley
Sanford	Small	Temple	Winslow
Schall	Smith, N. Y.	Thompson	Woodyard
Scott	Snell	Volstead
Scully	Snyder	Ward
Sears	Stephens, Miss.	Wason

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and nineteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending consideration of the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the second deficiency bill, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to six hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the remainder by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill be limited to six hours, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from South Carolina proceed? [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of the speech made by Admiral William S. Sims on the south steps of the Treasury April 21, 1919. This copy is marked "Released for morning papers April 22, 1919."

Admiral Sims is a modest man. He knew, however, that his appearance upon the steps of the Treasury would excite the applause of the audience, and, therefore, in preparing his speech he wrote:

> I should like first to be sure that you understand that the tribute of your applause to me is not taken by me to be personal.

The admiral having thus applauded himself, proceeded to write a very good speech. Among other things, he said:

> Now, usually after a great war the leaders on the different sides spend their declining years in writing books to explain that the other fellow was at fault. There will be nothing of that following this war.

Shortly after making this promise he violated it. He wrote a book. Read that book and you will clearly see that the admiral has convinced himself that he, and he alone, won the war. But, while this book was gratifying to his vanity and the remuneration was satisfying to his pocketbook, still it was not sensational enough to win the publicity for which he ever yearns. He therefore determined to spend his declining years writing letters explaining that his superior officers were all at fault, and that he had to win the war in spite of them. Now, in April, 1919, he greatly deplored criticisms made by returning soldiers. In his Treasury speech he said:

> They may have been charged 5 cents too much in a canteen, or they may have run across a Britisher or an Italian or a Frenchman that they had a row with. They come back with all sorts of small criticisms. For the Lord's sake, don't pay any attention to that, and don't pay any attention to the people in this country that are yapping at John Pershing's heels.

And all right-thinking Americans applauded his statement, because the people of America had reached the conclusion that the Army of the United States, entering the greatest war in the history of the world, had won the admiration of the people of every allied country and the respect of the people of the enemy countries.

For the Navy there was naught but praise. Out of the war it had come with flying colors. The Navy had done a good job, and Americans were proud of it. They knew, of course, that in an undertaking of such magnitude mistakes were made, but they believed them to be minor mistakes, and for the success of the Navy they gave credit to the entire Naval Establishment, from the Secretary of the Navy down to the rawest recruit.

From the enlisted men as they returned to civil life there was no criticism. They were proud of their service. But while these boys, many of whom had braved the perils of the seas and the deadly submarine, were praising the Navy and the manner in which its operations were conducted, Admiral Sims, who faced nothing more deadly than the dining tables of London, began on December 17 the greatest battle of his career—the Battle of the Medals. Protesting to the Secretary of the Navy because certain officers of his staff on shore duty were not awarded medals as recommended by him, he wrote:

> All individual duties afloat are necessarily of secondary importance in comparison with the vital importance of directing all operations, both ashore and afloat, in such manner as to insure the success of the whole.

Again, referring to the failure of the Secretary to award medals to staff officers whose duties were ashore, while awarding medals to officers who served at sea, he says:

> This seems to be due to an erroneous opinion as to the relative value of services at sea and in certain vitally important positions ashore—an opinion that duty in the latter positions must necessarily be the least distinguished.

Well, it may be an erroneous opinion, but it certainly was the opinion expressed by this same Admiral Sims in April, 1919, when he declared in his speech on the Treasury steps:

> For such success as I and my staff have had on the other side, in this guidance, I am willing to accept your gratitude, but I want to make this point very distinct, that the operations on the other side were not my operations; they were, generally speaking, the fighting of individual ships against an elusive enemy, so that our success depended upon the efficiency of those ships in the material sense and upon the efficiency and the initiative of their personnel.

Then he declared that the success of our naval expedition abroad was due not to the operation of his staff ashore, but to the initiative and efficiency of the officers at sea. Now he declares that the duties of the men at sea must always be secondary in importance to the service of those ashore who direct the operations. You know, as I read that Treasury speech, I began to doubt whether he ever wrote it. There is in it too much common sense and too much real Americanism. [Applause.]

This remarkable epistle to the Secretary of the Navy concludes with the declaration that, inasmuch as the officers recommended by him for medals were not to receive them, he declined to accept the decoration offered him. This was not surprising to me. Having had conferred upon him by the British Government the title of Grand Commander of St. Michael and St. George, no decoration of the United States Government could have any attraction for this distinguished admiral, who long since justly won the title of the "best British admiral in the American Navy." [Applause.]

Now, I know not what has inspired Admiral Sims to embark upon the policy of criticism he so greatly deplored back in April, 1919. Whether he is inspired by personal resentment against the Secretary of the Navy because the Secretary would not permit him to dictate the policies and the appointments of the Navy, or whether, since his assignment to Newport, the inhabitants of that fashionable resort who have never loved the Secretary of the Navy, by playing upon the inordinate vanity of this drawing-room admiral, have inspired his attacks, I do not know. But I do know that every right-thinking American who reads his last letter, wherein he sets forth what he styles "Lessons of the war," will agree with me that in addition to the lessons submitted by him there is another lesson to be learned by us, namely, that while the fact that a man is born under a foreign flag should not necessarily debar him from being placed in command of American naval forces, it should at least cause us to make certain that such a man is able to forget the place of his birth and give wholehearted, undivided allegiance to the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Admiral Sims was born under the British flag, and he seems unable to get over it. A newspaper correspondent has stated that the reason why Sims was selected for the service as naval representative in London was because it was believed he could "get along" with the English. Well, that certainly was a reasonable assumption. Sims can not "get along" without the English. By the fortunes of war the cause of Great Britain in this war became the cause of America, and by his appointment no great harm was done. But even as between allies there come times when our Government may want from its representative abroad the viewpoint, not of Great Britain, but of America, and there is no man familiar with Sims's record who believes he is capable of entertaining a purely American view.

The naval history of this Government will fail to disclose anything comparable with the contemptible insubordination shown by Admiral Sims in his recent letter to the Secretary of the Navy. [Applause.] Declaring that he was writing for the purpose of setting forth errors which would serve as a guide in the future, he says at the outset that he received only brief instructions as he left for Europe, but did receive the specific admonition, "Do not let the British pull the wool over your eyes. It is none of our business pulling their chestnuts out of the fire. We would as soon fight the British as the Germans." Is it not remarkable that while he does not set forth any other instruction given to him that he should publish to the world the admonition he alleges that he received at the department, knowing, as he did, that its publication was liable to disrupt the friendly relations now existing between this country and Great Britain? [Applause.] What lesson does it teach other than that he can not be trusted? [Applause]

The careful reader noted that while he endeavored to create the impression that this statement was made to him by Secretary Daniels, Sims, as a matter of fact, did not say who admonished him. Secretary Daniels, in order to prevent any misunderstanding on the part of Great Britain, immediately denied emphatically that he had made to Sims any such statement. [Applause.] Admiral Sims must be made to say who gave him the admonition he alleges he received. If no one gave him such an admonition, then his statement is deliberately false. If some superior officer did so admonish him, it was a confidential instruction to a man leaving upon an official mission, and his violation of the confidence of his superior officer is an act of insubordination which will merit the condemnation of every patriotic American citizen and should cause his dishonorable discharge from the Navy. [Applause.]

Even if what he says is true, and some superior officer having in mind the fact that we were at that time not at war with Germany did admonish him as he alleges, the admonition was justified by his previous conduct. In 1910, speaking in the Guildhall, London, the love of his mother country inspired him to pledge that if she ever engaged in war she "could rely upon the last ship, the last dollar, the last man, and the last drop of blood of her kindred over the sea." He was promptly reprimanded by President Taft. His undertaking to speak for the Government of the United States and to pledge the blood of our people would be funny if it were not for the position he then held and still occupies. At the time he claims he was admonished not to let the British pull the wool over his eyes we were at peace with the world, but any admonition that carried the intimation that this country would not do what he pledged it to do in 1910 necessarily aroused his resentment.

If he now cares so little about violating the confidential instructions of his superior officers, does any man believe that he has not long since told officials of the Government of Great Britain that he received this admonition when he left for Europe? If he will tell it now, what sense of duty would prevent him from telling it during his service abroad? Is his example to be followed by officers of the Army and Navy and diplomatic representatives of this Government? Have we reached the time that while we are at peace the officers of this Government, charged with the direction of its policy, can not admonish an officer about to leave on a quasi secret mission without having their confidence thereafter published to the world? I confidently believe that in all the Army and in all the Navy there is no other officer who cares so little for the country that has honored him that he would endanger the peace of the Nation in order to gratify his personal spite.

I know that some who would like to defend this man will say that his letter was written to the Secretary of the Navy and was published only because a United States Senator called upon him to read it. But who believes this? Senator PITTMAN stated on the floor of the Senate that while he was cross-examining Admiral Sims, Senator HALE, seemingly hostile to the Secretary of the Navy, asked Senator PITTMAN to desist in order that Admiral Sims might read a letter he had. Thereupon, Senator PITTMAN says, Admiral Sims pulled out of his pocket the letter addressed to Secretary Daniels and proceeded to read it. How did he happen to have in his pocket this letter which was in no way relevant to the question of medals about which he was testifying? And how did Senator HALE know that he had it in his pocket? It bears all the earmarks of a frame-up. Did Admiral Sims say, in response to the request that he read it, that the letter contained references to confidential orders given him, the publication of which might endanger the continued peace of this Nation? No.

Outside of this indefensible effort to disturb the peace of this Nation, what is in his letter? Only a series of complaints that the Navy Department failed to conduct the war in accordance with his advice. He alleges that the Navy Department did not send him as many ships as he requested, which, of course, means as many as the British Admiralty requested, to assist in the protection of allied shipping; that the department assigned to the convoying of American troops and the protection of the coasts of this country ships that should have been sent to Great Britain, and as a result, his opinion is that victory was delayed and thousands of lives lost.

Well, I presume it is but natural for every man to believe that the service in which he was engaged was most essential to victory and to conclude that his suggestions, if adopted, would have hastened the defeat of the enemy. We recall that daily we were told that "Food will win the war," "Ships will win the war," and "Only by mastery of the air will we win the war." But while the British Admiralty and Sims were asking that all of our vessels be sent to the submarine zone to protect allied shipping, the English Army, sorely pressed in France, was urging that we send troops to them to assist in holding the onrushing Germans. And whatever Sims may think about it, Americans will rejoice that the Secretary of the Navy, while sending him as many ships as possible, retained sufficient of our war vessels to safely transport across the sea the 2,000,000 sons of America who, with their allies, smashed the Hindenburg line and brought the war to a victorious end. [Applause.] The Secretary of the Navy had to decide between protecting allied shipping and protecting American transports. Sims wanted him to protect the supplies. Daniels preferred to protect the boys.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman has stated that if Admiral Sims received a communication from an officer of the Navy Department as alleged by him, that for revealing that communication he should be dishonorably discharged from the naval service of the United States. I should like to ask the gentleman, if as a matter of fact a communication was made to him on the eve of his departure that we would just as soon fight Great Britain as fight Germany, whether in his opinion the officer of the Navy Department who made that statement should not be immediately removed from the service of the United States?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In the first place, in answer to the gentleman, Secretary Daniels has denied that he made that statement. In the second place, I said before and say now, that in view of Sims's record, in view of the statement made by him in London pledging the last dollar and the last drop of blood of our people in case Great Britain ever became engaged in war, it behooved any officer who sent him on any mission to warn him against his evident pro-British tendencies that might involve this country in war when we wished to avoid war if it was possible to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield further for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not. At the conclusion of my remarks I will yield for any question asked me, but I wish to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Sims now alleges that our failure to cooperate as he suggested embarrassed our allies, and yet in his Treasury speech he made this statement:

> Now, we are willing to admit, we Navy men who are not particularly modest, that our Navy has done a stunt on the other side to the satisfaction of the Allies with whom we cooperated.

Then we cooperated and we did a stunt to the satisfaction of our allies. Now he says that by reason of the inefficient administration of Secretary Daniels the whole job was bungled and our allies embarrassed.

In connection with that I will divert for a few moments to refer to what he said on this subject. After detailing wherein the department failed to grant him the support he asked for, especially in personnel, he produced a letter, dated December 23, 1917, reading as follows:

DECEMBER 23, 1917.

From: Vice Admiral Sims.
To: The Secretary of the Navy.

2366. Your 1732. I strongly deprecate any effort to create an impression that our naval forces in European waters have been avoidably hampered by failure of the Navy Department to comply with my recommendations for various things, particularly personnel.

It is, of course, well known that the antisubmarine campaign and the protection of allied shipping have been and still are hampered to a considerable extent by insufficient numbers of certain types of vessels, especially destroyers, and by certain classes of personnel, and I have repeatedly made recommendations in accordance with the requirements on this situation. To these recommendations the department has always responded with the assurance that reinforcements of both vessels and personnel were being sent to the maximum extent consistent with the many other requirements of the department in these respects.

The decision as to the relative importance of the employment of our naval vessels and personnel in the theater of actual war operations in European waters and at home must necessarily rest with the department, and I consider it the first duty of those at the front loyally to accept such decisions and to make the best of conditions which are at present admittedly unsatisfactory and must so remain until the energetic measures now being taken to increase our antisubmarine forces produce the necessary reinforcements.

SIMS.

Mr. WELTY. What is the date of that statement?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. December 23, 1917. That letter was written to the department, and it was written with a view of having it sent to the Congress of the United States, stating that the department was cooperating with him to the fullest extent possible at that time. [Applause.]

Since his return, when he concluded to enter upon this campaign of criticism against the Secretary of the Navy, there was nothing he could criticize the department about except its alleged failure to support him as he requested. Now, he knew that this letter rested in the files of the department and that whenever he entered upon this campaign of criticism the Secretary would produce it and thereby brand as untrue every complaint that he made.

Therefore Sims determined to anticipate its production by Daniels and produce it himself, even though it demanded that he make the humiliating confession that every statement he then wrote was untrue. Now he asks us to believe that he is telling the truth when he says that what he then said was untrue. Can you beat it? [Applause.]

Now, what explanation does Sims give of his sending this cable of alleged untruths? Whenever a man voluntarily admits that he has told an untruth, he must necessarily offer an explanation. Therefore he says he concluded from the cables of Daniels and Benson that they wanted him to state what was untrue. Let me read Secretary Daniels's cable to him. He produced it:

DECEMBER 22, 1917.

From the Secretary of the Navy to Vice Admiral Sims, London.

1732. At House committee hearing of conduct of Navy, Representative BRITTEN said: "I would like to have copy of complaints which have come from Admiral Sims on the other side." If you desire to make statement of action of department in reference to sending and supplying force under your command since war began, please send in code.

DANIELS.

Would any honorable man, reading that letter, regard it as a plea to willfully misstate the facts? Neither did the cable of Admiral Benson say or intimate that the department desired him to make an untrue statement. It reads as follows:

DECEMBER 22, 1917.

From the Chief of Naval Operations to Vice Admiral Sims, London.

Effort being made to create impression you have been hampered by failure of Navy Department to meet your request for various things, particularly personnel. I feel that a strong, positive statement on this subject from you is highly desirable.

BENSON.

Did Benson tell him to make a strong, positive statement that was untrue? Oh, no! But granting that Sims was honestly mistaken in construing these cables as inviting him to misrepresent the facts, I think we can agree that such invitations are not generally accepted. Sims therefore offers two reasons for his conduct in misrepresenting the facts, first, that he had to reach a decision, not common to a military commander, to tell what was untrue in order to support his superior officer. Think of Sims being so loyal to a superior officer that he was willing to tell for him that which was untrue! And, second, that if he cabled the truth the facts would be debated on the floor of the House by the Members of Congress, and valuable information would thereby reach the enemy. This admiral who does not now hesitate to publish to the world confidential instructions from the Navy Department was then so awfully careful about what he said, that he feared that if he sent a cable message in code to the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary, in whom all of the secrets of the department were reposed, would have so little sense and so little patriotism as to make the message public, so that it would reach the ears of the enemy! Or he believed what is not very complimentary to this House, that if Daniels sent his message to the Naval Committee—the committee that at all times had the secrets of the Navy—they would take his cablegram and debate it on the floor and thus make available to the enemy facts that would give him aid and comfort. Do you believe it? You must judge whether he told the truth on December 23, 1917, or whether he is telling the truth now when he says that his former statement was willfully false. To me the conclusion is irresistible that Sims, knowing that letter would completely refute his charges, produced it simply to anticipate its production by the Secretary of the Navy.

I am no naval expert. I know not the reasons actuating the department in having Admiral Benson or Admiral Mayo direct the operations of the American fleet, but, from the bottom of my heart, I rejoice that absolute power was not placed in Admiral William S. Sims. I am satisfied that the force under his command succeeded not because of him, but in spite of him. If left to him I know there would have been no independent activity on the part of the American Navy. While Pershing was fighting for an American Army, independent of other armies, but cooperating with them, Sims was trying to place all activities of our Navy under the British Admiralty. Admiral Wilson, in charge of the naval forces in French waters, maintained his force separate and apart from the French Navy and did a good job. I have no doubt that his pure and unadulterated Americanism was exceedingly distasteful to Admiral Sims. Wilson was of equal rank with Sims. Technically he was serving under Sims abroad, but in actual operation he was acting under the directions of the Chief of Operations here. Naval men abroad knew that Sims' insane jealousy of Wilson made it difficult for Wilson at times, but he never complained. Wilson carries no press agents upon his staff. He fights his battles upon the sea, not in the press. Sims did not like Wilson's conduct. It was stated abroad that he could not get along with Admiral Strauss. He says that Benson, Mayo, and the General Board of the Navy were all wrong. They were all out of step but Sims.

But it was not my purpose to comment in detail upon Sims' letter. I have no doubt that when given an opportunity Secretary Daniels and the General Board of the Navy will give to the American people a satisfactory explanation of why they did not adopt the recommendations of Sims as to how the Navy should be conducted during the war.

My purpose in referring to the matter at all is to advise this House and the American people that Sims not only belittled the achievements of the Navy of the United States but slandered the Army of the United States. I charge that he made false statements as to both the Army and the Navy. My colleagues know that during my nine years of service I have not been given to making reckless statements. In October, 1918, with two of my colleagues, Representative Glass, of Virginia, and Representative WHALEY, of South Carolina, I went to France, and, among other places, visited Tours, the headquarters of the Services of Supply of our Army, and was thrilled with pride at the marvels worked by this branch of the service. On October 30, with my colleagues, I saw Admiral Sims, who was then in Paris. I shall never forget that interview. The armistice had been requested by the enemy. Sims told us of the magnificent progress made by the British on the English front, and as we listened he proceeded to tell us that the armistice would have to be granted because Pershing had been unable to break through the German lines, owing to the absolute breakdown of transportation behind the American lines. With pathos in his voice he told us how unfortunate it was that this breakdown occurred at so critical a moment. In amazement we listened, and in the monologue he delivered he proceeded to tell us that while Americans believed their Navy was working wonders, that as a matter of fact we had but 3 per cent of the antisubmarine craft in English waters; that Great Britain had brought over two-thirds of our troops and had escorted one-half of them. I left him not only depressed at the failure of the American Army but humiliated at the small part played by the American Navy.

Believing that this disaster to the American Army, which, according to Sims, made necessary our granting the armistice asked by the enemy, was destined to become a national scandal, Mr. WHALEY and I determined to again visit the headquarters of the Services of Supply in order to ascertain the details of this disaster. Because of Sims' statement we traveled 150 miles or more to Tours. When we informed the commanding officer and the Chief of Staff of our desire to secure information with reference to this matter they were amazed. They advised us that it was the first they had heard of it. They showed us records where Gen. Pershing, after the St. Mihiel drive, had thanked the Services of Supply for its wonderful service, and again, just a few days prior to our visit, had written congratulating the Services of Supply upon its continued success in supplying our forces in the field. Wishing to avoid friction between our officers, we refrained from disclosing the source of our information. When told that our statement must be mere gossip in Paris, we advised the commanding officer that our information came from an officer of high rank in the service of our Government, and in response to that statement an officer present said:

That is nothing but British propaganda, and the only American officer who could have told you gentlemen this story is Admiral W. S. Sims.

[Laughter and applause.]

I regret that I do not now remember which one of the officers made the statement, but the significance of the statement greatly impressed me.

While in Paris I read in the Paris edition of a London newspaper an account of a speech made by Sims in London, in which he misrepresented the part played by our Navy, just as he had in his statement to us in Paris. Belittling the achievements of America was his hobby in those days. From the London Times of October 11, 1918, I took the following, which also appears in the London Times's History of the World War. It is an account of a speech made by Sims the day previous at a luncheon at the Criterion Restaurant:

Another idea was sometimes in the American mind, that the American Navy had been doing the bulk of the business over here—at least a half. That was not correct. There were about 5,000 antisubmarine craft operating day and night, and the American craft numbered 160, or 3 per cent. The figures were about the same in the Mediterranean. Again, Americans seemed to regard it as a miracle of their Navy that they had got a million and a half troops here in a few months and had protected them on the way. "We didn't do that," said Admiral Sims. "Great Britain did. She brought over two-thirds of them and escorted one-half. We escort only one-third of the merchant vessels that come here."

This statement, untrue as it is, was made by him not once, but on every occasion that he had an opportunity to speak. Only this morning a Member of this House told me that Admiral Sims made the same statement to him, and left him humiliated at the part the American Navy was playing in European waters. An American editor told me that in a period of two weeks he had heard him make three or four speeches in London, and on each occasion, speaking for an hour, Sims had devoted 20 minutes to a futile effort to tell negro stories and the other 40 minutes to depreciating the achievements of the American Navy. On each occasion these Americans were forced to listen to him repeat the statements made in the article quoted above from the London Times, and which, from his own reports, I will prove to be false.

He says first that there were 5,000 antisubmarine craft operating day and night and the American craft numbered 160, or 3 per cent. The statement as to the number of craft operating is deceptive and the statement as to the number of American craft is false. Records of the Navy Department show that of the 5,000 antisubmarine craft to which he refers 1,520 were trawlers, 1,365 drifters, 507 motor launches. This accounts for more than 3,000 of the total of 5,000. In his efforts to make the world believe that Great Britain was doing all of the work, he counted as antisubmarine craft everything afloat, in order to increase the percentage of Great Britain and decrease the percentage of American craft engaged. That was deception. But his statement as to the number of American vessels employed is false. His own report of April 4, 1919, contained in Monthly Bulletin No. 5, published at London, shows, on page 11, that on October 11, 1918, Sims had under his command 323 vessels. And on November 11, 1918, there were 373 United States naval vessels in European waters, including 70 destroyers, 5 gunboats, 5 coast-guard cutters, 120 submarine chasers, 27 Army yachts, 12 submarines, 13 mine sweepers, and 10 mine planters, making in all 262 vessels engaged in operation against the submarines instead of 160 as stated by him in his various speeches.

Either one of two things is certain: Sims was so busy fighting the war over the dining tables of London that he did not know how many ships he had under his command, or else, knowing the facts, he willfully misrepresented them in order to pay tribute to the British Navy and belittle the work of the American Navy. [Applause.]

As to the other statement he so constantly made as to the transportation of troops, that "Great Britain brought over two-thirds and escorted one-half," I wish to prove by his own reports that this statement is untrue. In Bulletin No. 5, published May 15, 1919, on page 7, Admiral Sims, under the heading, "A Brief Résumé of the Accomplishments of the United States Navy in European Waters," says: "First, escorted 62 per cent or about 1,250,000 troops of the United States Expeditionary Forces to Europe without loss from enemy action." So that after making, to everybody who would listen to him, the statement I have quoted from his speech as it appears in the London Times, that we had escorted but one-half of the troops taken abroad, in May, 1919, he was willing to concede that his former statement was untrue, and that we had escorted 62 per cent instead of 50 per cent. But what is the fact? The records of the United States Cruiser and Transport Force, prepared by Americans and published as an appendix to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1919, shows that of the 2,079,680 American troops transported to Europe 1,720,360, or 82.75 per cent, were under United States escort. Having slandered the Navy during the war, six months after the war he was willing to tell half the truth and concede that we escorted 62 per cent, but he never could bring himself to tell the whole truth and admit that the United States Navy had escorted 82 per cent of the boys who went abroad.

Now as to his other statement, made to his London audience, and made to us, that Great Britain had transported two-thirds of our troops to Europe. The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows that 46.25 per cent of our troops were carried abroad in United States vessels, and Sims' statement that we carried only 33 per cent is as untrue as every other statement he has made with reference to the transportation of our troops in the war.

His final statement that "We escort only one-third of the merchant vessels that come here" is also untrue. His report to which I have heretofore referred, on page 15, states that we provided 45 per cent of the ocean escort vessels for protecting allied shipping in the Atlantic. If Sims is willing to credit us with 45 per cent, it is safe to assume that we provided at least one-half of the escort for allied shipping.

While in London, in visiting the naval headquarters to secure information as to the departure of ships, we again met Admiral Sims. He courteously invited us to his office, and, evidently forgetting that he had delivered his lecture to us in Paris, he again proceeded to impress upon us the small part that our Navy played in the war, reciting the figures stated above, and which I have proved to be false. Not satisfied with telling us how small a part we played upon the sea in time of war, he proceeded to tell us that in time of peace we should seek to play no part at all. He expressed the hope that we would not be led astray by the agitation for a merchant marine. He declared that England, because of her geographical location, must necessarily control the seas, and that we could rely upon her at all times providing a merchant marine to transport our goods to foreign markets. When I took issue with him, he stated that, even if we entertained the view that it would be desirable for the United States to possess a merchant marine, it was impossible because we could not compete with Great Britain; that it would be necessary to pay subsidies, for which our people would never stand; and that it was the part of wisdom for us to develop the great West and leave the sea to Great Britain. With that Government, he said, we would never have any trouble, and Great Britain could be depended upon at all times to care for our business upon the seas. Though I believed at the time it was a waste of energy, I, nevertheless, told him that he was mistaken in his estimate of the American people. That our people had reached the conclusion that it was essential to the prosperity of America that we should possess a merchant marine; that if it was necessary to pay subsidies in order to have it, we were willing to do it. I think I was right. I believe the American people have made up their minds that the time will never again come when we will be dependent upon Great Britain or any nation for the transportation of our commodities to market. The American flag has reappeared upon the seas, and never with the consent of the American people will it leave the seas. [Applause.]

So impressed was I with the fact that this man is an incurable anglophile that upon my return I felt it my duty to report to one in authority the substance of what I have now stated. I felt it my duty to advise my Government that I would just as soon apply to the British Admiralty for an American view as I would to Sims. [Applause.]

In criticizing Sims for magnifying the achievements of the British Navy at the expense of the American Navy I do not criticize the Government of Great Britain. While abroad I met many officers of the English Army and Navy, and no one of them would have been guilty of slandering the United States Army and Navy as did Sims. No man could visit the battle field of Ypres and the Grand Fleet as I did, without being impressed with the magnificent part played by the army and navy of Great Britain in the war; and nothing that a hyphenated politician like Sims can say will either add to or detract from the glorious record of the sons of Great Britain. [Applause.] His efforts to flatter them by slandering the Army and Navy of America will meet with the contempt of every true Englishman as it does of every true American. [Applause.]

Our Navy needs no defense at my hands. The Secretary of the Navy needs no defense at my hands. Mr. Daniels is human and had mistakes been made by him in this great naval undertaking it would not have been surprising. However, the only mistake he made that I know of was his appointment of Sims. [Applause.] But the judgment of Daniels can not rest upon a single appointment. Let us not forget his other appointments: Benson, as Chief of Operations; Mayo, next in rank, as commander in chief of the United States Fleet; Wilson, in France; Gleaves, convoying our troops; Hugh Rodman, with the Grand Fleet; Niblack, in the Mediterranean; Strauss, Dunn, Andrews, and the others who served abroad. And then in the department: Palmer, Earle, Griffin, McGowan, Taylor, Parks, and Braisted. Unlike Sims, these men have no press agents. They ask only the opportunity to serve their country. But they made the Navy a fighting force of which every American is proud. Josephus Daniels organized that force, and when the tocsin of war sounded it found the Navy under Daniels prepared for action. The breath of scandal has not touched his department, either in organization or demobilization. [Applause.] He sent into the war an efficient Navy; he sent into the war a sober Navy; and when peace came he returned to the mothers of America the boys they so freely gave to their country, as clean and as pure as when they left their homes. And while Sims is fighting the battle of the medals let me say to him that, under the direction of Josephus Daniels, the Navy in this war so conducted itself that the uniform of the American sailor is to-day the emblem of bravery and efficiency, in itself, a decoration of which every sailor boy is justly proud. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, as many Members know, I have given some thought to the general subject of a proper and adequate plan of national defense. I have dwelt with considerable emphasis upon the question of the importance of matériel. In many respects it is more difficult to produce than trained personnel.

Neither personnel, matériel, nor both together will avail a nation anything when the crisis comes if that fine, indescribable, intangible thing called the spirit of an army or of a nation be lacking or proves to be of inferior quality. It is of this I would speak to-day, of what threatens to destroy it in our Army and Navy and what may be done to prevent it.

My subject is humanizing the Army. I would not have it inferred that the Army is inhuman. It is not, although there are doubtless exceptions even to this rule. As a rule, Army officers are humane and kind-hearted. Even when this is not the case, where one is not kind-hearted and gentle, even he, in most cases, is careful of the comfort of his men, for if not so he is not an efficient officer.

I wish to speak, however, of the strictly human side of officers and men in their relations to each other in the service. Having been an officer myself, it will not be claimed that I speak in hostility to the officers. There can be no doubt that there has come out of the recent war, more than from any other war, a feeling of antipathy on the part of the enlisted men, amounting in many cases to resentment, against Army officers as a class, and in my judgment it is one of the most unfortunate and disturbing outgrowths of the war. The fact that it is in most cases undeserved and without foundation in reason does not make it any the less true or any the less unfortunate.

What is the cause? How much foundation is there for such a feeling? What will the consequences be if permitted to go unchecked? What can be done to counteract it? These are some of the questions which suggest themselves.

What has caused the growth of such a feeling in the recent war? Some have thought it to be an unconscious contagion from soldier and soviet government in far-off Russia. Some have thought it the result of Bolshevik propaganda. Some have thought it a revulsion against militarism, sometimes called Prussianism.

In my judgment none of these have exercised more than a very remote and indirect effect. If I have estimated the situation correctly, we need not go very far outside of the Army itself to account for the presence of such a sentiment during the war or its growth and spread since actual fighting ceased.

What I am now going to say does not apply to the better grade of Army officers, or to Army officers as a rule, but there are so many exceptions to the rule that I shall pass over the rule entirely and for the benefit of all devote myself for a while to the exceptions.

Caste in the Army has much to do with the problem of which I am speaking. Caste may be described as a thin veneer of dignity spread over a medium or soft piece of officer material to prevent a too easy detection of the true quality of the timber. [Applause.] Its true place is where there is a strictly militaristic governing class, as in Germany before the war. It was convenient in the small army of Great Britain, where long before the present war commissions were bought, in many instances, by the younger sons of titled families.

It was never entitled to a place or even consideration in America. Unfortunately it was taken up somewhat early by a few of the small circle of officers in our small Army. It even took root in the soil of West Point and has never ceased to grow in the rare and rarified atmosphere of that great institution. It is copied by many of those coming into the Army from civil life, for why should they permit the West Pointer to excel in a lesson so easily mastered? Result: They often "out-Point the Pointers." For those coming up from the ranks it is next to impossible to escape the contagion, and as a rule they do not try.

The raison d'etre usually given for this anomalous exotic which I have labeled caste in our Army is discipline. The theory is that if an enlisted man should once discover that an officer is just an ordinary human man like himself all discipline would cease. Therefore there must be nothing but official relationship between officers and men. I deny this theory. [Applause.] The trouble with the theory is that the enlisted man knows all the while just what the officer is. He knows that he is just the same kind of man as himself and that the assumed superiority is not real.

It has been contended seriously that in order to maintain discipline in our Army it is necessary that there be a hard and fast line of demarcation, socially and otherwise, drawn and maintained between officers and men. Speaking from such experience as I have had and much observation, I deny the proposition. On the contrary, in my judgment any attempt to do so is subversive of real discipline, the only kind that counts in a crisis. [Applause.]

Do not misunderstand me. The officer who attempts to play demagogue to his men by playing the weak-kneed good fellow or hail fellow well met and hopes thereby to retain their respect will utterly fail. He thereby proves himself not a leader of men but one fit only to be led. Even the hard-boiled upstart and would-be martinet is no worse than he. My own conception of an officer is best expressed by that affectionate Army pet name, "the old man." He should be a "daddy" to his men. True, he must be a just, firm, and somewhat Spartanlike father, but if he has not a heart large enough to go out to and include every man in his outfit, be it a company, a regiment, a division, or an army, then he is not a good officer. [Applause.]

The human element can not be eliminated. It ought not to be attempted. American soldiers can not be molded into inanimate cogs in a machine, though they can be developed into highly trained units of a great organization. The German military machine exemplified the former, while the latter describes my ideal of an American Army.

I have referred to the spirit of caste in the Army. I shall give only two instances, perhaps somewhat extreme, to illustrate what I have in mind.

When my own regiment was at the Mexican border in 1916 we marched overland a considerable distance to an Army post in order to use the rifle range. The regiment of colored Cavalry regularly stationed there was with Pershing in Mexico. Only a small number of enlisted men, as caretakers of the post, and a few white officers had been left. At the post exchange was a well-kept restaurant with two dining rooms, one for colored enlisted men and the other for white officers. A half dozen officers and as many enlisted men from my regiment went into the restaurant for dinner the day we arrived. All were seated in the dining room usually occupied by white officers. A few negro soldiers were eating in the other dining room. A first lieutenant of Regulars entered the officers' dining room, and seeing half a dozen enlisted men eating there immediately demanded that they be removed to the other dining room before he, the lieutenant, would condescend to take his seat. It happened that the enlisted men in question were from the company in which I had served as a private, and I knew them all very well. They happened to be Yale graduates and sons of some of our best families, although that is not important in this connection. I might add, incidentally, that five of the six became officers in the war against Germany and made fine records. This shows the type of enlisted men they were, but this made no difference to the snobbish lieutenant. He would not eat in the same dining room where a small group of enlisted men were quietly eating the first square meal they had encountered for a week. They might have joined their more gentlemanly colored comrades across the hall, and I am quite sure that it was no false caste spirit which prevented them from doing so; but, in fact, they left the exchange and returned to the more congenial beans and sowbelly of the company kitchen.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was curious to know if the lieutenant had authority to do that?

Mr. TILSON. It was not a matter of authority. It was a private dining room conducted at the post exchange by a private individual.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What I am asking is, did he have the right to cause those privates to retire?

Mr. TILSON. He had a right to ask the proprietor to do so; and if the proprietor did not comply, I can imagine what would have happened to the post-exchange restaurant if that officer had anything to do with it thereafter.

Mr. GALLIVAN. But the lieutenant could not issue an order?

Mr. TILSON. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what I was getting at—as to whether he had authority. He simply could make it unpleasant for the people who operated the restaurant?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; but that would be sufficient.

The other case that I shall take the time to instance is one that shows that this pseudo-discipline is not only practiced but that it is boasted of and taught to others as worthy of emulation. This instance, I am informed by a reserve officer, was told by the hero himself, who was a Regular Army officer instructing in discipline at one of the training camps established at the start of the war for the instruction of new officers. This officer-instructor dilated at considerable length upon the necessity for drawing a strict caste line between officers and men, and told this story as an example of the extent to which this should be carried. He told the class of new officers that for nearly a year at one time in his military career he was stationed at a lonely post in the Philippines with but a single other white man, his sergeant, to keep him company, except at long intervals when he received or was able to pay visits to other posts in the vicinity. He stated that during that entire period he strictly maintained his dignity in all his dealings with the white sergeant, and that during all the time they were at the post together he did not exchange a single word with the sergeant except in the line of official business.

The officer who told this story is undoubtedly an exception to the general run of Regular Army officers, but in this particular case he was in a position to do much harm if the new officers under his instruction accepted his Prussian idea of what should be the relations between officers and men.

In the recent war many officers coming in from Plattsburg and other training camps came imbued with the same strange notion of what is necessary for discipline, and what they lacked in knowledge of the profession of arms many of them tried to make up by out-Heroding Herod in applying what they falsely supposed to be the real West Point idea.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TILSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. POU. Does not the gentleman think that a good deal of this unfortunate feeling on the part of the enlisted men toward the officers arises from what I understand to be the modern method, namely, that instead of the important officers leading their men in action they send them forward while they themselves stay in a perfectly safe place? As I understand it, it is the modern method, in a major action, for all down to about the first lieutenant to remain in a comparatively safe situation while the enlisted men are sent forward.

Mr. TILSON. I do not think it can be explained so easily, and, besides, I do not understand that what the gentleman describes is in fact the modern method. Of course, in modern warfare, with the magnitude of the operations that are carried on, the higher officers who command much larger units than was formerly the case, are necessarily at the positions where they can most effectively command their organizations, which is often some distance from the front line. The officer whose duty it is to accompany a particular unit is with this unit, whether it is a platoon in the front trench or a company, a battalion, or a regiment a little farther back. In a modern battle it is impracticable for a general officer, for instance, to take up his post of command in the front-line trench. It would be well-nigh impossible for him to reach or communicate with the rest of his organization, and it would be next to impossible for him to direct the battle from such a position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that the gentleman have half a minute more in order to answer a question.

Mr. TILSON. Can I have one minute more?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman please make it two minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am very much in sympathy with what the gentleman says, and I have a complete contempt for the snobbishness he has referred to, and I know he has studied the subject.

Mr. TILSON. It has been a matter of some concern to me, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will not the gentleman in some way indicate what Congress might do to relieve this unbearable, undemocratic, and indecent condition?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know just what Congress can do about it. It would be extremely difficult to frame any law that could reach such a matter. As an individual Member of Congress, I was talking the other night with a dozen or 15 thoughtful Army officers at a small dinner, and I took that occasion to tell them that, in my judgment, it was necessary for such officers as they and others, who have the highest interests of the Army at heart, to take this matter in hand. I told them that, if necessary, they must lean over backwards in order to convince the fathers and mothers of this country that when these young men, their sons, go into the Army they will receive human treatment and recognition that men who are serving their country deserve.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Just one more question. We have pursued that policy of leaving it to the Army officers themselves for a century, and it has resulted in the condition the gentleman has described. Is it not time we looked somewhere else for a remedy?

Mr. TILSON. If we are to depend upon a professional army to fight future wars—a paid army of enlisted men—possibly the people of the country can afford to neglect this matter and let it go on as it has been going. If, however, we are to rely in case of war in the future upon a democratic army, an army where the individual soldiers are to come from all the families of the land and be truly representative of the people, I think it important that there should be a change in this regard. If we are to have universal military training or any other plan founded upon the universal obligation of the citizen to fight his country's battles in time of war, then it is essential that the human element be recognized. The fathers and mothers of the land must understand that difference in rank in the Army is only the measure of responsibility, and that, whether their sons serve as high-ranking officers or as private soldiers, they equally fulfill the duty of citizenship. Class distinctions have no place in a democratic Republic like ours, whether it be in military or civil life. Difference in rank and pay is necessary in the Army and the Navy for the proper distribution of duties and responsibilities. Leaders must be placed in the proper position from which to lead effectively, and they must have power, authority, and compensation accordingly. In civil life the same adjustment is made in a slightly different way, and with the same general result; but whether generals or privates, captains of industry or common laborers, all are equal before the law, all are equal before God, and there is not, and must not be, any place in America for classes, for class distinctions, or class spirit. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Connecticut a minute more?

Mr. GOOD. All of the time has been assigned.

Mr. TILSON. The time is all apportioned. I thank you, gentlemen.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, H. R. 5918 was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs and is now pending in this House, and I trust that in due time it will receive your favorable consideration. It is a bill directing the Secretary of War to inquire into the feasibility of creating a national park down on the Plains of Chalmette, a little below the city of New Orleans, the plains on which was fought the memorable, the unforgettable, the celebrated Battle of New Orleans. The cost of making such a survey will be so small as to be almost negligible. But if the cost were a hundred thousand times greater than the small amount that will have to be expended in making this survey, in my judgment the sentiment of the American people and of history would justify such an outlay.

I do not intend, my friends, in the few remarks I shall endeavor to make as rapidly and felicitously and entertainingly as possible in the short time allowed me, to refer to the past with any bitterness, because I am not "anti" anything, but I shall refer to and dilate upon the great events that led up to this splendid battle, and particularly the battle itself, and the important results which flowed from it, with the pride of an American proud of the achievements of his countrymen on land and on sea and in the diplomatic councils of the world's affairs.

The Battle of New Orleans, in my judgment, will some day take its place among the important struggles in the world's history. When the celebrated work known as the Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World shall be revised in order to include the tremendous epoch-making engagements that have been fought in recent years, I feel confident, from the observations of competent military authorities, that the Battle of New Orleans will be included among the achievements that brought lasting results, results that practically changed the destiny of the race in our quarter of the globe.

The Battle of New Orleans was one of the greatest victories ever gained upon the Western Continent; and in order that we might thoroughly understand its importance to the history of the United States of America, in order that we might grasp the fullness of this magnificent achievement of American arms, let us reflect for a moment, Mr. Chairman, on what would have been the result had Gen. Jackson been defeated on the plains of Chalmette and as a consequence of that defeat the occupation of the Louisiana Territory by British armies, which was the purpose of the invasion. The United States of America would have been confined territorially to that space now lying between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic Ocean.

The Mexican War would never have been fought. The Civil War in all probability would not have been fought, and if it had been fought it would have terminated differently from the way it did terminate, and for the obvious historical reasons which will occur to you at once when you consider the fact that the country west of the Mississippi River would have been under the British flag. Texas would not be a part of this Union, nor would the Gadsden Purchase, nor Oregon. In fact, that vast territory which runs from the western bank of the Mississippi River clear over to the Pacific littoral would be another Canada. The war of 1898 with Spain would never have come to pass. As a consequence we would have had no territorial possessions in the Caribbean Sea and no insular possessions in the Pacific Ocean.

When one cogitates, when one thinks of the tremendous results which flowed from that battle, it is easy to be seen by any American that it takes its place among the great victories achieved by our arms, and in all probability it should rank with the great battles of the world's history which are regarded as decisive in settling some great current in human affairs—that established great republics or empires.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman let me finish? Then I will yield to any question.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is necessary, gentlemen, in order to thoroughly understand the tremendous events that led up to this battle, to turn back the hand of time and roll up the curtain upon the romantic past, under whose shadow we are still living.

Guided by history's pages, we see Narvaez going from Mexico to Florida and touching at the mouth of the Mississippi River. He was a Spanish conquistador, a nobleman and explorer. That was in 1528. Fourteen years later we see Hernando De Soto viewing the Mississippi River at some place near where the Arkansas joins her. He was a splendid Spanish conquistador, a striking figure in that romantic period, and was buried darkly at night, as was said of Sir John More, and left alone with his glory. But he had a magnificent tomb, and the tide of the Father of Waters rolling all the way to the Gulf of Mexico and on to the Atlantic Ocean probably furnished to him a funeral train such as was never the lot of any other man in history or romance. Out in the rotunda of the Capitol, under the dome, you will see eight great pictures portraying the life of America from the romantic and historical standpoint; one picture by William H. Powell portrays the wonder and amazement of De Soto and his followers when they beheld the Father of Waters gliding southward in its solemn, majestic sweep to the Mexican Sea. Years and years elapsed, and in 1673 we find Joliet and Marquette descending the Mississippi River, under the direction of the French governor of Canada, in search of the mighty river that was supposed to run from east to west and connect the two great oceans. Then they returned, having gone as far south as the Arkansas River.

Strange as it may appear, my fellow Members, the idea that a great river ran from east to west and connected the eastern and western oceans remained even among educated people for over a century after these great explorers had gone to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler has ever returned, and I understand that in South America there is still a disposition to believe that there is such a waterway.

Only lately down in Panama it was thought that the Chagres River at one time did make a connection between the two great bodies of water. It is said that Balboa, when he viewed from the hill that bears his name the mighty Pacific, looked for the river that he thought joined it to the Atlantic.

In 1682 La Salle completed the discovery of the Mississippi River and claimed the whole country for France, naming it Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV.

It is clear to you gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole House from this recital that there must have been an issue between France and Spain in regard to the immense territory involved and flowing from the right of discovery. This is made clear by the fact that in 1762 France, by treaty of Fontainbleau, ceded to Spain all that part of the Louisiana territory lying west of the Mississippi River and the island of Orleans, which is to-day New Orleans, and in the following year, 1763, by the treaty of Paris, surrendered all of that part of the territory lying on the right bank, and Florida, to England. The desire of Napoleon to create a colonial empire in America led to the secret treaty of St. Ildefonse, in 1800, by which France acquired that part of Louisiana formerly ceded to Spain. This acquisition by the great Corsican and the treaty by which France secured it was denounced as fraudulent by Spain and England, and Napoleon transferred it to the United States for $15,000,000, as he feared an invasion of the Louisiana territory by England and wished to make us its defenders. Matters drifted, as Napoleon was then at the zenith of his power and the terror of Europe. Then came that terrible day for him and joy for Europe whence he had to abdicate and fled to Elba, in the early summer of 1814.

England was now in control of the world. Up to this time she was successful in the War of 1812, her chief triumph being the capture and burning of our Capitol. London newspapers teemed with accounts of her easy victory and triumphs and ridiculed a people that could not offer a soldier's resistance to the invaders of their country. Our President and Army—in fact, the population—were mercilessly lampooned upon the stage and derided and sneered and scoffed at in the English journals of the time. Flushed with success on the Continent, England now determined to settle with the infant Republic and give her a military lesson that would break her spirit completely. Therefore one of the conditions to be imposed upon France was the return of Louisiana to Spain and which England would take from us if her ally should not be strong enough to do so for herself.

It was indeed a day of appalling danger for our country. The entire valley was to be trampled under military heel. An immensely large force for that time was to embark from Plymouth for the conquest of the Gulf States, the control of the Mississippi Valley, and the occupancy of the Louisiana Purchase. This army was composed of men who had been under Wellington in the Peninsular wars. Gen. Ross was to have commanded this invading army after Wellington declined its command; but Ross was killed on the banks of the Patapsco, and Sir Edward Pakenham was placed in charge, the Duke of Wellington having again declined the command.

It was a dark period for our country. The old martial spirit of the Revolution seemed to be dead. The war was far from arousing any patriotic enthusiasm. Even the school children of America were depressed, downhearted, and saddened at the overwhelming calamities that had befallen their country.

It is clear that if another disaster had befallen our arms instead of the triumph that we won, if another defeat had been our fate, we would have been crushed and overwhelmed by such a catastrophe, England would have occupied New Orleans and taken possession of the Louisiana Territory without another blow, as we would have been at her mercy.

We had sent James Bayard, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Jonathan Russell, and Albert Gallatin to secure a treaty of peace.

Lord Castlereagh about this time said: "Every port and city in America is in our hands and the Americans are little better than prisoners in their own land." The London Sun, as well as the Canadian newspapers, looked forward to and predicted the annihilation of what they scornfully refused to recognize as a military force.

Our peace commissioners were subject to mortification. Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Indiana were demanded as an evidence of our defeat. This was on September 8, 1814. It is needless to say that these demands were promptly refused by our commissioners.

Keep this fact in mind, my countrymen, for the seeming friend of to-day may be the enemy of to-morrow, and eternal vigilance and watchfulness are necessary to safeguard the interest and unity of the Nation. For on October 24, six weeks later, Lord Bathurst gave Pakenham his commission and orders to proceed to Plymouth and embark there for Louisiana to assume command of the forces operating for the reduction of that Province. All of these warlike preparations were being made while the peace conference was in session at Ghent.

Yes, my countrymen, eternal vigilance is the price, or a part of the price, we must pay to preserve our liberties, our freedom, our institutions. Self-reliance, preparedness, training, resolution, and fortitude should be the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to guide us along the road to the goal of our country. Alliances, except for the purpose of trade, do not appeal to a bold and militant people. Courage and that discipline which comes as a result of training from the cradle until the patriot steps on the battle field or the deck of his country's war vessel are what make for a nation's perpetuation and its glory.

It is true a treaty of peace was signed, but let us not forget that it was not a spirit of generosity on the part of England that led to the abandonment of her extraordinary claims and proposed indemnities as an evidence of our humiliation, but because she was assured just at this time and believed that we were so torn and worn by dissension, so near exhaustion that dissolution was inevitable, and that the dismembered States would seek a new and closer alliance with her as separate and distinct dependencies. In other words, she hoped to secure more by what she considered the inevitable process of dissolution, that her informants thought they saw in operation, than by force of arms or a too exacting treaty and the harsh terms she had intended to impose. She had not relinquished her rights in the Louisiana Purchase on behalf of Spain, nor had she abandoned her plans to control the Mississippi, for the Pakenham expedition had been hurried across the Atlantic and assembled at Negril, Jamaica, with a full civil government for the Crown Province of Louisiana, as it was referred to by England; and no effort was made to recall it.

As a matter of fact all plans for the invasion and occupancy of the Louisiana Territory were being actively pushed while the peace conference was in session. Do not ever forget this, my countrymen; keep it in mind, lest on some tremendous day we have to pay for our carelessness in blood and tears.

Just at this critical time in the history of our country there loomed on its horizon one who became a great figure in the affairs of this world, one who came out of the woods, like Hosea of old. Tried by obscurity, poverty, pain, danger, and the malevolence that always assails merit, he had overcome disappointment, surmounted every obstacle, subdued and triumphed over every disaster. The perils of the wilderness, the hostility of the savage, the silent antagonism of the trackless swamps and the unbroken forest, melted into thin air before the dauntless courage and martial fire of this hero, warrior, statesman, patriot, and American, Andrew Jackson, whose fiery heart never quailed before any foe, whose crest was never lowered to any enemy.

His fame as an Indian fighter, his wonderful march against Pensacola, his defense of Fort Bower had reached Europe, and Wellington saw flashing across the military skies, not a meteor dazzling in its brightness for a moment, only to plunge into everlasting gloom and darkness, but a rising star of the first magnitude.

I will not dwell upon Pakenham's advance up the Gulf of Mexico and through Lake Borgne, nor upon the skirmish by lake and land, by river and bayou, that preceded the memorable conflict on the 8th of January, 1815. Expede Herculem. From the foot of Hercules build his statue. From this Spartan message vision the glory of our victory—the tragedy of their defeat.

American loss: 7 killed and 6 wounded.

English loss: 700 killed, 1,400 wounded, and 500 prisoners.

Among the slain was Pakenham, the gallant leader of the invading force. As are Leonidas and Thermopylae Pass to Greece are Jackson and New Orleans to Americans.

When shall the glory of our Army fade? Shall we of this great country ever forget the Kentuckians, Tennesseans, Mississipians, and Louisianians, some of whom marched 1,200 to 1,500 miles to be with Jackson and his immortal aids, Coffee and Carroll? Let the Jackson Highway of to-day, over which they marched when it was an unbroken wilderness from end to end, convey in eloquent silence the greatness, the glory, the grandeur of these splendid souls who are now in the great beyond, near the throne of God.

They are buried all over the South and West. After playing out in a magnificent way their parts as American citizens and soldiers, they joined the glorious souls who fought, struggled, bled, and died for the land since the first white man placed his heel upon it. Each of Jackson's soldiers was a York, born with a rifle near his hand, trained to meet danger from his infancy, and with lion-hearted courage had subdued his savage foes. The glory of the English Army went as chaff before the wind when they met our backwoodsmen rifle experts and dead shots. No enemy could hope to struggle successfully with such American invincibles. They are no more. They have passed away, but their blood is still here. They themselves are in the great country of all men's hopes, on the blue-tented field above.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and daring few.
On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread
And glory guards with solemn 'round
The bivouac of the dead.

Their shivered swords are red with rust,
Their plumed heads are bowed,
Their haughty banner, trailed in dust,
Is now their martial shroud;
And plenteous funeral tears have washed
The red stains from each brow,
And their proud forms, in battle gashed,
Are free from anguish now.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the blood you gave,
No impious footsteps here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your glory be forgot
While fame her record keeps,
Or honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

[Applause.]

May I, my countrymen, now that as a Louisianian I have placed metaphorically a wreath of my great State upon the last resting place on earth of the brave Kentuckians, never-to-be-forgotten Tennesseans, and immortal Mississippians, who won for themselves and their country on Chalmette Plains on January 8, 1815, fadeless crowns of glory—may I say a few words of our own Louisiana, the Niobe of States, and her beautiful and romantic daughter, New Orleans?

If you would feel glory's thrill, if you would feel the throb of an unwritten epic, read the story of Jean Lafitte, the pirate, who would not sell his country for all the bright gold England could offer; read the story of Dominick You, whose epitaph from Voltaire's "La Henriade"—

Intrépide guerrier, sur la terre et sur l'onde,
Il sut, dans cent combats, signaler sa valeur,
Et ce nouveau Bayard, sans reproche et sans peur,
Aurait pu sans trembler, voir s'écrouler le monde.

The intrepid hero of a hundred battles on land and on sea, and who, like another Bayard, without fear and without reproach, will one day, unmoved, view the destruction of the world, claims the attention of all who visit his tomb—the attention of all passers-by in the old St. Louis cemetery, where are buried You, and by some it is said Lafitte, the kinsmen of Hernando De Soto, and these grand old Creole dames and gentlemen who loved the beautiful Queen City of the South—where lie the Louisianians who stood shoulder to shoulder and heel to heel and heart to heart and soul to soul with their brethren from Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi—if you would catch the atmosphere of this epic in our history, read the wonderful work issued by the Louisiana Historical Society in commemoration of the centenary of the Battle of New Orleans, on January 8, 1915, and which has an honored place in the great Congressional Library.

And never forget a tradition which our people boast of as an evidence of the heroism of their great men and women. If Jackson had lost the conflict on the plains of Chalmette, he had planned to retreat up the river with his army and the entire population of New Orleans, then set fire to the city, and when it was destroyed cut the banks of the river and inundate its smoking ruins, obliterate it, so that the enemy would have no resting place for the winter. My countrymen, even that thought conveys to our minds the man more clearly than any poem or oration the dauntless Americanism of this hero, Jackson, champion of liberty, son of freedom, and hero of New Orleans and his country's idol.

It is said that William of Orange was willing to take the people of Holland to the Asian islands in the Pacific below the Equator, and there under the Southern Cross, where the nutmeg and sugar cane grow, begin a new republic, but only after he would cut its dikes and flood the lowlands, in order that his country might not become the spoil of the invader and conqueror. Moscow stands out as another sublime story of resistance, and New Orleans is the great American epic, though unwritten, as to what the American people would do at all times to fight the invader. "Millions for defense, but not a cent for tribute" in its larger sense expresses our willingness to make any sacrifice the war god demands rather than prostrate ourselves before any foe. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, my song hath ended; my voice is about to join the echoes. Would that my address were worthier of the great event in our history.

But to other men and other times I leave the chapters that will in a measure reflect the glory that transcends in the minds of Americans—

The glory that was of Greece,
The grandeur that was of Rome.

Down on those immortal plains, down on that glorious battle field, down where the bearded oak and the magnolia and pomegranate and orange and fig and the night jessamine grow, and the waters of the Mississippi sing on their way to the sea a mighty refrain under the moonlight to the brave spirits that fought the good fight and won, there rises a great shaft in memory of our gallant souls who repelled the invaders. It stands out under the sky of Chalmette, so that travelers to all parts of the world as they pass down the river to the Gulf may see it, and carry it in their hearts and affections—a monument to our sainted dead.

There on that holy ground, in the years to come as in those that have joined eternity, will be heard orations on the glory of their fall and their wonderful victory. Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi—Louisiana shall never forget your noble sons.

Our speakers shall always refer to them affectionately as the brave defenders of the valley.

And, in eulogizing your departed soldier, sons will point to that marble column that rises to the sky and declare:

Yon marble minstrel's voiceless tone
In deathless songs shall tell,
When many a vanquished age hath flown,
The story how ye fell.
Nor wrecks, nor change, nor winter's blight,
Nor time's remorseless doom,
Shall dim one ray of holy light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

[Great applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have to take the attention of the committee from the splendid eloquence to which we have just been listening to sordid matters of business, but I want to call the attention of Members of this Congress and this committee to a fact that I have here. The department of unused and renovated war material from time to time, as well as other departments—and there seems to be several of them—sell material that is on hand. Sometimes in the sheets which they give out they attach the prices of the material that they are going to sell, and it is stated that they are the original prices of the articles. Most of the time no price is attached on these sheets. I call attention here to several hundred articles, but I wish to use the few minutes alloted to me to call the attention of Members to an official price list of articles for sale in the Army Quartermaster's retail stores, the list being No. 1, which was issued with prices of the materials attached thereto, as being the original price of the article. There are several hundred of them on this list, among which are some stocks and dies for iron pipe cutting and threading. Almost everyone knows what those articles are. This list shows stocks and dies, from a quarter of an inch to an inch, new, at $23.50 a set; and offers to sell to the waiting public for that amount. Newspaper articles from time to time say that these sales are to be made for the purpose of permitting the returned soldiers to get the articles at reasonable prices—tools with which they may start in business, or through which they may secure employment and use the tools. I saw this price list, and saw upon it some stocks and dies, and I went to the stores and bought one set of new stocks and dies made by Armstrong Co., at Bridgeport, Conn.

The price listed is $23.50, which is the price the Government paid, according to the package markings. This is the set of dies which I have here in this box. I then went down to Espey's hardware store on Pennsylvania Avenue, at No. 1010, and purchased identically the same set of stocks and dies, made by the same people, for $7.25. Either the Government has been robbed to the extent of more than 200 per cent on all of its hardware articles, because this is a fair sample, or else the Government is profiteering to that extent. One or the other is true. Mr. Espey gave me a receipt for my purchase, and on the receipt he stated that he had never sold these articles before in the history of his business, and that is a good many years, for more than $7.25. The Government purchased hundreds of different sets and of different sizes of stocks and dies, as well as all other kinds of hardware material, and I have here in my hand a great list of various articles that are offered for sale. I heard strong talk yesterday from the Democratic side, ridiculing the cry of economy and of economizing, but this shows that some one appointed by the Democratic administration sold to the Government at 200 per cent above ordinary price these articles, or else the Government, as I said before, is profiteering to that extent in selling them now to the public.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARLAND. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to inquire of the gentleman whether or not the sizes of these dies were different?

Mr. GARLAND. They are identically the same, and here they are in these two boxes. This box is a little different outside, because they have not been painting the boxes since the war, as they did before.

Mr. CONNALLY. Are they all of the same size?

Mr. GARLAND. The sizes are from one-quarter of an inch to an inch.

Mr. CONNALLY. And all the same size?

Mr. GARLAND. They are the same identically. Here is a piece of quarter-inch pipe where one end was thread cut with one set of dies and the other end with the other set of dies. They are identically the same; they are of the same make; there is not an iota of difference between them. The same company made them, and they are known as Armstrong No. 2 two-piece steel dies.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I think it would be very enlightening to the House and to the country if my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] would make inquiry to ascertain whether or not the Government did allow itself to be robbed in that way by paying that high price or is in turn really profiteering on the public.

Mr. GARLAND. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is my intention to introduce to-day a resolution to have this matter referred to the committee on war-expenditures cost, the committee presided over by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. I intend to have all this data for the use of the committee, and I hope that the committee will make a thorough examination. I believe from the evidence that I have here that all of the hardware sold to the United States Government was sold at exorbitant prices, practically on the same ratio as this, of probably 200 per cent above retail prices. You can go into any town in the United States and buy that set of stocks and dies for $7.25.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. One of these boxes contains the exact dies purchased by the Government?

Mr. GARLAND. One of them I purchased from the Government, and the other I purchased from Mr. Espey.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Government originally had purchased the set, of course, which the gentleman purchased from it?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that the gentleman has the corpus delecti?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman says that he purchased one from the Government and paid $23.50 for the set?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes; the Government price.

Mr. CONNALLY. And the other from a retail dealer here, and paid $7.25 for the set?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. What object did the gentleman have in paying $23.50 for one set, when he could have gotten it from a retailer at $7.25?

Mr. GARLAND. The object is to show that somebody appointed by this Democratic administration apparently has been in the habit of selling to the Government hardware material at about 200 per cent above the retail cost price. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GARLAND was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of the Treasury suggested to us some time ago that the deficit at the end of the current fiscal year would be something over two and a half billions of dollars I think he did not have in mind that the deficiency estimates were going to pour in the way they have been coming. We have before us a bill carrying $88,000,000, I believe, reduced by $29,000,000 below the amount of the estimates, for expenditures that I doubt if the Secretary had in mind when he estimated the probable deficit at the end of the fiscal year. I think that to-day we will have to chalk down another sum of nearly $90,000,000 as an increase of the war overhang at the end of the present fiscal year. It is facts like these that compel the continued discussion of economy.

Why, I understand that certain gentlemen are insistent that this bill, large as it is, shall be increased by about $10,000,000 for the purpose, as I understand it—and a laudable purpose in a way and from one standpoint—of keeping certain people employed on Government work. In other words, locally and in administration circles generally there is a plan and purpose to continue public expenditures indefinitely along the same lines and in the same volume that they were carried on during the war. In these days, when we are hearing from innumerable sources of the alleged inadequate salaries and wages that the Federal Government is paying, there is nothing so painful, apparently, as the separation of one of these inadequately compensated people from the public crib.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Last year it was thought that four and a half billions would take care of the expenditures of this year because of an overhang from the war. Now we have the suggestion that next year it will be four and a half billions, and that means we are to have a permanent outlay of four and a half times what we had before the war?

Mr. MONDELL. It means we are to have that much of an outlay and a billion or two more unless this Congress takes the position that the American people will not stand it. [Applause.]

I am not privileged to mention what was said at a conference held this morning in the Speaker's room with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury—the Secretary being unable to be present, as he was in attendance on his last Cabinet meeting—and the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, there being present besides the Speaker, the majority and minority leaders, the chairman, and the ranking member of the minority, of the Committee on Ways and Means, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the members of the steering committee—I am not privileged to say what those gentlemen said to us. They emphasized certain facts, patent to all, who study the financial condition of the country in a way to make them very clear. The problem of financing the war did not end with the signing of the armistice nor were all our problems met during the war, when in the spirit of patriotic enthusiasm anything could be accomplished. We have had trying problems since the close of the war. We are still confronted with them when, with the outside world, the European part of it, on the verge of bankruptcy, we are trying to take up the war overhang, reduce the tremendous war expenditures, and save the financiers of the country in these days of peace from the financial disaster that, thanks to the patriotism of the country, did not seriously threaten during the period of the war.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the easiest thing in the world——

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment.

It will be the easiest thing in the world for this Congress to respond to demands made upon it here and there and elsewhere for appropriations and bond issues that would bring the Treasury of the country perilously near a condition of insolvency, and in doing that to send into political oblivion the men and the party responsible for it.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman intend to enlighten us as to the additional item to be added to this bill costing $10,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it has to do with navy yards and repairs to ships in navy yards. But the gentleman will be fully enlightened; at least, he will hear much in regard to it, I presume, when the item is reached.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not permit a rule to come in making it in order, I will save him any trouble about it, because I am going to make a point of order against it.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is referring to the construction and repair in 1920 of the war vessels of the United States in the $10,000,000 item?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand it has to do with the repair of naval vessels. I am not discussing it. I do not pretend to be informed in detail in regard to it. I simply referred to it as one of the additional demands.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to say to the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. I have no time to discuss the merits of the item, and I am not doing it. It will be discussed. It doubtless has some merit, or otherwise no one, I trust, would be for it. The question is whether it is essential and whether the welfare of the people demands that we shall do it now.

He who preaches economy has the approval of everyone, but he who attempts to put economy into effect is likely to be very unpopular. In my reiterated insistence upon the practice of economy in Government expenditures I find that I have the support, in principle, of almost everybody, but in endeavoring to apply the principles of economy to the specific propositions presented to Congress I have the unpleasant experience of encountering one after another the opposition of those who are favorable to the particular expenditure on which we are attempting to economize.

Notwithstanding all this, our duty is perfectly plain. With nine billions of estimated obligation and expenditure and six billions of estimated revenue, and with the probability that the obligations and expenditures have been underestimated and the income overestimated, whatever else we would like to do, there is only one thing that we can do, and that is economize.

May I be allowed to again emphasize the fact that in reporting our appropriation bills we must reduce the estimates as they appear in the Book of Estimates at least a billion or a billion and a quarter dollars. With this reduction we shall not escape serious consequences if, over and above and beyond the estimates totaling nine billions, we shall make vast expenditures.

A special effort is being made to pledge the country to a system of universal compulsory military training. I am not proposing at this time to discuss the merits of such a system. It is my duty to subject it to the analysis of cost. If the American people now, or at any time in the future, want such a system, that is for them to determine; but no man in a position of responsibility at this time is performing his duty to his country who does not frankly acknowledge the cost of any program he proposes, and no man responsible in any way for expenditures is performing his duty who does not correct misstatements which are made as to the cost of programs proposed.

I have been very much surprised to hear, from sources that ought to be well informed, the very extraordinary statement that a system of universal, compulsory, military training can be put in operation in the United States for $125,000,000. The man or the organization that makes such a statement as that is either lamentably ignorant or willfully misstates the fact, and the computation of the cost of such a system is so simple that there is no excuse for a misstatement of the facts.

The fact is that a system of universal, compulsory military training could not be inaugurated in America and operated for the first year for less than $1,000,000,000, and could not be carried on thereafter for less than $700,000,000 per annum, and these figures are conservative and based upon facts so well known that the least-informed citizen may readily grasp them.

A system that would call for the training of all of the able-bodied, physically fit youth of the country of a given age—be it 18, 19, or 20, or whatever age selected—would apply to at least 800,000 men. That would be about the number after all the physically unfit had been excused. If 25 per cent, or 1 man in 4, of these physically fit youths were excused for one reason or another, it would still leave 600,000 men for training.

Under most of the plans proposed the actual training period would be four months. Adding to this 30 days in which to call, assemble, and transport the men to be trained to the training camps, and another 30 days as the least time in which they could be disbanded and transported to their homes, we have a period of six months during which upward of 600,000 men would be clothed, fed, cared for, transported, and trained at the expense of the Federal Government.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly.

Mr. OLNEY. You do not really believe that it would take 30 days before and after training to organize and to dismember these camps?

Mr. MONDELL. I do. The gentleman lives in a very small State. You can travel across it in a very brief time. But this is a very large country. [Applause.] By the time you took a man from a mountain village in Wyoming, or even a village in northern Maine, or from a seacoast town on the western or southern coast and assembled him with his neighbors at some central point, and transported them to the proper place of training, and organized them for training, all of 30 days would have been consumed. But let us not spend time over trifling details. It is the question of what it will cost that I am talking about. [Applause.] It might be only 29 days, but the difference in the cost would be infinitesimal.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, just for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman said it was a question of what it will cost. Am I to understand that everything from now on is to be measured in this House from the standpoint of what it will cost, or will it be measured from the standpoint of what will be the merit and advantage to the American people? [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can argue this universal military training proposition as long as he wants to from the standpoint of advantage, but my purpose just now is to challenge attention to what it will cost. Evidently the gentleman does not want the people to know what it will cost, for fear if they knew what it would cost they might not want to embark on it at this time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I can not yield further. I am discussing what it will cost just now, and I shall be glad to discuss other phases of it with the gentleman from Maryland at some other time. Let us count the cost, because there have been more misstatements made about the cost of this thing than about anything that I know of, men who ought to know better, members of organizations that ought to be informed, have been trying to hoodwink the American people into believing that for a mere pittance, for a few million dollars, you can transport the able-bodied young men of this country, 600,000 or 700,000 or 800,000 of them, and put them into camp and train them for several months for a measly sum of money.

If it is a good thing—and I am not arguing that point—if it is a good thing, let us have it, but let us know what it is going to cost. [Applause.] Let us know about it in these days when we are warned as to the condition of the Treasury. If the deficit is to be increased, let us know how much and inquire where the money is to come from? If gentlemen in advocating these plans will propose a tax on the American people that will meet the cost, whatever it is, then they will at least be making their plea from a sound financial basis. But when gentlemen proceed on the theory that it is not going to cost much of anything and that what little it does cost you can pick off the bushes, why, men who have a sense of responsibility have reason to protest.

The present cost per man of the Military Establishment of the United States averages approximately $2,000 per annum. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that it would cost no more per man for the men in training than for the men in the Regular Military Establishment and the minimum cost for the minimum number of men which a universal training system would involve, with the exceedingly liberal provision of 25 per cent of the able-bodied men excused, would be, for 600,000 men, $600,000,000. If fewer men were excused, the cost would be more. Every item of the cost of men in training, with the possible exception of the item of pay, would be higher than the corresponding cost of a man in the Regular Establishment. That would be due to the fact that, in the first instance, there would be the cost of assembling, a cost that does not occur in the Regular Establishment; the cost of transportation to and from the training grounds and from one training ground to another as the men were given a variety of training, greatly in excess of the average cost of transportation in the Regular Establishment.

The clothing cost would exceed an average six months' cost for the Regular Establishment, because the men would have to be fully equipped at the outset, furnished with a variety of training uniforms, and unquestionably they would be given a practically new outfit on their return home. The troops in training would have to be at least as well fed and housed and cared for as the men of the Regular Establishment. As a matter of fact, these items would all of them be higher than the average cost for the same purposes in the Regular Establishment.

In order to prevent epidemics among large bodies of young men suddenly brought together from homes all over the country it would be necessary to have extraordinary medical and hospital facilities. This and the cost of the maintenance of barracks and quarters, instead of being spread over a period of a year, would be concentrated in the training period of six months.

In the matter of officers it would take quite as many, and in all probability many more, in proportion to the number of men than would be required for regular troops, for the entire period would be one of travel, organization, intensive training—physical, military, educational; a period of intense activity. There would be the cost of recreation facilities and instruction, an item larger than for the same number of men in the Regular Establishment.

Army officers have testified that it would cost at least $300,000,000 to put the camps of the country in condition for a system of universal military training, and that it would cost at least $60,000,000 per annum to keep these camps in condition. The items, therefore, of a system of universal compulsory military training, with 25 per cent of the able-bodied men excused, would be for the first year as follows:

Enlargement, improvement, and extension of camps	$300,000,000
Assembling, transportation, equipment, and training of 600,000 men	600,000,000
Maintenance camps, one year	60,000,000
Incidental costs, training, equipment, and material	40,000,000
Total	1,000,000,000

This sum might be reduced after the first year by the $300,000,000 used for enlargment of camps, though the probability is that other unanticipated costs would take it up.

It is true that the proponents of this plan do not anticipate putting it in operation until the year 1921, but if put in operation in the spring of 1921 more than half of the cost for the first year would have to be borne out of the revenues of the year for which we are now appropriating. If such a system was to be put in operation in 1921 the work on the camps should begin at once, and at least $600,000,000 of the first year's cost of $1,000,000,000 would have to be met out of the revenues for the fiscal year for which we are now making our calculations.

Let it be remembered that the nine billions of estimated expenditures, to which I have referred, does not contain a penny for any of this class of expenditure; that it would be in addition to all the estimates heretofore made; and that therefore it would increase by the amount of its cost the deficit for the next fiscal year, now estimated at $3,000,000,000. That estimated deficit, even as things now stand, is a real menace. It would be disastrous to increase it. If we are to have any more large expenditures, gentlemen proposing them should bring along with their proposal a plan of additional taxes to pay the cost. That is the only safe way, and if this system must be put into effect additional taxes should be levied to provide for it.

The fact is that this whole question of training should be left for settlement next year. We have over 4,000,000 trained men now. We are passing through the most trying financial period of the war, though the armistice was signed considerably more than a year ago. We are entering upon the financial period that is going to determine whether or no, having piled up a national debt of $26,000,000,000, having an unbonded overhang of $3,000,000,000, we are to pursue a policy which will bring us safely through the period of war financing, or a policy under which, a year and a half after the war is over, we are to be engulfed in financial difficulties which we happily escaped during the period of conflict.

I have discussed this from the standpoint of economy. Gentlemen may argue it from other standpoints as they desire. The first essential fact is how much is it going to cost; for if we have not the money we can not undertake it, be it ever so desirable. We can console ourselves with the fact that we have 4,000,000 splendidly trained young men in the country, and, thank God, there is no present menace to the Republic. [Applause.] And furthermore, camps and cantonments can be built or enlarged another year as well or better than they can this. Let us take plenty of time to think about this matter, to talk about it, and determine upon it. We can not well begin to do that until we have corrected the errors of the professional liars who go about the country trying to make the American people believe that you can have an enormous institution of this kind for the sum of money that would buy a child's box of toy tin soldiers. [Applause.]

There are many plans of training, some of which might meet the approval of all the American people. I am talking of the universal compulsory plan that is now proposed, and it is my duty to call attention to what it will cost. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, because of the ignorance or negligence, or because of the willful disregard of the laws of the United States by Carter Glass, the Secretary of the Treasury, or Rupert Blue, Surgeon General of the United States, sick and wounded American soldiers of the war with Germany are to-day not receiving treatment guaranteed them by the law, or are receiving treatment that can not be justified by anyone who has any regard for the well-being of the men who fought to maintain the country.

In Chicago, on January 15 last, American soldiers who had been seriously wounded, who had been and ought to be receiving treatment for their wounds, were requested to leave the hospital and discontinue treatment, in order that other men in more serious conditions might take their beds in the hospital.

In other words, after having volunteered to fight the war against Germany and having been seriously wounded, they were again, on January 15 last, at the Marine Hospital and the South Side Hospital in Chicago, asked to volunteer to leave those hospitals and discontinue the treatments which are necessary for them.

In the hospitals in Chicago at the same time—and I believe in other hospitals in the United States—men who were wounded and ill by reason of their hardships in France are placed in crowded quarters, with insufficient air capacity. Wounded and sick men in these same hospitals are compelled to do what little vocational work they are able to do in bathrooms.

In these same hospitals men who have been gassed are quartered in dark hallways where no ray of sunlight has been or ever will be permitted to enter, and this in spite of the fact that since March 3, 1919, $9,500,000 of money have been available and could and should have been used.

If this condition is permitted to exist for a few months more there will be thousands of wounded and sick American soldiers who need treatment and will be unable to secure it. In my opinion thousands of them will die, and the persons responsible for those deaths will be the men I have mentioned, or some of them, because Congress has performed its duty in appropriating the necessary funds, while they have not performed theirs in expending them.

All this in spite of the direct promise of this Government when, in section 302, paragraph 3, chapter 105, Fortieth Statutes at Large, page 406, in the war-risk act, it was stated:

In addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

This solemn promise was made by the American Government at the time these boys volunteered for service, and the fact that the promise has been broken and violated is the darkest blot upon this administration and the men responsible for the execution of the laws of the United States.

There can not be any valid reason for this neglect of the soldiers of our Army, and if the conditions continue to exist in spite of the laws of the country, of the publicity given to the facts, it will be necessary for some Member of Congress to try to secure action through the one remedy that is left, which is impeachment.

I doubt if there is a Member of Congress who could have believed, up to the present time, that public officials, charged with the duty of taking care of these wounded soldiers, would be so negligent of their duties as the facts show that they are and have been. I know that I would not have deemed it possible, and in the beginning learned of the facts largely through accident.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman speaks of their having sufficient money. I was of that opinion also until I read this bill and saw a deficiency appropriation of half a million dollars carried for this particular work. I was wondering why it was necessary to carry a deficiency appropriation if they have the money already.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is because of the fact that we appropriated for the Speedway Hospital in Chicago and instructed the Secretary of the Treasury to take it over, which would give 2,500 beds. Instead of complying with that mandatory act of Congress they maneuvered around with the plans month after month and then requested, as I remember it, about 26 additional buildings for which they desired an appropriation before they spend the money that we have already appropriated. I trust I have made it clear. If not, I will make it clear later.

Mr. GARNER. Then the gentleman's criticism is based upon the so-called Chicago hospital transaction?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Absolutely not. We appropriated $9,500,000 on March 3, 1919, for additional beds for wounded soldiers, and not one additional bed has ever been put in since that date, and that money has not been expended and is lying there and could be expended.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the condition is such as the gentleman describes, can the gentleman state why his party, constituting as they do a majority of the Committee on Appropriations, have actually cut the estimates in this deficiency bill of $1,000,000 for hospital construction down to $500,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I can not answer that question, because I am not familiar with this bill; but it may be because of the fact that the Surgeon General has asked for an appropriation of $85,000,000 for additional hospital facilities which he said were not necessary on June 24 last, and because of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury in submitting the request of the Surgeon General said he could not tell whether the money was necessary or not. In other words, the Surgeon General under the Treasury Department asked for a certain sum of money. Then the Secretary of the Treasury says he has no method of determining whether or not the Surgeon General states the fact correctly.

On December 7, 1919, at the request of Hon. Peter W. Dougherty, former Assistant Attorney General, and railroad commissioner of the State of South Dakota, I went to an Army hospital at Fort Sheridan to see his son, expecting to find happy, contented, and well-treated men, with the small proportion of malcontented and objectors that are found in every unit of every army, regardless of the treatment the men receive. But on that trip to Fort Sheridan on that day I saw 60 men who were not fed and many others who could not secure sufficient food, and at that time I wired the Secretary of War as follows:

At General Hospital 28, Fort Sheridan, to-day I personally saw many men who could not secure any dinner and number of patients who had very short rations. At least 60 men were not fed. These are all wounded men who have seen active service in France and need the best of food and must receive it. I request that the inspector general conduct an investigation to determine who is responsible for this condition and see that whoever is responsible be punished. Any of the enlisted men there can furnish the testimony.

The Secretary of War did send an inspector general to this hospital to investigate from December 11 to December 16, 1919, and that Army officer made a report from which I shall quote, and I quote from it not only to prove my statements but to prove them by the department itself.

Personally, I have been extremely careful in making charges against men connected with the departments, because it is extremely easy to take the floor of the House and to make extravagant charges against men who can not reply. And in making a complaint I have tried to submit names, dates, and facts, so that verification would be easy.

In reference to this complaint, Col. R. G. Peck, of the Inspector General's Department, reported, in part, as follows:

The dinner service commenced at 11.30 a. m. About 12 o'clock some 30 to 50 patients in the north mess hall were unable to get any meat, as the supply had become exhausted. There is no evidence to indicate that more than six of these men reported the matter to the mess officer or noncommissioned officer in charge of the mess hall. The latter, when he observed some disturbance among the patients and found that it was due to the fact that there was no more meat available, failed to assure the soldiers that if they remained quiet and seated he would see to it that they were provided with ample meat. Instead of giving them this assurance, he went to the kitchen for the purpose of ascertaining the cause for the exhaustion of the meat supply. During this time some of the patients left the mess hall. Eight of them returned to their wards and reported the incident to Lieut. Col. C. W. Havercamp, Medical Corps, who immediately got into communication with the mess officer, who arranged for these men to return to the mess hall and have a substitute meat served to them. This was done, and the men reported to Lieut. Col. Havercamp that they had been satisfied. All men who waited in the mess hall or who returned to the mess hall were served from one to three steaks each in about 15 minutes after the mess officer and mess sergeant had been informed that the pork chops had run out.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KREIDER. I wish to suggest that there is no lack of hospitals in the Army; there never has been a time when one-half of the Army hospitals have been filled or the beds occupied. The trouble is a fight between the War Department and the Treasury Department, under whose auspices the Public Health Service is supposed to operate. It refuses to accept hospitals and materials offered by the War Department.

In spite of the millions that have been spent, there are Army hospitals where the sun does not shine, and it is due to the antagonistic feeling that exists between the departments in the present administration. A better hospital, a more sanitary one, never has been built, a hospital that has been passed upon by the War Department, by the architects, and by the physicians; and yet the soldiers are obliged to go without treatment because some bulletheaded official refuses to accept the idea of a common, ordinary, sensible being to equip the hospital.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That matter I will come to a little later.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Surely the gentleman from South Dakota has not forgotten the fact that the President of the United States was forced to veto a bill and send it back to this House because he said that we had not given sufficient money to do the very thing which the gentleman from South Dakota now complains of. The gentleman will remember that this side of the House tried to add $4,000,000 to the bill, and the gentleman's side of the House defeated us each time, as the record will show.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If I remember correctly, the gentleman is mistaken; that was for vocational training.

Mr. BLANTON. It was for the rehabilitation of the soldiers of the land.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It was not for hospitals.

The officer of the day, Capt. Charles O. Latham, Medical Corps, while making his prescribed inspection of the mess, discovered that the meat component had become exhausted, and took no action other than to bring the matter to the attention of the commanding officer the following morning in a written report covering his tour of duty. He made no inquiries as to whether more meat was to be served and did not report the incident to the mess authorities. Capt. Latham heard the men pound on the table with their dishes and call for more meat, but he did not consider it of sufficient importance to take any action other than that above mentioned. He stated that there was plenty of other food, and that is was unnecessary for anyone to leave the mess hall hungry. The mess sergeant stated that as soon as he was informed of the shortage he ordered 100 pounds of beefsteak to be prepared. He then went to the mess hall and informed the men who had not received meat to remain quiet and seated and assured them they would receive all the meat they wished. He also went through the corridors and announced to the men whom he found there that if any of them failed to receive meat they should go to the mess hall where ample would be served.

In addition to this report the colonel arrived at the following conclusions and submitted them to the Secretary of War:

The inspector found a number of unsatisfactory conditions at General Hospital No. 28, with particular reference to the condition of enamel ware in use in the mess and to the uncleanly and untidy condition of the kitchens and mess halls. He also received complaints bearing upon unsatisfactory food conditions at the hospital. Not only were such complaints received from enlisted men but from nurses as well. In fact, the complaints of the latter were the strongest, the principal one being that the food is cold when served. A list of all of these irregularities and deficiencies was furnished by the inspector to the commanding officer of the hospital.

And from those conclusions he made the following recommendations:

It also appears that, while the officer of the day is required to inspect all meals and eat at least one each day with the patients, this duty has been, in many instances, but perfunctorily performed, if at all. The inspector found that the temporary officers assigned to General Hospital No. 28 are practically worthless, as far as administration is concerned. They are not interested in their work and have been disciplined from time to time. The failure of the officer of the day to take immediate and proper corrective measures on Sunday, December 7, is typical of a lack of judgment, intelligence, and initiative in the matter of insuring proper conditions in the mess.

I shall not attempt to dispute any part of the Inspector General's report, because he admits the truth of the complaint, and has, in my opinion, attempted to remedy the situation. But when I can find, on a casual visit, that a condition of this kind could exist in an Army hospital, and men who testify it was of common occurrence, there is something wrong.

Since that time I have gone through other Army hospitals with a photographer, and I make the statements made at the beginning of these remarks, with the photographs and evidence to prove them.

The photograph, which I have marked No. 1, is a photograph of a little 10-foot square bathroom at a Marine hospital at 4133 Clarendon Avenue, Chicago, which is the only place that the patients there can have to make baskets or lamps or do the other work that men want to do to keep time from hanging too heavily on their hands. In that bathroom 10 men are supposed to work, and it would be crowded if 3 men were there at one time. The men in this picture are James E. Blackstone, of the Black Watch, British, sent there by the British consul, and Charles Haas, who saw service at Camp Gordon, and who resides at 153 Institute Place, Chicago.

It is an outrage that the 150 men in this hospital are, because of the neglect of the high officials of this Government, not given a place and opportunity to do what little work they can and want to do.

Picture No. 2 is a dark hallway in the officers' quarters in the Marine Hospital, and in the bed is Harry Flemming, Company D, One hundred and twenty-ninth Infantry, of the Thirtieth Division, who resides at No. 30 South Lincoln Street, Aurora, Ill., in the district of Representative COPLEY. Harry Flemming, this soldier, was gassed in the Argonne, and so badly gassed that he needs treatment to-day, more than a year after the armistice. The presumption is always raised in the minds of every doctor and of every man who saw gas or its effects that a man's lungs are affected, and it is an outrage that, because of the negligence or hard-heartedness of the high officials of the Government service that I have named, that this boy is compelled to lie there day after day and hour after hour in this hallway, where no ray of sunlight ever has or ever will be permitted to enter, with the continual hurly-burly of a hospital hall to keep him awake or disturb him.

And I think Harry Flemming was taking his medicine like a good soldier, without complaint, perhaps not realizing that he was entitled to better treatment than that which he was receiving, and perhaps believing that the treatment meted out to him in France as an enlisted man is a criterion of what would be given him in this country as a civilian.

I wish that Newton D. Baker or Carter Glass or Rupert Blue, or the one of them that is responsible for the fact that not one dollar of the appropriation that we have made has been expended since March 3, 1919, for new hospital buildings, or who is responsible for the fact that not one single bed has been added to our hospital facilities since that appropriation has been made, would justify the placing of this gassed boy in this hallway or would justify the fact that the money we have appropriated has not been expended.

I should like to have one of them, or whichever one is responsible, say that the deaths that will come from this treatment will not be directly chargeable to the men who do not expend the money.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not mean to say that a dollar has not been spent on these hospitals?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not for new hospitals.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman is mistaken. The records of the Public Health Service will show that the gentleman is not correct.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds show that the Speedway Hospital could have been completed in 60 days, furnishing 2,000 beds, but not a single thing has been done to forward the work for over six months, and a special statute had to be enacted in order to stir them up.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. So far as the special statute declared, $3,000,000 should be spent on the condition that the contractor would accept the contract and specifications, but to-day the contractor is refusing to sign the agreement to complete the contract for $3,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I challenge that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In picture No. 3 is Frank Hoppe, of 1003 North Lincoln Street, Chicago. This picture shows four beds in another dark hallway in the Marine Hospital in Chicago. Every patient, every doctor, every nurse that walks back and forth from one part of this hospital to the other must pass directly by the four beds. The other three men are able to walk around and get a little fresh air, but although I was there in the middle of the day I know that the only light that Frank Hoppe receives he gets from the electric light, which is directly over his head. And if that is any way to take care of a patient in any hospital in the world I do not know it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In regard to this picture of the dark hallway, it does not show that it was taken by any flashlight, so it seems that the dark hallway was light enough to have the photograph taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is mistaken; it was taken by a flashlight. I was standing there when the picture was taken. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. It does not show in the picture.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will tell the gentleman and that will settle it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman from Texas expect that the picture would show the flashlight itself?

Mr. BLANTON. Usually they do. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Picture No. 4 shows ward C of the Marine Hospital aforesaid, and is a good ward as wards go, except for the fact that it is overcrowded and the men there do not receive the air they need; but taking picture No. 5 in connection with No. 4, you will find a situation that every red-blooded man in the United States would resent, because No. 5 shows a small alcove running out of No. 4, where venereal men suffering from loathsome diseases are kept in immediate proximity to men who have been wounded and are ill.

Again, this little alcove with only three beds in it was, at the time I was in Chicago, the only place in that hospital that had been set aside for influenza patients—a flood of which were expected—and it was taken away from them and turned over to these men suffering from infectious diseases.

The hospital numbers of the men to whom I refer are 10009, 11040, and 12165. I do not care to state their names.

Since the day I was there they have had 70 influenza cases in this hospital with three deaths, and there is absolutely no way to segregate those patients who were suffering from influenza.

The mixing of these two classes of patients may be justified by Cabinet officers, but I think they would resent it if one of their sons were compelled to live in the same ward with anyone suffering from any disease of this kind.

Picture No. 6 shows ward No. 505 at Public Health Hospital No. 2, at 4659 Drexel Boulevard, Chicago. This ward has a capacity of 9 beds, but at the present time there are 20 beds with 20 patients in this small space. At the present time in that hospital there are over 100 beds more than regulations provide for, and unless some provision is made at once there will be thousands of boys in that section of the United States who can not receive any treatment.

No. 7 is a typical ward at this hospital. It has a capacity of 70 patients and 80 or 85 beds. The men with wheel chairs, who are living in that ward, can hardly make their way up and down the corridors between the beds. None of them are objecting to the treatment, because they happen to be in a hospital that is as well conducted, I think, as any hospital in the United States, and by as good a man as there is in the United States. And they know that fact and do not make complaint.

When I found these terrible conditions existing I commenced to make inquiry as to why the money Congress appropriated on March 3, 1919, was not expended, and there seems to be no valid reason.

In Public, No. 326, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, on page 2, I find that the Secretary of the Treasury was instructed to take over a hospital which was being built in Chicago, known as the Broad View Hospital; that the Secretary failed to comply with this law; and that in July, 1919, he was instructed to acquire it; and on December 24, 1919, again instructed to acquire it. I find that the Surgeon General a few months ago—to be exact, the 24th of June, 1919—stated that the Broad View Hospital was too large for hospital purposes. And yet on December 17 of last year he comes before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee and asks for $85,000,000. Personally I should be in favor of giving him twice $85,000,000 if it was necessary, but when you find that on March 3, 1919, we gave him $9,500,000, none of which has apparently been expended, it seems it is useless to appropriate money.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With reference to this Broad View Hospital, does the gentleman know that right now the Bureau of Public Health Service is refusing to go ahead with this proposition in Chicago, and that the Secretary of the Treasury is refusing to go ahead with the proposition, and that they are dillydallying for the purpose of getting rooms for attendants and nurses and doctors, instead of getting rooms for soldiers?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that not only am I familiar with that, but at the present time the commandant of the two hospitals in Chicago has been requested to make a report upon the advisability of expending $800,000 for an old hotel building, which is shown in this picture, with the idea of making that a hospital—the most absurd thing that has ever been conceived by any public official.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know that the gentleman would not want to misstate the facts. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] who just spoke, when the Speedway Hospital matter was up, told me in reply to my question that he would never ask for an appropriation of an additional dollar for that hospital.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And he is not asking for it, but simply asking that——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I refuse to be interrupted by the gentleman—and the fact is that the Secretary of the Treasury is writing a letter to Congress advising the Congress that while that law directed him to sign the contract with the Shank Co. for an expenditure for the construction of this hospital not to exceed $3,000,000—and he stated he is ready to do it—the contractor refuses to sign the contract unless he is given permission to charge an amount over and above $3,000,000, and that the Secretary under the law possibly can not do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I must disagree very radically with the gentleman. The facts are that they are ready to sign, and the Secretary refuses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman say that I am not correct in saying that the act provides that he shall do it, provided the amount does not exceed $3,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is correct in that statement, but why does he not do it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because the contractor refuses to sign that contract, and the Secretary of the Treasury has put it up to him time and again.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I must disagree with the gentleman, and state that the contractors, Shank & Co., have gone to the Secretary of the Treasury day after day and urged him to sign that contract, and instead of doing that he writes notes to Congress.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. And I want to reaffirm the statement just made by the gentleman from South Dakota, that the contractor has again and again expressed his readiness to sign for the $3,000,000, and that the department refuses to act.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I believe that the figures will show that we will need 30,000 beds within the next two years for men who suffered by reason of this war.

In the office of the Surgeon General they tell me that there will be 7,448 mental and nervous cases in Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and 3,540 tubercular cases, and I believe the figures are correct. But they could come in with cleaner hands if they would give the reason for the direct refusal to comply with the mandatory acts of Congress ordering them to take over this great Broad View Hospital, which would have given 2,500 more beds months ago.

I know very little concerning the facts of the Broad View Hospital except as I have discovered them from official documents. But from reading the hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate of the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, from reading hearing No. 13 of the hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of this session, I can not escape the conclusion that men highly connected with the present administration have refused to build and accept this hospital because of some personal feeling toward Mr. Edward Hines, who lives in Chicago, or some one connected with him.

The Inspector General of the Army says affirmatively that the building of this hospital will cost Mr. Hines or his associates $750,000, and when I find that they will not accept that contribution there must be something radically wrong. That statement is found on page 1088 of the hearings before the Senate committee and is as follows:

> That the carrying out of the Speedway project as proposed by the Shank Co. and backed by Mr. Edward Hines involved a loss or contribution by these interests of an amount approximately $750,000. That the purpose of Mr. Hines in furthering the project was the patriotic and commendable one of providing a permanent, modern, fireproof hospital in place of the temporary, nonfireproof structures utilized in various localities for that purpose, generously inspired by the loss of his son, Lieut. Edward Hines, who died in the service after three months in a hospital in France. That Mr. George H. Shank, president of the Shank Co., is entitled to share with Mr. Hines in the credit of the undertaking, for the proposal included no remuneration in any form to him, either as profit, commission, or other personal compensation, and he had voluntarily proposed to Mr. Hines to share in proportion to his interest in the property the loss on the investment by reason of the undertaking.

I happen to have no personal interest in Chicago and no interest in anyone connected with Chicago, except as I would have the same interest in anyone in the United States, but when I read this record and find that Edward Hines, because of the fact that he lost a son in the service, has been willing to suffer a loss of three-quarters of a million dollars of his own money to insure that the comrades of his son, who saw service in France, may have hospital treatment, and that he is prevented from doing so by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury, it shakes my faith in human nature.

That is a statement of a representative of the administration. I find that Mr. Hines is the only millionaire in the United States who lost a son in this war, and he is willing to build a memorial for the comrades of that son. Not only do they refuse to build hospitals but they will not accept a hospital that a man wants to build as a memorial to his son.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I want to add just there that the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has expressed a willingness to accept this contract on condition that Congress would add two millions and a half more for other buildings.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That statement is borne out by the record and by the documents that I have quoted.

I can not understand how any man, by reason of political or personal dislike of any individual, would prohibit the soldiers of the United States Army from securing the hospital facilities that they need. The record is clear that these men have refused such hospital facilities, although it does not disclose their reasons.

In conclusion, I can only say that the responsibility for the deaths that come on account of lack of hospital facilities—and such deaths are now coming—will be directly chargeable to the men who did not proceed to spend the money we have appropriated in the way it was ordered to be expended, and to do it at once. It is more cruel to cause the death of a man by depriving him of hospital facilities, which his condition demands, than it is to shoot him.

I can only say that it is the duty of every Member of Congress to investigate the hospital facilities in his own section of the country. If these conditions which I found personally there and which I have proved in these remarks can exist in the vicinity of Chicago, it ought to put every American citizen on notice to look at the hospital facilities in every other section of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use three minutes in explanation of my statement with reference to the Shank contract. There certainly is no reason for any difference as to the facts. My information came from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass. He told me that when he attempted to comply with the act of Congress directing him to sign the contract with Shank & Co., based on the specifications of September and October of last year, Shank & Co. refused to sign the contract unless he would agree that in addition to the $3,000,000 he would agree to pay to Shank & Co. a sum representing the increase in the cost of labor and material over and above what it was last September and October; and that he felt that under the provisions of the act he had no authority to do this; that he was limited to the $3,000,000; that he was, therefore, going to write a letter to the Congress setting forth these facts. Personally, I have no knowledge of the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of War could have closed that contract as soon as that act became a law in March, 1919, without the expenditure of an additional dollar?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not at all; because when the gentleman and I aided in passing that law, we provided that he should close the contract provided that for the amount of money appropriated he could build a hospital suited to the needs of the Public Health Service. That required that the Secretary of the Treasury first ascertain the needs of the Public Health Service. The statement as to their needs was sent to the Supervising Architect to determine whether or not such a building as would answer the needs of the Public Health Service could be constructed within the limit of cost.

Now, the gentleman knows, too, that in June last, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] showed on this floor—and I assisted him in showing it—we had more beds than we needed. Since that time the demand for beds has increased more than they ever anticipated, and, of course, the gentleman is entirely wrong in his statement that under that act they have not spent a dollar, because in the hearings, if he will turn to page 704, if he wants information on the subject, he will find a detailed list of the hospitals taken over and the number of beds in each. It will be enlightening.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am going to use two minutes more of my time.

Now, on page 704, the gentleman will find in the statement of Dr. Stimpson, in response to a question of Mr. GOOD as to whether or not he had taken over the seven hospitals involved in the act of March 13, to which the gentleman from South Dakota referred, the following:

Did you take over those seven hospitals?
Dr. STIMPSON. Yes; we took over 20 hospitals altogether from the Army, of which 17 are now being operated.
The CHAIRMAN. Have you a list of those hospitals for the record?
Dr. STIMPSON. Yes; I will put a list in the record.

(The list referred to is as follows:)

Hospital.	Location.	Bed capacity.	Number of patients on Dec. 20.
Now in operation:
Alexandria	Alexandria, La	500	233
Biltmore	Biltmore, N. C	400	114
Boston (general, No. 10)	Boston, Mass	300	258
Chicago, No. 2	Chicago, Ill	530	517
Dansville, N. Y	Dansville, N. Y	250	[1] 256
Camp Cody	Deming, N. Mex	850	[2]
East Norfolk	East Norfolk, Mass	230	64
Greenville	Greenville, S. C	800	766
New Haven	New Haven, Conn	470	435
Polyclinic	New York City, N. Y	310	252
Norfolk	Norfolk, Va	265	227
Palo Alto	Palo Alto, Calif	389	389
Parkview	Hoboken, Pa	500	248
Perryville	Perryville, Md	100	38
St. Louis, No. 4	St. Louis, Mo	605	325
West Roxbury	West Roxbury, Mass	300	[3] 8
Markleton	Markleton, Pa	250	[3]
Closed:
Camp Logan	Houston, Tex	850	.....
Camp Hancock	Augusta, Ga	850	.....
Camp Johnston	Jacksonville, Fla	830	.....

[1] Above capacity. [2] Just being opened. [3] Just opened.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not until I give you these lists. I can not add rapidly enough to tell you the total number of beds offhand.

Then, in addition to that, the chairman asked whether or not he had a statement showing the amount expended on each of these hospitals. He replied that he had. Then he went on to show the status of the money spent. Of the appropriation for $750,000, the expenditures authorized were $471,186, and the amounts allotted for expenditures were $200,987, leaving a balance of $77,826. That list follows:

Status of appropriation, $750,000, as authorized under public act 326, for construction work to be undertaken at projects transferred from Army, Navy, or other departments, and for items estimated for the continuation of activities mentioned in section 2 of the above-mentioned act, as of Dec. 26, 1919.

Project.	Allotted.	Authorized.	Unexpended allotment.	Estimated future requirements.
Technical services	$18,500.00	$18,500.00	.....	.....
Alexandria, La	75,000.00	32,563.49	$42,436.51	$25,000.00
Deming, N. Mex	.....	320.00	.....	20,000.00
Jacksonville, Fla	.....	1,148.50	.....	[1]
Houston, Tex	.....	125.25	.....	10,000.00
Palo Alto, Calif	80,000.00	18,314.22	61,685.78	.....
Perryville, Md	110,000.00	40,767.56	69,232.54	75,000.00
Greenville, S. C	87,000.00	280,094.84	.....	75,000.00
Cape May, N. J	.....	16,299.80	.....	10,000.00
Hoboken, Pa	24,000.00	13,045.00	10,955.00	10,000.00
Chicago, Ill	5,000.00	3,479.14	1,520.00	.....
Corpus Christi, Tex	5,000.00	62.95	4,937.05	.....
Dansville, N. Y	5,000.00	6,070.00	.....	10,000.00
St. Louis, Mo. (2)	5,000.00	758.38	4,241.62	5,000.00
New Haven, Conn	8,000.00	2,021.22	5,978.78	25,000.00
West Roxbury, Mass	.....	1,952.80	.....	50,000.00
Augusta, Ga	.....	.....	.....	[1]
Helena, Mont	.....	.....	.....	100,000.00
Boise, Idaho	.....	.....	.....	75,000.00
East Norfolk, Mass	.....	.....	.....	10,000.00
Norfolk, Va	.....	35,582.49	.....	.....
Markleton, Pa	.....	90.00	.....	.....
New projects to be taken over (1920)	.....	.....	.....	[2] 500,000.00
Total	432,500.00	471,186.64	200,987.18	1,000,000.00

[1] Salvaged. [2] Estimated.

Appropriation		$750,000.00
Expenditures authorized	$471,186.64
Amounts allotted for expenditure	200,987.18
		672,173.82
Balance		77,826.18

You will find on the next page—706—of the hearings a list of properties leased by or transferred to the Public Health Service, for which funds were spent for alterations—a detailed list, showing every place and exactly what was spent on each building. The hearing was replete with information, so complete, I am satisfied, that if the gentleman had seen it he would not have made the criticism he has.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is true, the gentleman will admit, the Secretary of the Treasury has not complied with the act of Congress ordering him to take over the Speedway Hospital.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because I have told you, and will tell you again, that the act says he can not spend over $3,000,000, and the contractor refuses to sign unless he receives, in addition to the $3,000,000, a sum representing the increase in the cost of labor and material over what it was last October. If the gentleman is authorized to speak for the contractor, I guarantee he can sign that contract in an hour if he will sign it without that provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It would be a wonderful thing to do.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman from South Carolina is convinced that the Secretary's refusal to sign, the failure to sign, is because the contractor refused to sign the contract authorized by the law, but puts additional conditions upon him, making additional costs, then has not the gentleman from South Dakota very much wronged the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say that the contractor has been ready and willing and anxious to sign. He has had his representative before the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War, day after day, since March, 1918.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the contractor in speaking, not to you, but in discussing the matter with the Secretary of the Treasury, did refuse to sign for the $3,000,000 provided by law—the only contract the Secretary can sign—if that be a fact, then you have done the Secretary of the Treasury an injustice.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No; I have not. The gentleman is proceeding along the wrong theory.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Secretary will sign if the contractor will sign the contract for the amount provided in the act.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. He could have done that any time since 1917.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will put his hand on the contractor, and he will sign a contract without the provisions such as I have stated, requiring the payment of money outside the limit of cost, the contract can be signed in an hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think the contractor is in Chicago.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. How do you know that the Secretary of the Treasury says what you have alleged?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. According to the reports.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Secretary of the Treasury has explained this thing to me as I have stated, and I know he tells the truth.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not think he does.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, permission for the printing of which was granted, is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 27, 1920.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Responding a little more definitely to your inquiry made a while ago over the phone, I desire to state that with reasonable promptness after the approval of the act of December 24, 1919, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire and complete the Speedway Hospital main building, with five auxiliary buildings, within the appropriation of $3,000,000 and in accordance with plans and specifications designated by the act, I directed the offices of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, in conjunction with the authorities of the Public Health Service, immediately to prepare for my signature a contract in literal compliance with the law. The owners of the Speedway property and the contractors, whose tentative proposals indicated a willingness to complete the main hospital building and the five auxiliary buildings within the limits of the $3,000,000 appropriation, were invited to a conference at the Treasury on January 8 to agree upon a form and the terms of a contract. No agreement was reached at the first conference, and negotiations were resumed next day. At these conferences it clearly appeared that the owners of the Speedway Hospital property and the contractors insisted upon relating any contract which should be drawn to the old contract of the Shank Co. proposed to be made with the War Department to meet a war emergency, but rejected by that department, and which contract the Supervising Architect's office insisted was neither essential nor adaptable to a contract such as was contemplated by the act of December 24, 1919.

The owners of the Speedway property and the contractors, themselves and through their attorneys, insisted that a provision should be embodied in the contract fixing some date from which increased costs should be computed for all materials and labor required in the work, and giving the contractors a status in the Court of Claims, apparently with the approval of the Treasury, to recover from the Government any and all costs in excess of the $3,000,000 appropriated by Congress. The owners of the property, the contractor, and their attorney, according to a written report of the conference furnished me, were asked the specific question if they would sell the property, complete the main building, and construct the five auxiliary buildings according to the plans and specifications and within the $3,000,000 limitation provided by law. They answered decisively in the negative.

When the result of these various negotiations was reported to me I instantly gave instructions to the law department and the Supervising Architect's office of the Treasury to immediately have prepared a contract in strict compliance with the statute for the acquirement and completion of the Speedway Hospital project, to be promptly submitted to the owners of the property and the proposed contractors for the work. The contract thus directed to be drawn was prepared by the architect's office, approved by the law officer of the department, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and submitted to the owners of the Speedway Hospital property and the Shank Co., contractors, on January 22, and there the matter rests. There has not been a minute since Congress directed the purchase and completion of this enterprise under designated plans and specifications within a limit of $3,000,000 that the Secretary of the Treasury has not been willing and anxious to execute with the owners and contractors a contract for the proposition in literal compliance with the statute; and of this fact the owners and contractor, as well as their attorney, are perfectly well aware.

Replying to your inquiry as to what has been done under the act authorizing the appropriation of $9,000,000 for hospital purposes, as indicated above, a $3,000,000 contract has been prepared and sent to the owners and proposed contractors for the Speedway Hospital at Chicago.

(2) At Dawsonsprings, Ky., plans and specifications for a sanatorium with a capacity of 500 beds were submitted and bids obtained which exceeded the limit of the authorized appropriation. These plans were revised and other bids obtained, which, I am advised, are being to-day considered in the architect's office. A contract has been awarded at the Dawsonsprings project for a road on a yardage basis, estimated to cost $120,000, and is 66 per cent completed.

(3) In the matter of the hospital at Norfolk, Va., a portion of the site has been transferred by the War Department to the Treasury Department. The remaining portion is to be acquired by condemnation, and working drawings for the hospital are well under way.

(4) At the New York Marine Hospital a contract has been awarded for a kitchen and mess hall amounting to $159,902.87, leaving a balance of about $40,000 for alteration and remodeling of existing and authorized buildings.

(5) Of the appropriation of $150,000 for a general hospital at Corpus Christi, Tex., $120,000 has been expended in its purchase.

(6) Of the sum of $1,500,000 authorized to be expended for the purchase of land and buildings suitable for hospitals $450,000 has been expended for the purchase and remodeling of the buildings at Waukesha, Wis.; $350,000 has been expended for the purchase and remodeling of a receiving hospital at Hudson and Jay Streets, New York City; $175,000 has been expended for the purchase and alteration of a small hospital at Atlanta, Ga.; $150,000 has been expended for the purchase and remodeling of a general hospital at Lake City, Fla.; $36,885 has been set aside for technical services, making a total of $1,161,885 of this appropriation allotted, leaving a balance of $338,115. Of the $750,000 authorized to be expended in the remodeling of hospitals transferred by the other departments of the Government, principally the Army and Navy, all has been expended except $77,826.18. Of the $550,000 appropriated for a hospital plant within the District of Columbia none has been spent, for the reason that the department has been unable to secure a satisfactory site on Government property, as required by law; but I have asked authority from Congress to use the fund to purchase a site not on Government land. Meanwhile the department has been compelled to rent hospital facilities out of the general fund.

Very truly, yours,
CARTER GLASS.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCKENZIE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution which appropriates $1,000,000 for the investigation and prevention of influenza; and

S. 3722. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill H. R. 4382, entitled "An act to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to myself on this question.

When this matter was before the committee, we attempted to find out what the situation was with regard to the Speedway Hospital, but the Public Health Service could only tell us that the question of the Speedway Hospital was then under consideration by the Shank Co. and the Secretary of the Treasury. Since this debate started one of the clerks from the Committee on Appropriations has brought me the copy of a letter signed by the Shank Co., under date of January 7, 1920, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, I do not personally know anything about the controversy, but Mr. Bennet, formerly a Member of this House, called to see me day before yesterday. He represents the Shank Co. He said after this matter was taken up here a week or two ago the question was as to whether or not the Public Health Service was going to get two large elevators for this hospital, and the trouble was that those elevators were not specified in the contract. Mr. Shank spoke up and said, "How much do you estimate they will cost?" My recollection is that it was represented they would cost $40,000 or $50,000. Mr. Shank said, "We will put them in and give them to you." The question then was as to electric-light fixtures. The Shank Co. had held that it was not a part of the construction to give a part of the fixtures; that they were to cost about $26,000; and Mr. Shank said, "If you will allow me to substitute, where you have specified solid brass and solid bronze, the kind of hardware the ordinary business man or hospital would put in, I will put in the light fixtures without cost, although it is not specified in the contract. And he further agreed, so Mr. Bennet told me, to sign the contract and let the Secretary rearrange the interior in any way he wanted, and he would complete it within $3,000,000. I do not know anything about it, but here is a letter from the Shank Co. to the Secretary that is altogether different from what I understand the Secretary's attitude is.

It is addressed to the Hon. Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, and reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 7, 1920.

HON. CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our letter of October 16, 1919, in which we propose to complete the Broadview Hospital, at Chicago, in accordance with the plans of July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919—

While I do not have these dates in mind, yet my recollection is that those are the dates of the plans referred to in the legislation. I read further from the letter:

for the sum authorized therefor by statute, and having been informed that because of the recent legislation it is desired to substitute for the plans of three of the sections plans constructing those sections for personnel, we take pleasure in stating that we will construct those sections according to the plans which will later be submitted to us by your department under our bid. In order to save any question, we state that we are making this offer before any detailed plans whatever have been drawn and agreeing in advance to accept such detailed plans when drawn.

We trust that this concession on our part will permit the immediate signing of the contract.

If the contract is signed, we can then be proceeding with the auxiliary buildings and the four sections which are unchanged, while the detailed changes of the three remaining sections are being completed.

Yours, very truly,

SHANK CO.,
By GEO. H. SHANK, President.

Now, I repeat, I know nothing about this personally.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. GOOD. The 7th of January.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury to me was that he believed the contract was to be signed, and my recollection is that it was prepared for signature, and when it was prepared and presented to him this statement was made about the inclusion of an agreement to cover any increase in the cost of labor over and above the specifications of the contract of October 1.

Mr. GOOD. I know nothing about it except what Mr. Bennet himself told me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield one minute more to myself, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bennet further stated to me that after everything was agreed upon, after the conference with Mr. Moyle, that Mr. Moyle was willing to sign the contract, but told Mr. Bennet he would come back in the morning, as he would have to see Mr. Glass. When he returned the next day Mr. Moyle told him that the Secretary would not sign the contract, because the Secretary wanted a new contract drawn and would not sign the old contract. Now, as I said, I do not know anything personally about this controversy, but I am unable to harmonize the letter just read with the Secretary's claim.

Mr. KITCHIN. I submit that the letter itself, of January 7, shows that the contractors were demanding a contract in excess of the former arrangement.

Mr. GOOD. No. They say right in the letter "within the authorized limit of cost."

Mr. KITCHIN. That is, provided they would take some reductions that they wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the present status of the Chicago hospital, although I have had occasion, as a member of the Committee on Rules, to learn a good deal about its history in the past. I also have some other hospital history, and I think that in order to keep the record straight, in view of the charges and intimations of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], it would be well for gentlemen here to refresh their memories concerning it.

The war-risk insurance bill, as it originally passed, provided that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors should be assured of proper hospital treatment, and that duty was imposed by the terms of the law, which was passed unanimously, upon the Public Health Service, which is under the Treasury Department of the United States. In pursuance of that policy the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department began to seek for sites quite early, some of them before the armistice was signed, and among other places one was definitely settled upon, and that was a point in the State of Kentucky called Dawsonsprings.

A bill was introduced and reported favorably as an independent bill, I think unanimously, from the committee having it in charge, to appropriate for and to construct a hospital for those discharged soldiers and sailors, to be under the direction of the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department, at Dawsonsprings, Ky.

That bill went to its place on the calendar. Effort after effort was made to get it up for consideration in the House by unanimous consent. It was objected to by the then minority leader of the House, the present honorable Speaker of this House of Representatives, until finally it became necessary for the Committee on Rules to bring in a special rule making that in order, either as an independent measure or as an amendment upon an appropriation bill—I have forgotten which for the moment. That was brought in unanimously from the Committee on Rules, but when it reached the floor of the House it met objection and opposition here. Gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber opposed that bill upon its original passage, principally, so far as I could determine, simply because the hospital was to be located in the State of Kentucky, and it passed by an almost strict party vote, as I recall.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, it was expected that other hospitals would be located in other sections of the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman remember what kind of a hospital that was?

Mr. GARRETT. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was for tubercular patients, and the opposition was based on the ground that that was not a proper place for it.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Iowa got that idea in his head at the time, and he never has gotten it out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GARRETT. Tubercular cases were referred to, and that site was recommended by the Public Health Service for that reason. But the gentleman from Iowa was always in error and, apparently, he is still in error in the belief that it was to be exclusively for tubercular cases.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman read the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on the Dawsonsprings project?

Mr. GARRETT. I have not read the recent hearings. But I am recounting the facts of that transaction now, in view of the statement made here by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. This is the site which the experts of the Public Health Service selected.

Now, what happened? We passed that bill, and it passed the Senate and it became a law, and during this Congress, after the political complexion of the House had changed, just before the end of the last fiscal year, on that very day that the fiscal year closed, gentlemen from the Committee on Appropriations came before this House with a proposition to repeal this legislation establishing this hospital at Dawsonsprings, along with other legislation, and I am justified from what occurred then in stating that it was only because of the fact that certain gentlemen upon that side, members of the Committee on Rules, were out of the city, and it was requisite for the Democrats on that committee to furnish a quorum, that that hospital was not destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman desires, I will yield him five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. I know the gentleman wants to be accurate in his statement. The proposition before the Committee on Rules was to submit the whole question to the House before final action was taken. The proposition was not to repeal the legislation.

Mr. GARRETT. It was designed to stop the work, just as a provision put into the bill and voted for, I think, thoughtlessly by many to stop the payment for purchases of land taken for Army purposes. Had it not been for the facts which I have recited, that would have been stopped.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I was not in the last House. Was it contemplated that the hospital at Dawsonsprings, Ky., would care for tubercular patients and for other classes of patients also?

Mr. GARRETT. It was.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe it is wise and in accordance with modern practice to mix tubercular patients with other patients in the same hospital?

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, the hospital was to be arranged and, according to the authorities, that could be done—I am not an expert upon the question—but, according to the authorities of the Public Health Service, who are charged with this responsibility, and who, I take it, would not wish to do any wrong to any honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the United States, it could be properly arranged so that they could be taken care of there.

I have recited these facts, Mr. Chairman, simply in order that the record may be kept straight. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say that I have no quarrel with anybody anywhere about where the hospital facilities are located. I have no quarrel with those who wanted Dawsonsprings, or with those who wanted Broadview, or with those who wanted hospitals in any other place; but I have been deeply interested in having sufficient facilities afforded wherever they might be needed to accommodate the men who contracted either wounds or disease in the military service.

I was interested in reading the hearings, covering several hundred pages, on the pending bill, and to notice that the hospital which was authorized at Dawsonsprings is not yet under construction, but that some time early last May an engineer named Graff was sent to Dawsonsprings to make a topographical survey of the grounds donated to the Government upon which this hospital for tubercular patients is to be located. And in connection with the service which Mr. Graff was sent to perform I notice that the hearings disclose the fact that he was directed to get into communication with a man named Troendle. It seems that Mr. Troendle is the "Pooh-Bah" of Dawsonsprings; that he is somewhat identified with the proposed hotel which is to be located there as a summer resort; that he is also the president or controlling owner and chief managing director of the Brandenberg Construction Co. and the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. as well.

Before Mr. Graff went to Dawsonsprings he was told that he would find Mr. Troendle a very accommodating gentleman, and that if he was unable to find office facilities in Dawsonsprings he might feel sure that he would be accommodated in Mr. Troendle's office; and I believe Mr. Graff finally accepted the tender of office space in the office of Mr. Troendle. He was directed to make a topographical survey of the land which had been given to the Government. He was told that Mr. Troendle had been very kind in the matter of donating part of the money contributed by the citizens of that neighborhood to those who originally owned the land before the donation was made to the Government, and Mr. Graff after having made some attempt to get men to make the survey that he went there to make, and being unable to get men, called on Mr. Troendle, or the Brandenberg Construction Co., and finally recommended the award of a contract to them to make the survey on the basis of about 55 cents per acre. Later on it developed that it was necessary to construct a highway over which the supplies and materials that might be needed in the construction of the buildings later to be erected would have to be hauled.

It was disclosed also that the Brandenberg Co., through Mr. Troendle, said to Mr. Graff that Mr. Moyle, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Perry, the directing engineer of the Public Health Service, and somebody else connected with the Public Health Service as assistant to the Surgeon General, were his friends and that he was to be given any contract that might be let, regardless of what the contract price should be; and while Mr. Graff did recommend that a contract be let for the topographical survey and did make an estimate of what it would cost to build the highway, which runs for a distance of about 2 miles through hilly ground, some of which has to have cuts and some fills, he did not recommend that any contract be let to the Brandenberg or the Dawsonsprings Construction Co.; but he discovered that in connection with and supplemental to the contract for the topographical survey, which really amounted to very little in dollars, the Public Health Service here made a contract for the construction of the highway over a totally different line of survey than that recommended by Mr. Graff, to the Brandenberg or to the Dawsonsprings Co., either one of which is the same as the other, and both controlled and operated and directed by Mr. Troendle, and that the price at which the contract was let amounted to about $31,500 a mile more than the estimated cost to the Government, as suggested by the Government representative. And the Government representative in his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations says that he was not consulted about letting contracts to these people, but was directed that they should be permitted to proceed with the work. And that is not all; but the Brandenberg Construction Co., through Mr. Troendle, are not only permitted to do the contract work at double the cost estimated by the Government representatives, but they are also permitted to do their own surveying, their own engineering work, to make their own estimates of the quantities of material taken from the cuts and placed in the fills; and that whereas the Illinois Central Railroad Co. are paying $1.20 a cubic yard for taking out rock in that neighborhood along the cuts for the extension of their own railway, the Government of the United States is paying $4.50 a yard for that same kind of rock work.

Mr. Graff, who is the Government engineer, says that he estimated the cost of this rock work at $2.50 a yard, and yet the Public Health Service, charged with the responsibility of spending the people's money for facilitating the care of the sick, wounded, and dying men who served in the war, goes about squandering the people's money in this reckless and unjustifiable manner.

Now, I do not know of what use it is to appropriate money for the care of soldiers and place the disposition of that money in charge of men who have no regard for its proper expenditure.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to advise the gentleman from Illinois that this gentleman at Dawsonsprings about whom he has been talking so much is one of the biggest political leaders that the Republican Party has in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. MADDEN. I would not care what he was or where he was or who he was if his action was not in conformity with strict justice and integrity.

I do not care whether he is a Republican, a Democrat, or a Socialist. I do not care who he is or who his friends are. He could not spend this money out of the Public Treasury unless somebody in charge of the money authorized him to do it. How can Troendle be blamed? He is a private citizen.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. When the Surgeon General and the representative of the Shank Co. were before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House he offered to sign the contract for the $3,000,000, but the Surgeon General refused unless $2,500,000 more should be appropriated by Congress for additional buildings that they were demanding.

Mr. MADDEN. I am making no charge against Mr. Troendle or any other man. What I am doing is criticizing the reckless, useless waste of public money by public officials who are sworn to an honest discharge of their duties.

Of course, if they are so little interested in the conservation of the health of those who gave everything they had to their country in the hour of its direst need as to squander the money set apart for their care in such a way as this, they are unfit to occupy the high places which they occupy.

There is not a large amount of money involved in this; it amounts to $65,000 for 2 miles of road construction—more than it should amount to. But on the same principle that it is wrong to squander millions, it is equally wrong to squander thousands. If this policy has been pursued—and the evidence shows it to be the fact—in respect to the expenditure of this small preliminary sum, what do you suppose will happen when they begin the construction and before they complete the buildings? I have no doubt whatever but that Dawsonsprings is an ideal spot for a tuberculosis hospital. It is in the hills, surrounded by all the attractions of nature—pure air, good water, and everything to be desired—and we are in the position of having not begun the work for which the money has long since been appropriated; but that particular work in road construction has been begun badly, for here the money of the people, intended for the care of the sick and the wounded American soldier, has been squandered and wasted without any consideration as to what effect its waste would have on the care of these men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks the privilege of extending his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am very much impressed with the seriousness with which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has addressed you, showing his anxiety at this late day for the care and comfort of the disabled, discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has also addressed you today and in his address criticized the Bureau of Public Health Service and the Secretary of the Treasury for not furnishing sufficient hospital facilities for these soldiers. It comes with bad grace for the Republican members of this House to criticize the Secretary of the Treasury, the Bureau of Public Health Service; or anyone else, for the insufficient hospital facilities for these boys, because when this legislation was before Congress from time to time during the period of October, 1918, to March, 1919, practically every Republican member of Congress did all he could to prevent this legislation. Now, when the situation presents itself as serious, as predicted at that time by the Bureau of Public Health Service and the Secretary of the Treasury, these gentlemen become very solicitous about the welfare of these unfortunate boys.

On the 11th of September, 1918, I introduced a bill to establish a sanatorium for disabled, discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines at Dawsonsprings, Ky., and at that time the patriotic people in and around Dawsonsprings pledged themselves to give to the Government 5,000 acres of land in fee simple if the Government would erect this hospital there.

This bill received the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and went on the calendar. We then went before the Rules Committee of the House, and this committee reported a rule which gave it a privileged status. This was in the fall of 1918, just before the closing day of Congress; and when this rule was called up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who had the matter in charge, the then minority leader and present Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], raised the point of no quorum, and the result was that by the concerted efforts of the Republican side of the House the bill was delayed until after the November election. When Congress convened in December, 1918, the bill was brought up for consideration, and there was a concerted effort of the Republicans of the House then to defeat this bill, and the only Republican Member of the House who was friendly to it, who was present during the consideration of this bill, was the gentleman from Tennessee, the late Hon. Dick Austin. This bill became a law in spite of the concerted efforts of the Republican side of the House; and now the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] comes ready to shed crocodile tears in behalf of the disabled, discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and criticizes every effort of the Bureau of Public Health Service to expedite the building of this sanatorium at Dawsonsprings. He makes broad charges of extravagance, if not fraud; and on what ground does he make the charge?

Mr. MADDEN. On the ground of evidence before the committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. On the sole testimony of Maj. Graff, who was at that time representing the Bureau of Public Health Service there, but who is no longer in the service.

The ground for this sanatorium is situated 2½ miles from the city of Dawsonsprings, Ky. First and foremost, we tried to get the Illinois Central Railroad to run a switch to the site. I went before the Railroad Administration and others went before the Illinois Central Railroad Co., but they refused to build it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I can not yield now. We then thought we might get the Army people at Camp Knox to come down and build the road for the Government. I am not here in the interest of any contractor. I have no pecuniary interest in this matter whatever, but I am anxious to see this hospital built at once, for it should have been built long ago and would have been if it had not been for the filibuster on the part of the Republican side of this House.

The Dawsonsprings Construction Co. has been the lowest bidder on every bid submitted. There has never been anything to conceal in the whole transaction, and in view of the fact that this company has been the lowest bidder on all bids it is entitled to these contracts. The Bureau of Public Health Service sent this man Graff to Dawsonsprings, and unfortunately his name is spelled G-r-a-f-f, without the "t." He went there to have the surveying done in order that the plans and specifications could be drawn as quickly as possible. He was unable to get any surveyors to do the work, even after trying the Government surveyors at Camp Knox. The Dawsonsprings Construction Co., of which Mr. T. R. Troendle is the head, did not want to build the road and cared nothing about the surveying contract, except to expedite the work as much as possible. Finally the Bureau of Public Health Service submitted plans for bids for this survey, and the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. was the lowest bidder, and this man Graff himself recommended the acceptance of its bid, as the hearings will show and as he admits on cross-examination by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. MADDEN. That was for the survey.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I decline to yield and do not want these interruptions to be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. made the survey. The question of road building then came up, after failing to get the railroad company or the Railroad Administration to build the spur track. Bids were submitted, and the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. got the contract to build over 2 miles of the road—that is, the grubbing, removing of dirt and rock—and up to December 31 the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. lost over $23,000 on that job. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], if he will get some one to finish this we will not only turn it over, but will stand half the expense.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean that he is interested in it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I am speaking for the people down there who gave these 5,000 acres. No; I am not nearly as much interested in it as the gentleman is in some other propositions where much larger expenditures are to be made.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman specify something I am interested in.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am no more interested in it than the gentleman is in the Speedway Hospital at Chicago.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not interested in anything at all.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Neither am I, so we are even on this proposition. The patriotic people in and around Dawsonsprings, Ky., gave 5,000 acres of land to the Government upon which to erect this hospital, of which 400 acres was owned by the Simmons Hardware Co., and the Bureau of Public Health Service will tell you that they will get enough coal from this land not only to coal the hospital at Dawsonsprings but to coal the hospital in Chicago and every other hospital in the Public Health Service of the United States and save at least $1.50 per ton. Where are there any other people in the United States that have made as generous an offer as this to the Government?

This man Graff, on whose testimony you rely for the charges you make in criticizing the Bureau of Public Health Service and the Treasury Department, went to Mr. Troendle at Dawsonsprings for the purpose of making a proposition to him, which is thoroughly explained in an affidavit of Mr. Troendle, which is as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Columbia, ss:

The affiant, Theodore R. Troendle, states that he is president of the Dawsonsprings Construction Co.; and states that immediately after his company was given the contract for the grading of a part of the Government road extending from the Illinois Central tracks at Dawsonsprings, Ky., to the hospital site that Maj. Graff, engineer of the Bureau of Public Health, in charge of the work at Dawsonsprings, came to his office and said that he wanted to talk to him privately; that he said in this conversation that he thought this work should be done through him and not through the Washington office, and that if he, the said Troendle, would use his influence to have the executive part of this work done at Dawsonsprings, Ky., with him, the said Graff, in charge, that he, the said Graff, would "do business" with him. The affiant says that immediately upon the making of this statement by said Graff he declined to entertain this or any other proposition with the said Graff. The affiant further states that thereafter the said Graff became personally antagonistic to him and his company and held up vouchers for pay for the work being done there by his company for four months; that his company began the work on this road in May and did not receive the first payment on same until October, because the said Graff failed and refused to send the vouchers for same to the department here. The affiant further states that he was compelled to, and did, come to Washington in order to get the matter adjusted, so that his company could begin to draw pay for this work.

THEODORE R. TROENDLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Theodore R. Troendle this the 20th day of January, 1920.

[SEAL.] J. C. HAMMACK,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

My commission expires January 10, 1921.

Mr. Troendle, of course, refused to entertain this or any other proposition, and after the Dawsonsprings Construction

Co. began work there in May on the survey it never received a voucher for pay from this man Graff, and not a cent of money for this work was paid until the latter part of October, and not then until Mr. Troendle, at his own expense, came to Washington and explained the situation to the Bureau of Public Health Service and the Treasury Department. This same man Graff sent another man to a Mr. Gary, who is secretary of the Forbes Manufacturing Co., of Hopkinsville, Ky., and who was one of the bidders on some of these buildings, and said that if he would "do business" with him that he, Graff, would be with him, which proposition was, of course, refused by Mr. Gary, because there is no more reputable business concern in the United States than the Forbes Manufacturing Co. and no man of higher integrity than Mr. Gary.

The question I want you to consider is, Was this contract for the road work reasonable? After these hearings Mr. Perry, the chief architect of the Bureau of Public Health Service, went to the Bureau of Public Roads of the Agricultural Department here and asked them to send a special representative to Dawsonsprings to examine this road work and see whether this contract price was excessive. The department sent a man out of its office at Chicago, and on January 20, 1920, the Chicago office telegraphed the Agricultural Department here as follows:

SOUTH CHICAGO, ILL., January 20, 1920.

ROADS, AGRICULTURE, Washington:

Re tel Dawsonsprings, Toms reports contract prices reasonable, considering time of year work must be done, except that prices for clearing, grubbing, and solid rock may be rather hard (high). Clearing and grubbing practically completed. Solid rock 55 per cent completed. If present contract cancelled sure better prices could not be secured. Labor prices high. Teams $1 and labor 67 cents per hour. Report probably be mailed Thursday. Road not included in Federal aid program.

VOSHELL.

You will bear in mind that the contract let to the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. for this work was as follows:

Earth excavation, 95 cents per cubic yard.

Loose rock, $1.20 per cubic yard.

Solid rock, $4.50 per cubic yard.

As you will see from the hearings, Mr. Perry was asked on examination if he would not submit to the committee similar contract prices for work done at other places, which he did, as shown beginning on page 8 of the hearings, and some of which are as follows:

For the three lowest bids for sewers at Barberton, Ohio, June 15, 1919: Earth excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $2.10; (b) $1.25; (c) $1.30. Rock excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $4; (b) $5; (c) $3.50.

For the three lowest bids received at West Hartford, Conn., by the commissioner for constructing eight covered masonry filters, and so forth: Earth excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $1; (b) $1.10; (c) $1.35. Rock excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $5; (b) $4.25; (c) $3.42.

Roads at Providence, R. I.: Earth excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $0.95; (b) $1.35; (c) $1.40. Rock excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $3; (b) $4; (c) $4.30.

Three lowest bids for dam work for Gilboa, N. Y.: Earth excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $1.75; (b) $1.25; (c) $2.50. Rock excavation, per cubic yard, (a) $4; (b) $5; (c) $5.75. So we see from these bids submitted in other parts of the country that practically every one of them is higher than the bids accepted for this road work at Dawsonsprings by the Dawsonsprings Construction Co.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I can describe the difference between the different kinds of rock?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; the gentleman has never been to Dawsonsprings and does not know what character of work is there. He is undertaking to prejudice Congress and the country against these activities simply because they are at Dawsonsprings, Ky.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I know the kind of rock at both places.

Mr. KINCHELOE. My own opinion is that the gentleman would not know sandrock from limestone rock.

I bear no brief for the Secretary of the Treasury, Carter Glass, or any official of the Bureau of Public Health Service, because neither of them need it, and what I might say could not add to or detract from the splendid record they have made. Secretary Glass served the country with great distinction in this House for many years and has made one of the ablest and most efficient Secretaries of the Treasury this country has ever had, and in a short time will take his seat as United States Senator from the State of Virginia in the Federal Senate, where, in my judgment, still greater things are in store for him. I have had an opportunity to associate with and know Mr. Perry, chief architect of the Bureau of Public Health Service, intimately for the last 18 months. I have never known a more industrious, faithful, and conscientious official than he, and I would gladly trust him anywhere, and if the membership of this House will take the trouble to investigate his record since he has been the architect of the Bureau of Public Health Service, I am sure they will agree with me. Gen. Rupert Blue, Surgeon General of the Bureau of Public Health Service, has prepared a statement which explains the action of his department, not only in this but in other matters, which I gladly insert here:

STATEMENTS RELATIVE TO PUBLIC ACT NO. 326.

JANUARY 21, 1920.

Public act No. 326, approved March 3, 1919, authorized additional hospital facilities for the care and treatment of war-risk insurance and Public Health Service beneficiaries and appropriated $9,050,000 for specified projects, as follows:

For lease or contract with existing hospitals	$300,000
For the purchase of Army General Hospital No. 15 at Corpus Christi, Tex	150,000
For the purchase of land and buildings	1,500,000
Repair and remodeling of hospitals taken over from the War Department	750,000
For the purchase and completion of Broadview Hospital at Chicago, Cook County, Ill	3,000,000
For construction (on land donated to the Government) of a sanatorium at Dawsonsprings, Ky	1,500,000
For hospital at Norfolk, Va	900,000
For hospital (on Government land) at Washington, D. C	550,000
For additions to Marine Hospital, Stapleton, N. Y	190,000
For miscellaneous funds and equipment	210,000
	9,050,000

The need for additional hospital accommodations arose in connection with legislation known as the war-risk insurance act, which provides, among other things, hospital and other medical care and treatment for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, etc., and in addition the tremendously increased merchant marine, with which the Treasury Department is charged with the supply and administration of the above benefits, the hospitalization being delegated to the United States Public Health Service in conjunction with the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

The original bill presented to Congress provided a stipulated amount of money to build or otherwise acquire additional hospital accommodations wherever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, they would best meet the public exigency.

The bill approved March 3 specified specific projects, at the discretion of the Secretary.

Among those approved by the Secretary was the taking over of hospitals from the Army under section 2 of the act; the acquisition of General Hospital No. 15 at Corpus Crispi, Tex.; the purchase of Rest Haven Sanatorium at Waukesha, Wis.; the purchase of the House of Refuge, Hudson and Jay Streets, New York City, under section 6; construction at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y.; and numerous leasing projects under section 11; the acquisition of land at Dawsonsprings, Ky.; the effort to enter into contract for the acquisition and completion of the Speedway property at Chicago, Ill., under section 7.

In carrying out the provisions of the act of March 3, 1919, especially in connection with section 2, which appropriated $750,000 for remodeling hospitals taken over from the War Department and later the Navy Department, etc., it became necessary to request an additional sum of $1,000,000, in connection with which hearings were given by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, at which inquiry was made as to the status of each item mentioned in the bill, particularly in regard to Dawsonsprings, Ky.

On March 7, 1919, the Surgeon General in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that Dawsonsprings be approved as a location for a sanatorium, in line with the legislation, and stated, "This recommendation is founded on reports of inspection made by the medical adviser of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and representatives of the Public Health Service," and stated "that for the needs of the service there should be transferred to the Government two parcels of land comprising approximately 5,000 acres, consisting of 200 acres of coal land, situated on the north side of Dawsonsprings, and approximately 4,800 acres of land on the south side of Dawsonsprings." This recommendation was approved by the Secretary, the land actually donated consisting of 447 acres of coal land and 4,553 acres of other land suitable for a sanatorium, both located as above indicated.

In connection with the above legislation the Secretary, in a memorandum approved March 10, 1919, directed that the Public Health Service would be charged with the responsibility of selecting sites, the location of buildings thereon, the determination of the nature and extent of facilities desired for all new projects; that a hospital section be created in the Office of the Supervising Architect, whose duties it would be to prepare estimates, working drawings, and specifications for these projects, handling of contracts, and the supervision of construction in relation thereto.

In connection with the preliminary work on the Dawsonsprings project it was necessary to secure surveys of the land and arrange approaches to the building site, which is approximately 2½ miles south of the city of Dawsonsprings, and for this purpose a field engineer of the service, Mr. B. H. Graff, was, on April 24, 1919, detailed to take charge of the work in the field, and in a letter dated May 3, 1919, was instructed, among other things, to confer with the donor of the land, secure competitive proposals for making surveys, etc. As an incident to arranging approaches to the building site it became necessary to construct a roadway leading therefrom to the depot at Dawsonsprings and thence to the city, with access to the coal fields on the north of Dawsonsprings, and for which purpose the field engineer, in addition to his duties of directing the activities of the contractor's surveys, was, in a letter dated June 5, 1919, directed to devote especial attention to prospecting out a logical route of approach to the hospital for the new road work and to bring to the bureau's attention such other matters of importance as in his judgment should be given consideration; in connection with which, in an effort to expedite progress, the field engineer on July 4 was verbally directed to secure competitive proposals for certain subgrading, as a result of which a contract was entered into with the Brandenberg Construction Co. on September 23, 1919, for the work so advertised.

Besides the committee, there were present at the hearings Asst. Surg. Gen. W. G. Stimpson, in charge of the hospital division; Mr. N. V. Perry, constructing engineer; Mr. C. H. Stratton, assistant constructing engineer; and Mr. B. H. Graff, formerly employed as field engineer in charge of the construction work at Dawsonsprings.

Among other things, Mr. Graff stated:

First, that he was directed to cooperate with Mr. Troendle in every possible way and to be guided by his recommendations and to accept of him office quarters and other accommodations; second, that the method of giving publicity to advertisements for the proposed work was such as to make it difficult for outside bidders to obtain information; third, that the prices paid under a contract resulting from such advertisement were twice as high as conditions justified; and fourth, that there was collusion between the officials of the Public Health Service and the contractor.

In reply to these statements the records show, first, that Mr. Graff was, on April 24, 1919, directed to proceed to Dawsonsprings for the purpose of making surveys in connection with Government buildings to be erected, in accordance with detailed instructions to be issued in regard thereto; that his instructions dated May 3, 1919, directed him, among other things, that the bureau desired certain contour surveys for every 10 feet of elevation, also directed him to advertise for proposals for making these surveys, and further stated "That the bureau understands that Mr. Troendle will cooperate with you in every possible way and accommodate you with temporary office quarters without expense to the service"; "if you find it impracticable to make use of the accommodations offered, you should secure competitive proposals for a vacant room, affording light, heat, and janitor service, and to rental of such furniture as is needed. These proposals should be transmitted to the bureau with your definite recommendation as to acceptance." "You are also directed to take proposals for a survey"; "after making arrangements for the surveys, to make further explorations of the land between the site above indicated and the proposed depot for the purpose of making recommendations for a more direct wagon-road approach." He also was advised that no obligation must be incurred for the expenditure of money without first securing authority therefor; that all proposals secured for the supply of work should state definitely the terms and conditions and should be transmitted with his definite recommendation for acceptance, it being the practice of the department to accept the lowest bid for any given work, provided the contractor is thoroughly reliable and responsible.

In regard to the second statement the constructing engineer did, on July 4, 1919, while on a visit of inspection to Dawsonsprings, in an effort to expedite construction of the road for which surveys were in a backward condition, directed the field engineer to prepare specifications for subgrading and to post notice that bids would be received for work in accordance therewith in the post office and in his own office, and also to advise any local bidders he might know that bids for such work would be received.

In connection with the above the field engineer stated at the hearings that he had only been directed to post a notice in the post office, and that he did not know of any local bidders who would be interested in road work, and therefore made no effort to secure wider competition than of the two firms represented in the bids received. Yet the records show that on July 1, 1919, four days before, the field engineer wrote to a Mr. R. C. Griffin, county road engineer, of Hopkins County, Ky., as follows:

"From your letter understand that bids for road work will be opened on the same date and would appreciate it if you would send me copies of the advertised proposal for this work, as there are a number of contractors who have expressed their desire to bid on the same. The writer will transmit these specifications as soon as received."

The field engineer wrote the specifications for the subgrading and handed copies to the Brandenberg Construction Co., whom he had previously recommended for making surveys, and to Mr. T. R. Troendle, representing the Dawsonsprings Construction Co., which at that time, so far as the constructing engineer knew, had no relation to the Brandenberg Construction Co.; he apparently made no effort to get in touch with these contractors of whom he wrote to Mr. Griffin as being desirous of bidding on county road work.

A tentative draft of the Brandenberg Construction Co.'s bid was shown to the field engineer and the constructing engineer before being submitted and were transmitted to the bureau just prior to the latter's departure from Dawsonsprings; while the Dawsonsprings Construction Co.'s bids were mailed direct to Washington.

The bids for the various grades of work as submitted by the Brandenberg Construction Co., the lower of the two bids received, which was accepted August 22 and approved September 24, were for specified items, as follows:

For clearing 100 linear feet of road	$30.00
For grubbing 100 linear feet of road	44.00
For earth excavation, per cubic yard	.95
For excavation, loose rock, per cubic yard	1.20
For excavation, solid rock, per cubic yard	4.50

The office engineer commented on these bids as follows:

"MEMORANDUM FOR MR. PERRY.

"JANUARY 3, 1920.

"Re: Cost data.

"I have worked over a great amount of cost data on road work compiled from roads actually built in Kentucky, Ohio, and West Virginia in the files of the Federal aid road division of the Agricultural Department, and from this data it seems that the unit prices for subgrading by the Brandenberg Construction Co. at Dawsonsprings is not excessive. It is a little above the average cost for this work in some respects and lower in others, but in no respect is it unreasonable.

"The same source shows that the general average for hard-surfacing, including shoulders, should be for—

"Concrete, $3.10 per square yard. (There is no data for reinforced concrete.)

"Macadam, $1.39 per square yard.

"Bituminous macadam, $2.30 per square yard.

"These hard-road averages are based on contract for from 5 to 10 miles of road, and it is reasonable to expect the small amount of work at Dawsonsprings will run somewhat higher.

"(Signed) HERBERT HUNTINGTON."

Particular criticism was aimed at the price being paid for solid-rock excavation, statement being made that the Illinois Central Railroad Co. had made rock excavations in large volumes at Dawsonsprings for $1.25 per cubic yard; in answer to which there is a memorandum in the bureau to the effect that the president of the Illinois Central Railroad Co. will make an affidavit to the effect that the rock excavation at that point cost more than three times the $1.25 per cubic yard stated by Mr. Graff.

To show that the bids for this work were not entitled to be considered excessive the following comparisons are made with advertised bids published in the Engineering News Record, May 22, 1919, page 304, published bids received for solid-rock excavation for highways at $4, $5, and $5.75 per cubic yard, while the same Record published in its January 15, 1919, edition quotes from $3 to $5. The bids published in the Engineering News Record from January, 1919, to January, 1920, of a large number of bids received for rock excavation, which show the prices running from $2.75 a cubic yard to $5.75 per cubic yard, the average being $3.79 per cubic yard.

This bureau on January 2, 1920, requested the Bureau of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the United States Department of Agriculture to make a special investigation of the road work at Dawsonsprings, and for this purpose they sent one of their road engineers to Dawsonsprings. As a result of this investigation, the bureau is in receipt of a telegram from that department's representative which, in substance, is, "That the contract price is reasonable, considering the time of year work must be done;" "that if the present contract is cancelled he is sure that better prices could not be secured."

It will be seen from the above statements and figures that the price being paid the Brandenberg Construction Co. is not out of line with the average prices quoted by bidders for similar work from New York to California during the past year. It may be stated that this contract was for subgrading only and was let at this time in order to expedite work pending the completion of final surveys for the finished roadway in order that competitive proposals might be based on actual working drawings for the final completion of all the road work in time for the transportation of construction materials for buildings which were soon to be placed on the market.

Plans and specifications for the entire roadway were not completed until early in December and advertisements posted in the bureau and the field engineer's office at Dawsonsprings; notices were also sent to numerous bidders of bids to be opened on December 20, 1919. In response to this advertisement three proposals were received—one from the Dawsonsprings Construction Co., Dawsonsprings, Ky.; one from Frank G. Breslin, Louisville, Ky.; and one from Speed-Parker, Louisville, Ky. Of these bids the lowest was that of Frank G. Breslin, but all bids were rejected for the reason that the low bid had underlined marks indicating that certain of the materials were for delivery f. o. b. Dawsonsprings instead of being wrought in place as indicated by the specifications, and the further fact that attached thereto was a letter stating that he would do this work within 90 days from April 1, 1920, which was not in line with the specification requirements and the acceptance of which would have so delayed construction work as to make the bid unacceptable at any price.

These bids were rejected and the bidders requested to resubmit their bids on an addendum specification which would definitely quote for all work in place and completion within 90 days from the date of acceptance of the bid, and in response to this request for resubmission only one bid was received—that of the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. This bid has not been accepted.

The records show that the Dawsonsprings Construction Co. was the lowest of three bids received for three buildings first advertised by $1,568, and on specifications revised to cheapen the cost of construction their proposal was some $30,000 lower than any of the other bids received; notwithstanding this, their bid is still held in abeyance unaccepted.

In regard to the statement that there was collusion between the Public Health Service and the contractor it should be stated unequivocally that preference was not given to the donor of the land nor any of his agents, nor has the field engineer in any communication ever addressed to the bureau, so far as the records show, stated or intimated that the contractor was being favored to the detriment of the public interest; neither has he stated so verbally to the constructing engineer; nor, so far as he, the constructing engineer, knows, to any member of the force under his direction. Furthermore, the records show numerous instances where the field engineer recommended the acceptance of the proposals by the Brandenberg Construction Co., which the bureau deemed unreasonably high and rejected, with direction for the field engineer to secure better prices than those he recommended for acceptance.

Respectfully,

(Signed) RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman will insert the figures given on page 823 of the hearings.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know what the gentleman has reference to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Where it appears bids for the same kind had been let for Kentucky road construction.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This estimate does show that road work has been done for lower prices in Kentucky, but it is not parallel with this work at all, because this is a rough country over which this road is being built, very inaccessible and hard to get to, and being such a small contract no reputable construction company would take this work as cheaply as they would on a public road where the work is easier to get to and larger contracts. I will say, further, that the Illinois Central Railroad Co. built a cut-off through the city of Dawsonsprings, and I am reliably informed that the contract cost it practically a million dollars in excess of its expectations when the work began.

Gentlemen, it was a great and a patriotic effort on the part of the good people in and around the city of Dawsonsprings to raise enough money to pay for this 5,000 acres of land. I attended a public meeting there last spring, and at this meeting I saw colored porters and waiters at the hotels giving from $15 to $25 each to pay for this land. When representatives of the Dawsonsprings Commercial Club went to Mr. Simmons, of the Simmons Hardware Co., and offered to buy the coal lands which I have hereinbefore mentioned, Mr. Simmons told them, in substance, that his company was receiving a 6 per cent dividend in the way of royalties on a $300,000 investment in this land and that same was not for sale. When these representatives told him the purpose for which it was to be used, that it was for the United States Government, Mr. Simmons replied, "If it is for my country, if it is for the erection of a hospital for discharged disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, I will not only let the Government have it, but you gentlemen can go and assess the value of it and I will take it."

These representatives assessed it at $15 per acre, and the Simmons Hardware Co. not only accepted this amount but sent their abstractors there and made an abstract of the title and turned it over to the Government for this price from the people. Yet, in view of these facts, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] comes and criticizes the Treasury Department and the Bureau of Public Health Service and charges upon the statements of this man Graff that money is being wasted there. Has his patriotic constituency in Chicago ever offered anything free to the Government, and especially in this large proportion? It is a very late day for the gentleman to come now and be solicitous about the care and comfort of these poor, disabled, discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and it comes in bad grace for the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] to come at this late day and undertake to criticize the Treasury and Bureau of Public Health Service in the face of the fact that had it not been for the consolidated opposition of the Republican side of the House when this legislation was pending the hospital at Dawsonsprings would have long since been completed and full of these discharged, disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines receiving the care and attention they should.

The gentleman from Illinois would have you believe that Mr. Troendle, one of the public-spirited men of Dawsonsprings, is undertaking to "hold up" the Government in these contracts. Mr. Troendle is only one of the many patriotic people there who have devoted their time and money to pay for this land, and the Dawsonsprings Construction Co., of which he is President, has come in the open and made competitive bids on all these contracts and has been the lowest bidder every time and is entitled to these contracts because of this fact.

It comes in bad faith for the gentleman from Illinois, who knows nothing about this transaction, to come on the floor of Congress and undertake to criticize Mr. Troendle and the rest of these patriotic citizens of Dawsonsprings, Ky.

There is no more suitable place in the United States than at Dawsonsprings for the erection of a sanatorium. It has a splendid climate and, in my judgment, the finest mineral water in the world. It is my sincere hope that the building operations may proceed as rapidly as possible, in order that this splendid sanatorium may be completed so that these disabled, discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines may have the advantage of this institution. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of extending my remarks.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly on the railroad question, dealing particularly with the "Bryan plan" for solving the railroad problem. The "Plumb plan" has had its day in court, but the "Bryan plan" has been sorely neglected. It has escaped the notice of the country generally that on August 29, 1919, William Jennings Bryan, appearing before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, announced his platform. His recent expressed wish to have the League of Nations issue out of the way and his still more recent reprimand directed toward the titular head of the national Democratic committee for attempting to resurrect John Barleycorn from his newly made grave was to be expected in view of the Nebraskan's propensity for a paramount issue.

Now, when the man speaks who said "Coo" to one Democratic national convention and thereby defeated all other aspirants and nominated himself for the presidency and who said "Boo" to another Democratic national convention and thereby defeated one of the greatest Democratic statesmen of the last quarter of a century and nominated a man who almost fastened international socialism upon his country, it is high time the country knew about his paramount issue.

To those who believe that young men dream dreams and old men see visions I respectfully recommend a careful reading of Bryan's remarkably visionary testimony before our committee. But first, to prove that the presentation was meant to be in the nature of a platform, I read from his testimony at the hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Said Mr. Bryan:

> My plan is only presented for consideration that it may be kept in mind when the people decide these questions. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1695.)

When we consider this frank statement that his real forum was to be the political campaign the essentials of his plan become an interesting study, for they are so formed as to make a bid for votes in every direction and are as refreshingly impracticable and charmingly visionary as any of his previous paramount issues. But let us see the plan in his own words:

> I beg to propose as alternative what may be described as a dual plan, which contemplates the ownership and operation of a Federal trunk-line system, sufficient to reach into every State and make each State independent by giving it an outlet for all it has to sell and an inlet for all it has to purchase, and the ownership and operation of all the other lines by the States in which the lines are situated. * * * (Hearings, p. 1684, vol. 2.)
>
> * * * Now, the dual plan adapts itself not only to our form of government but to our conditions in this country. A trunk line, only sufficient to reach into every State and furnish each State an outlet, and thus make it independent, instead of costing eighteen or twenty billions of dollars, would not cost, I should say, over four or five billions. The plan does not contemplate the nationalization of every railroad that runs through two or more States. It contemplates a bare, skeleton Government trunk line that will give to every State a position of independence, and thus enable it to treat without coercion or compulsion with the States adjoining. Because a railroad runs through a number of States is no reason why it should be regarded as a trunk line and owned by the Federal Government. The fact that it runs through several States would not interfere at all with operation by each State on the part of the line that is within the State. * * * (Hearings, vol. 2, pp. 1688–1689.)
>
> * * * This plan not only lessens the amount that will be necessary to inaugurate, so far as the national part is concerned, but it has another advantage, namely, that it distributes the question over time as well as over space. It divides a great problem now confronting the people into 49 problems—1 for Federal Government and 1 for each of the 48 States—and it permits the settlement of the question as the people of each State are ready to settle it. If a State does not desire to take over and operate the lines within its borders immediately, it can, if it wishes, leave them in private hands until the sentiment of the people of the State is ready for Government ownership. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1689.)

[Laughter.]

He candidly admits that it is experimental and that it may take years to get it to working. Witness this:

> If a State does not desire to immediately enter upon the State ownership and operation of the railroads within its borders, it can leave these railroads in private hands until the sentiment of the State is ready.
>
> Not only that, but the plan gives us an opportunity to test out the system. A great many people might hesitate to try a new policy on so large a scale; they would say, "If it does not succeed, we will have spent an enormous amount of money, and we will find it difficult to return to the old system," but if you distribute this question over a number of years the States that wait will have the benefit of the experience of the States that try, and if the theory upon which the change is made proves to be unsound in practice it can be stopped, and a return can be made with less loss and with less derangement of business. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1690.)

[Laughter.]

This quoted testimony also shows that he intends to take the railroad companies by the nape of the neck and make them take back the roads in case State ownership does not prove a success. Besides, he coddled himself into the sublimest calm by pondering in his dreams over the happy thought that the States that wait could watch the floundering of the States that just jumped right in and possibly keep out of the whirlpool. Let me repeat his language:

> If you distribute this question over a number of years, the States that wait will have the benefit of the experience of the States that try, and if the theory upon which the change is made proves to be unsound in practice it can be stopped and a return can be made with less loss and with less derangement of business. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1690.)

[Laughter.]

Experiments seem to be his particular delight, and the multiplicity of experiments possible under his plan seems to have about the same effect upon him as the needle did on the famous character of Sherlock Holmes. I read further from his testimony:

> A trunk line only sufficient to reach into every State * * * would not cost, I should say, over four or five billion dollars. (Hearings, p. 1188.) But, gentlemen of the committee, the plan that I suggest to you has this advantage, namely, that if there is any doubt in the minds of those who are willing to try Government ownership, it gives a chance to try it without investing as much as would be necessary to buy all the railroads. Further, I beg to suggest that if you have 48 States, each one with its system of transportation owned and operated by the State government, you have 48 experimental stations. (Hearings, pp. 1690–1691.)

He admits on examination that what we really need is a practical solution. But the mere fact that we would first have to pass the bill by the House and Senate, then amend a few State constitutions, educate the people in favor of it, get 48 State legislatures to act favorably thereon, and have endless and hopeless confusion during the interim does not disturb the sweetness of his dreams. [Laughter.]

Listen to the following:

> Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, with the railroad problem before us now, what we want is a practical solution.
>
> Mr. BRYAN. Yes.
>
> Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Your proposed solution would require, first, the adoption of it by Congress. We could, of course, issue no edict to the States. It would require the adoption by each of the States of the same plan?
>
> Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. A great many of the States would have to change their constitutions. Some of the States might not adopt the plan at all. This is quite conceivable, is it not?

Mr. BRYAN. No; it is not conceivable, if you will pardon me. That is, when a plan is tried it is either demonstrated to be a success or a failure. If it is demonstrated to be a success, it is only fair to assume it will be adopted.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, the plan will not be in its entirety until it is adopted by all the States. So the plan, as a plan, can not be tested until it is adopted by all the States, and hence its success or failure could not influence any of the States to come in.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I beg your pardon. The failure of one State to adopt it will not interfere with the other States adopting it at all.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, suppose Illinois does adopt the plan and suppose Indiana and Wisconsin do not. Now, would Illinois have the right to condemn the Pennsylvania Railroad at the State line, coming across there, and take it over?

Mr. BRYAN. No; not the interstate line.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, you already have the national——

Mr. BRYAN (interposing). I thought you meant the Government line. It could condemn any part of any other line; it can to-day. If the Pennsylvania can condemn the individual's property, do you doubt the State that gave it that right can go out and condemn the railroad?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It is your opinion that the State of Illinois could condemn a part of an interstate railroad and control it? Well, that would dismember the road for interstate purposes.

Mr. BRYAN. Not at all.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How would it operate?

Mr. BRYAN. The board that had control of the roads in Illinois would act in conjunction with the board that had control in Indiana, if it was a Government road, or, if a privately owned road, with the manager, and they would arrange for their joint operations. You would have to assume that a road would not look out for its own interests in order to take any other position.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Would you prevent any railroad company from engaging in interstate commerce?

Mr. BRYAN. No; and I think you can safely leave that matter to the United States. The Federal Government will really set the price and terms of interstate commerce.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What would be your estimate of the number of years that it would take to put that plan into effect?

Mr. BRYAN. I would not attempt to guess, because it would be merely a guess, and my experience has led me to be a little cautious about fixing a time. It is easier to tell the direction of the wind than to measure its velocity; it is easier to tell the trend of events than it is to tell how soon a thing will be accomplished.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Would you release any of the Federal control after that plan had been adopted, or would you continue Federal control until it had been completely adopted?

Mr. BRYAN. I think that would have to be determined by the conditions as they arose. There is this general proposition that I have always gone on, namely, that the people will have as much sense to-morrow as they have to-day, and probably more light. Therefore you can safely leave until to-morrow the decision of questions that can not be decided to-day.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But in formulating a plan we have to decide on something, and I was wondering whether in your plan it was your purpose to continue Federal control until all the States had adopted your plan, or whether it was your purpose that when Illinois, say, had adopted the plan Federal control would be withdrawn.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Federal Government's trunk line reached out into every State its control over interstate commerce would, I think, be more effective than under any commission or board.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Then, would you release Federal control?

Mr. BRYAN. It might be possible to release it; but I do not think it is necessary to decide that question until we reach it. (Hearings, vol. 2, pp. 1706–1707.)

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I was curious to know why the gentleman was jumping on Bryan. I notice that Bryan and Sims have no friends on the Democratic side, and I was wondering why they were attacked on the Republican side.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I understood that Bryan and Plumb were going to join hands, and I wanted the country to know the Bryan plan so the people would know the result of the combination.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does Mr. Bryan suggest a method of financing this scheme?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That does not bother him in the least.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is negligible, is it not?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The furnishing of this $5,000,000,000 is a negligible proposition?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. That is a feature the people can decide.

On second thought he brings in the traction lines. I quote:

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How about the State owning the traction lines?

Mr. BRYAN. My preference would be to have the States own the interurban lines that were not in the city, and I see no objection to putting this whole thing together, because, you see, if the State owned the railroad lines it would simply be adding the intercity traction lines to them. They would hardly be embraced in the Federal trunk-line system. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1708.)

Notice that he gives national control of some trunk lines. That, he thinks, will catch those favoring nationalization. He proposes State control of many lines to please those who favor States rights. He permits private control if they do not like the experiment, thus appealing to those believing in private control. He uses great care not to offend the Plumb Plan League, and gives the following clear-cut statement on that plan:

Mr. DENISON. You may have expressed your views before I came into the room in reference to the question that I am going to ask, and if you did you need not repeat them. I wanted to ask you whether or not you think that the so-called Sims plan, or the Plumb plan, as embodied in the Sims bill, would be a good thing for this country?

Mr. BRYAN. I have not felt that one could safely answer that question "yes" or "no," because if one makes an answer "yes" or "no" to that the statement is apt to go out without qualification, and he is put in a position that is not his true position. I would not want to answer whether the plan is good or bad, because it might seem like an indorsement of it or a condemnation of it. I have pointed out two or three things that I thought were good, and I have pointed out some things that I thought were bad, simply in conjunction with the discussion. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1704.)

I hope no Member here but entertains a high personal opinion of the great commoner, and to be sure that I shall leave you all feeling kindly toward him I will read you the following tribute he paid you:

But while we could reduce the rates in the State we could not do it in Congress as well as we could in the State. I do not think we ever can, on the theory that the farther a Congressman gets away from home the more difficult it is to watch him, and therefore the more difficult it is to make him serve the public. (Hearings, vol. 2, p. 1697.)

[Laughter.]

With the greatest domestic problem of a century before this great legislative body, upon the proper solution of which depends the happiness of all our people, we ought all to have a prayer of thanks upon our lips that the country has been spared the disaster of the "Bryan plan." [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on the 21st of January I introduced House joint resolution 279, for the speedy return of the bodies of American military dead buried in France to the United States, which reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the bodies of American soldiers, sailors, and marines buried in France should be speedily removed and returned to the United States in all cases where requests for such return are made by the nearest of kin of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, for burial in the United States; and that all appropriate and necessary steps be taken to induce the French Republic to repeal, modify, or suspend, in so far as the same may apply to the bodies of all American soldiers, sailors, and marines, all laws and regulations of the French Republic preventing the immediate disinterment and speedy removal to the United States of the bodies of such soldiers, sailors, and marines.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State transmit to the Government of the French Republic a certified copy of this resolution.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed, upon the French Republic consenting to such disinterment and removal, to take appropriate and necessary action to exhume and remove to the United States, at the earliest possible date and with all reasonable speed, the bodies of all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American Expeditionary Forces who are buried in France and the return of whose bodies to the United States is desired and expressed by the nearest of kin. The Secretary of War is further directed, upon arrival of such bodies in the United States, to make such delivery or disposition of such bodies as may be or may have been heretofore requested, respectively, by the nearest of kin.

I am not forgetful of what has been done through the State Department in this matter and I desire to give full credit to the Foreign Relations Committee of the House and to the Secretaries of the State and War Departments for all affirmative action in this behalf. Besides personal visits on earlier dates, on November 13, 1919, I addressed letters to the Secretaries of War and State, asking to be advised of the then present status of the question regarding the return of the soldier dead buried in France. I have been told that the bringing back of the bodies of the soldiers must of necessity wait the transportation back of the Army in France. On November 19 a letter from the War Department came in response to my letter, reading in part as follows:

The Secretary of War has received your letter of November 13 and directs me to say that the State Department is making the most urgent representations to the French Government with regard to the wishes of the American people concerning the return of our military dead to this country. We trust that these negotiations will soon terminate successfully.

On November 28 the Secretary of State addressed to me a letter, with inclosures, which letter reads in part as follows:

The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of November 13 asking that you be advised of the present status of the question regarding the return of the soldier dead buried in France.

In reply, it gives me pleasure to inclose a paraphrase copy of the recent instructions sent at the request of the War Department to the American Embassy in Paris and also of the embassy's replies. These indicate definitely the present status of the question.

The copy of the instructions sent and the replies received I do not feel authorized to insert herein, not having been given out for publication, but doubtless the same was furnished to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will say, however, that the representations to the French Government made by the Secretary of State were strong and urgent and well expressed the wishes and views of the relatives seeking to have returned our military dead to this country.

On November 24 the following was published by the Associated Press:

PARIS, November 24.

The 65,000 American dead in France must be left in the graves they now occupy until the French are ready to exhume their own dead, which, it is hoped, will be before January 1, 1922.

The foreign office has promised to consider the latest request of the American Government for the return of the fallen soldiers, but later the following announcement was made:

"It has been definitely decided that allies who fell together for the same cause should remain together in death until circumstances permit of the returning of the bodies to the families for whom they sacrificed themselves."

The proposed law forbidding the exhumation of the soldier dead for three years did not pass at the last session of the Chamber of Deputies, but the foreign office expects it will be adopted soon. This bill specifies a delay in exhumation for three years from the promulgation of the law, but it expected that this period will be shortened.

At the foreign office it is said that the exhumation will commence considerably before January, 1922.

—

WASHINGTON, November 24.

Instructions that American soldier dead interred in France outside of the so-called "zone of armies" be brought home as soon as arrangements are completed have been issued by Secretary Baker. About 18,000 bodies lie outside of the zone. Return of those within it depends on action by the French Government, which has been asked to withdraw its restrictions.

Lieut. Col. Charles C. Pierce has been placed in charge of the graves registration service.

On January 3 the press carried a cablegram from France, dated Paris, January 3, reading as follows:

The French Government has granted permission for the removal of the bodies of 20,000 American soldiers buried in France to the United States. The bodies to be removed are those buried in cemeteries outside the zone of the armies and do not include those gathered into big American cemeteries in the army zones.

The above publications appeared in the press of this country and attracted instant and wide attention.

The ban has been lifted as to those not within the military zone or outside of the so-called "zone of the armies."

I hope it is not too early to speak now and to ask Congress to speak in behalf of lifting the ban as to all American soldiers buried in France, and thus supplement the representations to the French Government, made by the Secretary of State, asking that the restrictions now in force may be rescinded or modified in order to enable the War Department to undertake the removal of all the bodies of the soldier dead in as well as outside of the so-called zone of the armies, where desired by next of kin, as speedily as possible.

I speak now so that Congress may evidence some interest in behalf of the thousands of relatives who are interested in the early return of the bodies of those who fell within the battle lines.

If they can bring back those that died from sickness and disease to this country, without disturbing the morale of the French Government, with equal propriety they can bring back those who in the prime of health fell and died on the battle field and are now buried in the so-called zone of the armies.

It has been more than a year since the armistice was signed. To wait three years and more from that date is too long.

I am aware of the propaganda that is going on in this country to influence the public mind and to impress upon the relatives the idea that the remains of their soldier dead should be permitted to stay in the so-called American cemeteries; and largely because of that propaganda I have seen fit to speak to-day. If Congress evidences no interest in it, if Congress does not speak, if there is no response from this body, representing as it does the people of the country, to the various resolutions that have been offered and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if there is no activity or desire for action expressed by the legislative body in aid of the expressed wish of the Secretary of State, the French Government may conclude that the American dead shall not be removed from within the military zone until they have removed their own dead or may refuse to rescind or modify its order. I do not believe the French Government should be left in any doubt as to how the American people feel with reference to this matter. There ought not to be a delay of three years, nor any further delay, and I speak because I think that there ought to be some speed, some hastening of the day when these bodies can be returned. It can not be said that we have not now the ships. The promise is well remembered that the War Department said, "You must wait until the soldiers are returned," which was reasonable, and then it was expected that the remains of the soldier dead would be returned.

Mr. Chairman, there should be no necessity for an appeal to Congress for action in behalf of the early return to this country of all our soldier dead buried on foreign soil, nor should it be necessary to appeal to the executive branch of the Government or any department thereof for speedy action in this behalf, nor should it be necessary to appeal to any foreign government to remove restrictions that forbid or hinder the removal and early return to the United States of the bodies of those who gave their lives that France might live, nor should the relatives of these soldier boys be required to longer plead that the promise made by this Government, through its Secretary of War, be kept without further delay.

With some hesitation I speak, but I am reluctant to longer delay my appeal here, as I have made it elsewhere, when so many relatives have appealed to me to help hasten the return of the bodies of their soldier boys. I had hoped that it would not be necessary for resolutions to be introduced in Congress in this behalf, but there has been active and pronounced opposition to their return. Some in high military authority have not approved of the return of the soldier dead and have sought to hush the appeal for the return of their bodies to their relatives, and have urged that their remains be kept where buried on foreign soil; but the appeal grows stronger and the demand is that the faith of this Government be kept and the pledged word be not broken. I hope and believe that no foreign order will prevent its being kept, and I trust there is no real, substantial obstacle in the way. The French Government will not refuse to do what this Government asks and urges to be done; to refuse would be an unfriendly or hostile act. Let it not be further suggested that the morale of the French people might be disturbed. Two million American soldiers crossed the seas to save the life and soil of France.

Billions of dollars were given that France might not be wholly destroyed. They will not deny the relatives of those soldier boys who could not return the privilege of having the bodies of their loved ones brought back to rest in their own cemeteries, where they can visit and place flowers with their own hands upon the graves of their loved ones. They can not go to France, not one in a thousand, and their remains should not be held longer for any alleged reasons in graves on foreign soil against the expressed wishes of their relatives, who have been given the solemn promise for their early return. Let no further excuses be made. Let no barriers be raised abroad by consent or delay of our representatives or agents in any department of the Government.

Much time has already run; more speed should be evidenced. The ships that carried the soldiers across and back can bring the bodies back. The same Treasury that poured out its golden stream that saved France can give the small pittance necessary to bring back their remains. Let no profiteer who has fattened while our country bled and our mothers wept offer any suggestion about the expense of this promise being kept. Those of large means can go across and see the cemeteries where our soldiers lie, but the mothers, wives, and sisters who can not go ask the simple privilege of caring for their soldier boys, whose graves they can not visit on foreign soil.

Measure not the dollars to be given now against the dollars that you would annually appropriate to care for their graves on foreign soil for many years to come until forgotten. Let the morale of this country and of those who have lost be cared for, and let the grateful hearts of those who appeal to you be the object of your first concern.

These bodies should not be longer held for any ulterior purpose. Let no propaganda of those whose hearts have been untouched by sorrow nor sordid commercialism obscure the judgment of those whose duty it is to think first of the morale of those entitled to be heard. Shake not their confidence in the representatives and officials of their own Government. Let not the broken word of a great Republic be the gift to the appealing relative who asks for a promise kept and for the remains of him who in the flower of youth gave his all that the honor of this Republic might live. Gratitude should be evidenced by early action and not the neglect by further delay. I hope the efforts of the executive department will avail to remove all barriers at an early date, and let Congress supplement that effort.

You can not abandon to foreign care the bodies of your soldier dead and be forgiven. No country can afford to forget its dead. No nation can live without gratitude in its heart. Commercialism will not perpetuate its life. Cold philosophy from those in high places will not satisfy the yearnings nor answer the prayers of those who ask for promises to be kept. No cold philosophy will satisfy the hearts of the bereaved nor warm the love for country.

The lives given at your call to save the freedom of the seas, to protect your commerce, should be more highly regarded than sunken cargoes, measured by dollars, the lives given that liberty and love and gratitude might endure. Do not forget the heartstrings while you guard the purse strings. The life of a nation is not in its gold, but it is in the heartbeat of a grateful and loving people, willing to do and die, where right and justice is placed above sordid gold. While a world revolution is going on you can not perpetuate its civilization upon dollars or on commerce or on force, but it must rest upon the more sacred things, which you must preserve or your civilization will die.

Let relatives be allowed the privilege of erecting monuments of love over the graves of loved ones, upon which the tender hands of mothers, wives, and sisters can place flowers of affection and moisten with tears of sorrow. They ask not for the Government care, but only their return, so they can care for them with their own hands.

I have seen and heard from these stricken men, mothers, wives, and sisters and have told them of the promised word. Their letters have come and are still coming. The inquiry is, When? The answer rests with the agents and representatives of this Government. Those in high authority can hasten the day, and Congress can aid if it will. France will not stand in the way; if it does, I ask the question, Is there still the lingering fear of German aggression resting in the Frenchmen's hearts that desires assurance in case of another war that they will more readily have American support by keeping the bodies of American dead buried on French soil, as hostages from the United States to inspire or compel her to protect the soil of France, where our soldiers lie? Let not this country surrender its right for their return for any such military reason, for the fear that the friendship of our country will wane if the dead are returned. We want them on no foreign soil but to rest on American soil near the homes that reared them.

Does France fear that this country may not always manifest its friendship and that it needs the cemeteries of our dead on her soil to protect France in future years?

If we love our dead and hold them in tender memory, we will bring them back and let them be cared for by loving hands that gave them in trust for our country's sake, to be returned when the work was done on the battle line. Let France refuse and then that friendship may wane.

We can not forget with safety those who defended the flag on foreign soil to vindicate the honor and integrity of our Government. You owe a duty to the living soldiers, maimed and unmaimed, whom you sent 3,000 miles across the seas to mingle in the hell of battle, and you dare not forget the relatives of those who gave their life's blood that this country might endure. Most of those that fell and died were mere youths, who had answered their country's call, who loved their native land and believed in the gratitude of their country, and that they would be returned to be buried among their kin, and not left forgotten for all time on foreign soil.

It has been suggested that they can not be brought back for three years. That is too long. If you sent across 2,000,000 in a few months, you can return a few thousand in a short time. The press states that the last of the A. E. F. soldiers have returned. It was promised that the bodies would be brought back shortly after the soldiers were returned.

Will you make it impossible to enter any cemetery in this United States and to point to a monument erected over the grave of a single soldier who died in battle in France? The propaganda against bringing the bodies back will doubtless be used to influence the action of the French Government. Let Congress speak, so France may know that the legislative and executive departments ask alike for early action. Speak now before it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri yields back two minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the figures from the hearings concerning the number of dead, the number in the hospitals, and the amount of money expended, and also the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the Shank contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12046, the urgent deficiency bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11606. An act to authorize the county of Fountain, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TOWNER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, until further notice, on account of public business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if it would not be a wise idea, inasmuch as we have only 14 men here, to quit business for the afternoon?

Mr. GOOD. I propose to. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 28, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation permitting the acquisition of a site for distant-control radio station in Porto Rico; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report on the investigation of the claim of Charles S. Hood for payment for services in connection with the removal of the Modoc Indians to Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XII,

Mr. DALE, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, to which was referred the bill (S. 3202) granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 588), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9996) granting an increase of pension to Emil A. Akerman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11765) granting a pension to Mary T. Tupper; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11872) granting a pension to William Francis Sheridan; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12030) granting a pension to James C. Overbee; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 12099) to establish additional fish-cultural subsidiary stations in the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. RAINEY of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 12100) to amend section 70 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved February 28, 1913; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12101) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 12102) to provide and adjust penalties for violation of various navigation laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. ELLSWORTH: A bill (H. R. 12103) to aid in winding up the affairs of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOONEY: A bill (H. R. 12104) granting privilege of the floor and right to participate in debate to heads of executive departments; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARLAND: Resolution (H. Res. 450) directing the Committee on War Expenditures of the House of Representatives to make full investigation of all purchases of hardware and other articles and sales of the same made by the Government during the war and up to the present time; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 12105) granting a pension to Carl L. Setchell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOODALL: A bill (H. R. 12106) granting an increase of pension to Susanna A. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 12107) granting a pension to Robert H. Foote; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12108) granting a pension to Lucile D. Murphey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12109) for the relief of Leslie E. Drake; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 12110) granting an increase of pension to Elexious H. Conley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12111) granting an increase of pension to Frank P. Collins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 12112) granting a pension to Francis P. Crane; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12113) granting a pension to Julia Gallagher; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12114) granting a pension to Rose M. Cherbonnier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MACGREGOR: A bill (H. R. 12115) granting a pension to Agnes E. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: A bill (H. R. 12116) granting a pension to J. H. Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 12117) granting a pension to Elizabeth Purviance; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12118) granting a pension to Bert Rich; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 12119) granting an increase of pension to Martha J. Hopkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDDICK: A bill (H. R. 12120) granting a pension to Mary Plum; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 12121) granting an increase of pension to Jacob H. Wisher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 12122) granting an increase of pension to Eva Whittlebery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1141. By Mr. BROWNING: Petition of citizens of Haddonfield, Camden County, N. J., favoring House bill 262; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1142. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, protesting against the passage of House bill 4871; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1143. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of St. Charles (Ill.) Post No. 342, American Legion, favoring universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1144. By Mr. GRIEST: Petition of Thomas Post. No. 84, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lancaster, Pa., urging Congress to pass an act to exile anarchists; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1145. Also, petition of Paul Revere Leber Post, No. 372, American Legion, of Columbia, Pa., urging drastic legislation against such organizations that are responsible for the Centralia outrage, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1146. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Resolutions of the board of directors of the American State Bank, Oakwood, Mich., protesting against discontinuance of the work of widening and deepening the River Rouge; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1147. Also, resolutions of the Michigan League of Home Dailies, favoring retention of the present zone postal law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1148. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of president of the Maryland State College, urging legislation to strengthen the farm-loan bank system; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1149. Also, petition of the North Carolina Pine Box and Shook Manufacturers' Association, of Baltimore, urging an increase in the appropriation for the forest products laboratory of the Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1150. Also, petition of Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, of Baltimore, Md., voicing its approval of the antistrike clause in the railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1151. Also, petitions of W. E. Beveridge and J. C. Knowles, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the enactment of the peacetime sedition legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1152. Also, petition of 11 citizens of Baltimore, Md., urging retention of railroads under Government control for a period of two years; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1153. By Mr. MACGREGOR: Petition of the American Federation of Railroad Workers, of Lackawanna, N. Y., opposing the Esch-Cummins railroad bills now pending; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1154. Also, petition of the Sixty-fifth Regiment Veterans' Association, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1155. Also, petition of the Board of Trade of Akron, N. Y., indorsing House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1156. By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: Petition of citizens of Caryville, Tenn., relative to the high cost of living; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1157. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of William M. Haradon, of New York City, opposing the reduction of postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1158. Also, petition of citizens of New York City, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1159. Also, petition of the joint legislative board of the State of New York, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, relative to certain railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1160. Also, petition of Mrs. Charles Neisel, a gold-star mother, against the return of the dead from the battle fields of France; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1161. Also, petition of John J. O'Keefe, of New York City, opposing the League of Nations covenant and favoring submitting it to the vote of the people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou dost call us to Thy service. Thou hast not separated Thyself from us. Thou hast sent messages to us from the skies and they have been recorded in the high and ennobling impulses that arise out of our hearts and in our striving after the best and highest and truest. We pray Thee to guide us by Thine own counsel in the affairs of life that we may do Thy will and accomplish Thy purpose. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, professor of international law at Princeton University, in relation to the treaty and the Senate. It is taken from the New York Sun of yesterday.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ATTEMPT TO COERCE THE UNITED STATES SENATE—A PROTEST FROM THE PROFESSOR OF INTERNATIONAL LAW AT PRINCETON.

To the EDITOR OF THE SUN:

SIR: I desire to register a vigorous protest against the organized moral coercion now being exerted on the Senate at a time when it should be most respected in the exercise of one of its most important functions, namely, the treaty-making power. The pressure which has been artificially stimulated and brought to bear on the Senate by petitions, telegrams, delegations, and by the savage attacks of the press is most insidious and dangerous.

There are times of strong popular feeling when the Senate owes a duty to the American people to reserve its judgment and action in order to safeguard national interests. The kind of moral coercion now being exerted in favor of a daring international experiment may be exerted again in a different situation. What may be done by popular clamor in behalf of a League of Nations may also be done in behalf of industrial, socialistic, or bolshevistic projects. Do our people desire to see the Senate abdicate its high duties and obey the vox populi in times of unreasoning sentiment and excitement? Is representative government to degenerate to a popular referendum at any moment in the market place or on the steps of the Capitol at Washington?

The present organized effort to sway public feeling and to bring it to bear on the Senate is particularly reprehensible, because it savors of propaganda rather than of education. The war, among other things, has demonstrated what great results may be achieved in Liberty loans, Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association drives, and the like by propaganda through advertising and by scientific coercion. The method is simple: A few men of influence decide that the public should support a certain cause. They organize most thoroughly; they secure immense funds for propaganda purposes; they advertise extensively; they induce others to follow rather unthinkingly; they arouse the churches and various other organizations to help; they circulate petitions; feelings are stirred and the great idea is "put over." We are then told that the people "demand" it. As a matter of fact, the American people, particularly in the field of international affairs, which they little understand, only demand what they have cleverly been induced to demand.

I have had occasion of late to observe how some of the petitions for the League of Nations have been circulated. People have often signed merely to oblige some earnest friend whose judgment and character they may highly regard. A general moral coercion has been brought to bear in certain communities where one has been exposed to the unpleasant charge of lacking in idealism and sense if he has not been ready to sign.

To assert that the American people have any adequate understanding of the precise nature of the obligations involved in the League of Nations is obviously untrue. Their feelings and imagination may have been stirred; not their common sense. There are a considerable number, of course, who are moved by their generous idealism to gamble with the Nation's destiny. I have talked with some who favor the league without reservations who hold that if we later incur some obligation we did not forsee, we may then refuse to fulfill it! There are others, like Mr. Taft, who hold that if we can only "get our foot in the door," we can later amend the covenant; this in the face of the fact that amendment is only possible through unanimous consent!

A most significant commentary on the situation lies in the fact that a much larger number of people favor reservations to-day than a few months ago—among these some of the very leaders, such as Mr. Taft and Mr. Lowell, who have helped largely in creating public sentiment for the league. This fact alone should justify the prolonged delay in the ratification of the treaty.

This artificial stimulus and direction of public sentiment on the Senate at this time is particularly reprehensible when one considers the exact nature of the treaty-making power of that body as a responsible agent together with the President. It was a wise provision of the Constitution that placed the power to negotiate and the power to ratify in different hands. Many a time has the Senate performed a great patriotic service as well as a constitutional one in submitting treaties to a merciless examination, and in some cases to revision. An excellent example of this was the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which failed to reserve the right of the United States to fortify the Panama Canal. Its revision by the Senate was plainly imperative.

This obligation to safeguard the interests of the United States through searching discussion and the revision of treaties is one that the Senate owes to the people of to-morrow as well as to the people of to-day. It is a function which the people themselves can not properly exercise. It is a duty imposed on the Senators by reason of their high position somewhat apart from popular clamor and by their special opportunities for a wide comprehension of the international interests and responsibilities of the United States. It is a duty especially incumbent when the generous emotions of the American people have been aroused, and when their sober second thought may not be ascertained until after some trying event or disaster they could not have foreseen even though the Senate may have sought to adopt necessary precautions against just such a contingency.

Finally, could anything be more reprehensible than that attitude of mind which could compromise on principles in order to facilitate the speedy ratification of the treaty?

Compromise as to form obviously should not be difficult; but the Senate is now being coerced into a sacrifice of principle. On the one side are those who believe in the principle of world cooperation to such an extent that they are willing to pledge the United States without any reservation whatever, written or mental. On the other side are those who believe in the principle that the United States must never become enmeshed in the European system of politics and must preserve a large measure of freedom of action on behalf of vital American interests as well as in behalf of world peace.

The issue is so fundamental that, irrespective of personal and partisan prejudices, the Senate should never be dragooned into an unwilling and unwarranted surrender of principle, whether by one side or the other. Let either side win; but let there be no shameful compromise of principles.

If the real object of popular sentiment is merely the speedy attainment of peace and the clarification of an ambiguous situation, then let us restore a legal state of peace and reserve the discussion of principles for a time when reason can assert itself and the people of the United States can fully understand the exact nature of the obligations they are asked to assume. Honor as well as prudence demands that they pledge no more than they are willing to fulfill.

PHILIP MARSHALL BROWN.

PRINCETON, N. J., January 26.

SOUTHERN PORTS.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, just now there is considerable agitation about the use of southern ports. This has been brought about by the fact that during the war this country was unable to do its foreign import and export business through the ports of New York and Boston. The result is that after our experience in the war it is absolutely necessary, as it seems to me, that we should utilize our southern ports as well as the eastern ports. Not only is the South interested in this proposition, but the people of the Middle West are interested in it. Under these circumstances I was greatly delighted to-day to read in the Washington Post an editorial on southern ports, and I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTHERN PORTS.

"There are strong reasons back of the preferential railroad rates to southern ports in an effort to divert traffic from New York and Boston. These rates have been attacked by the trunk lines which run to the East from the interior of the country, but they are to be defended by a large delegation of business men from the Middle West, who realize that it is quite necessary to develop new ports if the United States is to become the leading shipping Nation of the world in accordance with a national ambition.

"Among the lessons taught by the war was the necessity of developing port facilities. The congestion at New York and Boston was so great as to seriously interfere with the shipment of troops and supplies to Europe, and as a result the ports of Newport News and Charleston were improved and facilities provided which will make them very useful in accommodating the commerce of the United States in the future.

"Concentrated use of New York and Boston not only places a great strain upon those ports but it also congests the railroad lines which feed them. If Mobile, New Orleans, and Port Arthur, as well as other excellent harbors, are provided with adequate port facilities they will relieve the eastern ports and at the same time relieve the railroads leading to them.

"It is well recognized that the most promising field for American foreign trade is in South America and the Orient. This trade can best be served through South Atlantic and Gulf ports which are the natural outlets for those destinations. There is no cause for alarm upon the part of New York and Boston, for they will have all the traffic they can accommodate if the hopes of this country are half realized. Clearly it is the duty of the Railroad Administration to make a preferential rate which will divert trade to southern ports, and it also is the duty of Congress to make adequate provision for terminals which will accommodate the traffic that is certain to result from such rates. This is not a question of favoring one section over another or of favoring certain railroads over others. It is a prudent move to take care of the foreign commerce that is to accrue to the United States."

VISITORS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A statute of the United States requires the Presiding Officer in the month of January of each year to appoint on the part of the Senate four members of the visiting committee to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. In the discharge of that duty the Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3331. An act authorizing the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington, at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States; and

H. R. 11606. An act to authorize the county of Fountain, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind.

CLAIM OF CHARLES S. HOOD (S. DOC. NO. 183).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of an investigation of the claim of Charles S. Hood, a half-blood Modoc Indian, for payment for alleged services performed by him, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

STATE BANKS IN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM (S. DOC. NO. 184).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, certain information relative to whether any method of coercion has been resorted to to compel State banks to join the Federal reserve system, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON & OLD DOMINION RAILWAY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Washington & Old Dominion Railway for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of San Francisco County Committee, American Legion, of San Francisco, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for increased pay for officers and enlisted men now serving in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Theodore Roosevelt Post, No. 26, American Legion, of Santa Rosa, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the productive agricultural area of the Imperial and Coachella Valleys, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Culbertson, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide seed grain for 1920 planting to drouth-stricken farmers, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1003) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 396) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 175) for the relief of Kny-Scheerer Corporation (Rept. No. 397);

A bill (S. 2292) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation (Rept. No. 398); and

A bill (S. 3381) for the relief of Gertrude Lustig (Rept. No. 399).

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3792) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the United States Army, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 400) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000 made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 401) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 3809) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the construction of a public building at South St. Paul, Minn.; and

A bill (S. 3810) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the construction of a public building at Montevideo, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3811) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Williams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3812) granting an increase of pension to John B. Du Roy (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States air reserve force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REVENUE FROM CUSTOMS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 for collecting the revenue from customs, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11368, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first acted upon.

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will have to be formally read then.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw his objection. I think we will have no trouble with the item in which he is interested when we reach it. The course I propose is the usual one and will save time.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I will withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read for action upon the amendments of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Ball	Harrison	New	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Nugent	Smoot
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Capper	Kellogg	Phelan	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Phipps	Townsend
Culberson	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kirby	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren
Fernald	McKellar	Sherman	Watson
Gerry	McLean	Simmons	Wolcott
Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on official business.

He is attending a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to state on behalf of the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] that he is confined to his bed by illness, and is therefore unavoidably detained at his home.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on official business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Irrigation on Indian reservations (reimbursable)," on page 3, line 1, after the word "one," to strike out "Sand Creek, agency and miscellaneous projects: Klamath Reservation, $6,100"; and in line 3, after "$1,000," to strike out "Colville Reservation, $6,000; total, $13,000," so as to make the clause read:

Irrigation district 1: Round Valley Reservation, Calif., $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after the word "five," to strike out "Southern Ute Reservation, Pine River project, $8,000"; and in line 22, after the word "total," to strike out "$67,000" and insert "$59,000," so as to make the clause read:

Irrigation district 5: San Juan Reservation, $20,000; New Mexico Pueblos, $11,000; Zuni Reservation, $9,800; Navajo and Hopi, miscellaneous projects, including Tes-nos-pos, Moencopi Wash, Capt. Tom Wash, and Red Lake, $18,200; total, $59,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 12, after the words "Geological Survey," to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

For cooperative stream gauging with the United States Geological Survey, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 17, to insert:

Irrigation district 1: Sand Creek, agency and miscellaneous projects, Klamath Reservation, $6,100; Colville Reservation, $6,000; irrigation district 5: Southern Ute Reservation, Pine River project, $8,000; the above amounts to be paid out of tribal funds; reimbursable under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "reservations," to strike out "$224,185" and insert "$222,185," so as to read:

In all, for irrigation on Indian reservations, $222,185, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 582): Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which public funds are or may be otherwise available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Suppressing liquor traffic," on page 6, line 20, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$65,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Relieving distress, etc.," on page 7, line 1, after the word "sanatoria," to strike out "$330,000" and insert "$365,000"; in line 15, after the word "Oklahoma," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$30,000"; and in line 23, after the words "South Dakota," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the relief and care of destitute Indians not otherwise provided for, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including transportation of patients to and from hospitals and sanatoria, $365,000: Provided further, That this appropriation may be used also for general medical and surgical treatment of Indians, including the maintenance and operation of general hospitals, where no other funds are applicable or available for that purpose: Provided further, That out of the appropriation herein authorized there shall be available for the maintenance of the sanatoria and hospitals hereinafter named, and for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, equipment, and improvements, not to exceed the following amounts: Blackfeet Hospital, Montana, $12,500; Carson Hospital, Nevada, $10,000; Cheyenne and Arapahoe Hospital, Oklahoma, $10,000; Choctaw and Chickasaw Hospital, Oklahoma, $30,000; Fort Lapwai Sanatorium, Idaho, $40,000; Laguna Sanatorium, New Mexico, $17,000; Mescalero Hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Navajo Sanatorium, Arizona, $10,000; Pima Hospital, Arizona, $10,000; Phoenix Sanatorium, Arizona, $40,000; Spokane Hospital, Washington, $10,000; Sac and Fox Sanatorium, Iowa, $25,000; Turtle Mountain Hospital, North Dakota, $10,000; Winnebago Hospital, Nebraska, $15,000; Crow Creek Hospital, South Dakota, $8,000; Hoopa Valley Hospital, California, $10,000; Jicarilla Hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Truxton Canyon camp hospital, Arizona, $10,000; Indian Oasis Hospital, Arizona, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Support of Indian schools," on page 8, line 10, after the word "than," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty"; in line 11, before the word "pupils," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; and in line 18, after the word "than," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, and other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,600,000: Provided, That not to exceed $40,000 of this amount may be used for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind Indian children: Provided, That all reservation and nonreservation boarding schools, with an average attendance of less than 40 and 75 pupils, respectively, shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1921. The pupils in schools so discontinued shall be transferred first, if possible, to Indian day schools or State public schools; second, to adjacent reservation or nonreservation boarding schools, to the limit of the capacity of said schools: Provided further, That all day schools with an average attendance of less than eight be, and are hereby, discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1921: And provided further, That all moneys appropriated for any school discontinued pursuant to this act or for other cause, shall be returned immediately to the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make and enforce such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure the enrollment and regular attendance of eligible Indian children who are wards of the Government in schools maintained for their benefit by the United States or in public schools: Provided further, That not more than $200,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Indian school transportation," on page 10, line 9, after the word "training," to strike out "$70,000" and insert "$68,000," so as to make the clause read:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training, $68,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment: Provided further, That where practicable the transportation and expenses of pupils shall be refunded and shall be returned to the appropriation from which paid. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native Indian pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Industrial work and care of timber," on page 11, line 10, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$465,000" and insert "$460,000," so as to read:

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $460,000, of which sum not less than $75,000 shall be used for the employment of field matrons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Telegraphing and telephoning," on page 12, line 17, after the word "Washington," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$7,500," so as to make the clause read:

For telegraph and telephone toll messages on business pertaining to the Indian Service sent and received by the Bureau of Indian Affairs at Washington, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Court costs," on page 12, line 24, after the words "public lands," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$800," so as to make the clause read:

For witness fees and other legal expenses incurred in suits instituted in behalf of or against Indians involving the question of title to lands allotted to them, or the right of possession of personal property held by them, and in hearings set by the United States local land officers to determine the rights of Indians to public lands, $800: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the payment of attorneys' fees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Pay of judges of Indian courts," on page 13, line 12, after the word "exist," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$7,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of judges of Indian courts where tribal relations now exist, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 3, to strike out:

COMPETENCY COMMISSIONS.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend not less than $25,000 out of applicable funds in the work of determining the competency of Indians by competency commissions on Indian reservations outside of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Determining heirs," on page 15, line 22, after the word "provided," to strike out:

Provided further, That in the absence of any good faith contest on a question of fact material and relevant to the determination of the heirs of an Indian decedent, no fee shall be charged against the estate of such Indian decedent under the provisions of this paragraph unless the final order determining the heirs of such decedent shall have been made within one year after the death of such decedent, if such decedent died subsequent to June 1, 1920; if such decedent died prior to June 1, 1920, then such final order must be made prior to May 1, 1921, or no fee shall be chargeable against the estate of such decedent.

So as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted property, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000, reimbursable as provided by existing law: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $30,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Indian Office in connection with the work of determining the heirs of deceased Indians, and examining their wills, out of the $100,000 appropriated herein: And provided further, That hereafter upon a determination of the heirs of any trust or restricted Indian property of the value of $250 or more, or to any allotment, or, after approval by the Secretary of the Interior of any will covering such trust or restricted property, there shall be paid by such heirs, or by the beneficiaries under such will, or from the estate of the decedent, or from the proceeds of sale of the allotment, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $15 where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent does not exceed the sum of $1,000. Where the appraised value of the estate of decedent is more than $1,000 and less than $3,000, $20; where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is $3,000 but not more than $5,000, the sum of $25, and where the appraised value of the estate of the decedent is $5,000 or over, the sum of $50, which amount shall be accounted for and paid in the Treasury of the United States; and a report shall be made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday in December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein provided: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Suppressing contagious diseases among live stock of Indians," on page 17, line 22, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For reimbursing Indians for live stock which may be hereafter destroyed on account of being infected with dourine or other contagious diseases, and for expenses in connection with the work of eradicating and preventing such diseases, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Advertisement for sale of Indian lands (reimbursable)," on page 18, after line 16, to insert:

That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may authorize the printing and issuing by Indian schools of such journals, magazines, periodicals, and other publications as, in his judgment, will aid in the education and civilization of the Indians: Provided, That no new publications shall be printed or issued at any Indian school.

Mr. SMOOT. I make the point of order against that amendment as being general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment is subject to the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 18, after line 22, to insert:

That any disbursing agent of the Indian Service, with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, may authorize a clerk employed in his office to act in his place and discharge all the duties devolved upon him by law or regulations during such time as he may be unable to perform the duties of his position because of absence, physical disability, or other disqualifying circumstances: Provided, That the official bond given by the disbursing agent to the United States shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the employee authorized to act in his place, who shall give bond to the disbursing agent in such sums as the latter may require, and with respect to any and all acts performed by him while acting for his principal, shall be subject to all the liabilities and penalties prescribed by law for official misconduct of disbursing agents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 23, after the words "to be," to strike out "covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts" and insert "used for defraying, in whole or in part, the administrative expenses of the Indian field service of the particular reservation where such lands, or the timber thereon, are sold, leased, or assigned," so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter in the sale of all Indian allotments, or in leases, or assignment of leases, covering tribal or allotted lands for mineral, farming, grazing, business or other purposes, or in the sale of timber thereon, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to charge a reasonable fee for the work incident to the sale, leasing, or assigning of such lands, or in the sale of the timber, or in the administration of Indian forests, to be paid by vendees, lessees, or assignees, or from the proceeds of sales, the amounts collected to be used for defraying, in whole or in part, the administrative expenses of the Indian field service of the particular reservation where such lands, or the timber thereon, are sold, leased, or assigned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona," on page 20, line 14, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$12,500"; and in line 16, after the words "in all," to strike out "$162,500" and insert "$160,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $142,500; for general repairs and improvements, $12,500; for remodeling ice plant, $5,000; in all, $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 9, after "page 273," to strike out "$53,400" and insert "$50,000"; and in line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$89,400" and insert "$86,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the construction of the necessary canals and laterals for the utilization of water from the pumping plant on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, as provided in the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 273), $50,000; and for maintaining and operating the pumping plant, canals, and structures, $36,000; in all, $86,000, reimbursable as provided in the aforesaid act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, after the word "reservations," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo and Hopi Indians on the Navajo, Moqui, Pueblo, Bonito, San Juan, and Western Navajo Reservations, $35,000, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, after "$150,000," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For completing the construction by the Indian Service of a dam with a bridge superstructure and the necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River for the irrigation of Indian land and Indian allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army in paragraph 217 of its report to the Secretary of War of February 14, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 791), $150,000, to be immediately available, reimbursable as provided in section 2 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 522): Provided, That the limit of cost of the said dam and bridge fixed by the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 569), is hereby changed from $250,000 to $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 13, after "$75,000," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For completing the construction by the Indian Service of a diversion dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., as provided by the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 130), $75,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the total cost is hereby changed from $175,000 to $250,000, to remain available until expended, reimbursable as provided by the aforesaid act of May 18, 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 1, after the word "Indians," to insert "what part by the county, and what part by the State of Arizona," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing a road between Ajo and Tucson, across said reservation, and to submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1920, which report shall include a recommendation by the said Secretary as to what proportionate part of the construction of said road should be paid by the United States on behalf of the Papago Indians, what part by the county, and what part by the State of Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on page 25, line 1, after the word "county," I move to insert the words "of Pima."

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the committee is agreed to. In the absence of objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 25, after line 2, to insert:

For construction of approaches to two bridges over the Little Colorado and Canon Diablo Rivers, near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz., appropriations for which were made by the act of June 30, 1919,

$3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary to be immediately available, reimbursable from the tribal funds of the Navajo Indians, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the construction of said bridges, which is hereby made available for the approaches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 11, to insert:

For payment of not to exceed one-fourth the cost of the construction of a steel bridge and approaches thereto across the Salt River on the Salt River Indian Reservation, near Lehi, Maricopa County, Ariz., $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available only upon completion of the said bridge and its approaches by the State of Arizona, the county of Maricopa, or the city of Phoenix, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior and in conformity with plans approved by him, at the location mentioned in the said Secretary's report to Congress dated December 4, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 474, 66th Cong., 2d sess.), pursuant to the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 11), and upon payment by the said State of Arizona, county of Maricopa, and city of Phoenix, in equal proportions of not less than three-fourths the total cost of said bridge and its approaches: Provided, That should the total cost of said bridge exceed the sum of $60,000, the total liability of the United States shall be limited to the $15,000 hereby appropriated: And provided further, That the said county of Maricopa shall agree to defray all expenses of the maintenance and repair of said bridge and its approaches and to keep same in good condition at all times.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, under the head of California," on page 27, line 14, after "$10,500," to insert "to be immediately available and," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the construction of a road from Hoopa to Weitchpec, on the Hoopa Valley Reservation, in Humboldt County, Calif., in conformity with plans approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $10,500, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed out of any funds of the Indians of said reservation now or hereafter placed to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, in accordance with the Indian appropriation act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pp. 570, 571.).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 10, to insert:

FLORIDA.

SEC. 4. For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education, $10,000, including the construction and equipment of necessary buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to renumber the sections of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," on page 28, in line 18, after the word "employees," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$29,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 5. For support and civilization of Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho, including pay of employees, $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 21, after the word "system," to strike out "$55,700" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

For improvement, maintenance, and operation of the Fort Hall irrigation system, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 21, after $50,000, to strike out:

Provided, That expenditures hereunder for improvements shall be reimbursable to the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907: Provided, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1024), and the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 274), requiring the sale of water rights in this system for lands in private ownership at $6 per acre are hereby repealed and that hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the white landowners under the said system the sum of $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white persons for which water for irrigation purposes can now be delivered through such system and to expend the money so collected for continuing the construction, enlargement, and improvement of the said system, in accordance with the report heretofore made by a board consisting of the chief engineer of the United States Indian Service, the State engineer of the State of Idaho, and an engineer representing the Fort Hall Water Users' Association: Provided, however, That no such money shall be so expended unless and until the holders of private lands which have heretofore acquired a water right in the said system, under the aforesaid acts, at $6 per acre, shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to pay in addition to such $6 per acre an amount which shall equal the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the provision of the aforesaid act of March 1, 1907, requiring the payment of the water-right charges to be made in five equal annual installments is hereby repealed: Provided further, That the $10 per acre to be collected as herein provided for shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land in behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against said land when the amount of such total charge can be determined: And provided further, That further payments to be applied on the construction charges of such system shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the white landowners under the said system the sum of $10 per acre for each acre of land to which water for irrigation purposes can be delivered from the said system, which sum shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land in behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against said land when the amount of such total charge can be determined, and the total amount so collected, including any moneys collected from Indian allottees, shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for continuing the construction work on the said system.

And insert:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1024), and the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 274), requiring the sale of water rights in this system for land in private ownership at $6 per acre, are hereby repealed with respect to future sales of water rights, and that hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the white landowners under the said system the sum of not exceeding $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white persons for which water for irrigation purposes can now be delivered through such system and to expend the money so collected for continuing the construction, enlargement, and improvement of the said system in accordance with the report heretofore made by a board consisting of the chief engineer of the United States Indian Service, the State engineer of the State of Idaho, and an engineer representing the Fort Hall Water Users' Association: Provided, however, That no such money shall be so expended unless and until the holders of private lands which have heretofore acquired a water right in the said system, under the aforesaid acts, at $6 per acre, and who require or take additional water, shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to pay their pro rata share of the cost of the enlargement and the improvement of the said system as hereinbefore provided for: Provided further, That the amounts to be collected from the water users as herein provided for shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land on behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against such land when the amount of such total charge can be determined: And provided further, That further payments to be applied on the construction charges of such system shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. NUGENT. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "the," the third word in line 11, on page 30, and inserting the words "such new."

Mr. CURTIS. I think that amendment should be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 30, line 11, before the word "white," it is proposed to strike out "the" and insert "such new."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NUGENT. I move a further amendment, namely, to strike out the word "now" on line 14, page 30.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if I understand the matter aright, that amendment will be inconsistent with what precedes it. I understand that it is intended by the first part of the amendment to exact in the future the actual cost of the system, whatever it may be, which, as I understand from such information as has come to me, is somewhere about $25 an acre. Now, if it is intended to exact of the new water-right owners but $10 an acre, it will be quite inconsistent with the provisions that go before.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not hear the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am adverting to the change suggested by the Senator from Idaho, namely, to strike out the word "the" in line 11 and to substitute therefor the words "such new," so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from such new white landowners under the said system the sum of not exceeding $10 per acre.

But in the initial paragraph it is provided that future sales of water rights shall be at the actual cost of construction.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think that will be covered by an amendment which the Senator will offer a little later on, whereby the present water users—that is, the old claimants—will be required to pay for whatever additional water they take under the extended or enlarged project.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but the amendment now proposed by the Senator will give to the new owners their water at $10 an acre, though it will cost the Government presumably $25 or more for the purpose of establishing it.

Mr. CURTIS. No; the Senator is mistaken about that. They must pay the actual per acre cost.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then what is the significance of this?

Mr. CURTIS. They take the $10 payment and use it for extending and enlarging the project. That is the intention.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that is the idea, then the amendment should not be adopted, because it is not "such new landowners" at all; it is the old landowners who are called upon to contribute this $10 per acre. That is to say, that is a partial payment upon the amount to be paid by them; and yet I do not understand that, because the old landowners were to get their water at $6 an acre.

Mr. CURTIS. The old landowners were to get their water at $6 an acre. This amendment was drawn so as not to disturb the old contracts, but to make the old landowners pay for whatever additional water they take at the per acre cost. The new landowners were to take the water at the per acre cost, but to pay $10 down, where the other people had only paid $6, to be used as a fund to enlarge the system. The Senator will notice in lines 7 and 8:

That hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, as I have stated to the committee a good many times, I knew nothing about irrigation, so I requested the department to prepare this item, and they prepared it with that object in view. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] was of the idea that if this change was not made and the word "new" inserted in the first place and then the other amendment made further down, there would have to be an agreement reached with the old water users, which could not be had.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, Mr. President, the payment of $10 per acre can not possibly apply to the old owners, because they are to get the thing at $6 per acre.

Mr. CURTIS. They already have it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; but it must apply to the new ones.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if the Senator from Kansas will give me his attention, it will be observed that this $10 per acre is to be paid by such white persons as can now secure water through such system. If they can now secure water through such system, you do not need to extend the thing in order to accommodate them. That obviously applies to those who can get the water now; and those who can get the water now are entitled to get it at $6 an acre.

Mr. CURTIS. That is, they are entitled to what they can get under the system as it is, but for whatever additional water is given them they must pay the additional cost.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But it does not say so.

Mr. CURTIS. That was the intention of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think the language conveys that idea at all.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in order to provide for that matter I have, and will suggest, another amendment which probably will cover the objection raised by the Senator from Montana. Let me say, Mr. President, that the committee amendment was drafted, according to my understanding, by the department, and it was concurred in, in part, by the Idaho delegation in the House, as well as by a number of persons who are settlers upon the Fort Hall reclamation project, and who are vitally interested in it, and if it is agreeable to them, they being the interested parties, as a matter of course, I have no objection to raise to it. I have suggested these amendments, however, solely for the purpose of making it plain that there shall be no further charge than $6 an acre against the settlers who located on that project in accordance with the act of Congress of 1907 and the act of Congress of 1910, under which they were to secure their water rights at $6 per acre. I doubt, of course, whether any action could be taken by this Congress that would deprive those people of their vested rights under the enactments to which I have referred; but in order to make it certain that the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to dispose of further water rights on that project, and that such further disposition would refer to new settlers, I have offered the amendment which specifically provides that as to such new landowners the price to be paid by them for water shall be $10 per acre for such water as can be delivered through the system as at present constructed; and, further, I have prepared an amendment by which I ask to strike out, on line 24, page 30, the words "and who require or take additional water" and insert the words "and who may apply for additional water," so that those who apply for additional water shall be obliged to pay the pro rata cost of construction necessary to furnish said water.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I simply want to express the view that the language of this bill does not in any wise whatever accomplish what evidently is in the minds of those who are responsible for it. I understand the idea is that the old settlers are to have their water at $6 an acre, that the new owners are to have their water at $25 an acre, and that they are to pay $10 down, whenever water is delivered to them, on the actual cost price, whatever it may be; but that is not expressed in this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. And that the present holders shall pay the actual per acre cost of all additional water furnished them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the intention.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that idea is not expressed by this language, and it is perfectly plain that it is not. Let me read it, and ask the attention of the Senators to it:

That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, * * * requiring the sale of water rights in this system for land in private ownership at $6 per acre, are hereby repealed with respect to future sales of water rights, and that hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system.

That is to say, that all those to whom water is now available, without any additional expenditure or expense whatever, get their water at $6 an acre. The remainder, however—those who get their water by reason of future expenditures—will be obliged to pay the actual cost of the water, whatever it may be.

The bill continues:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from—

According to the amendment—

such new landowners—

That is to say, those landowners who hereafter will be required to pay the $25 an acre—

under the said system the sum of not exceeding $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white persons for which water for irrigation purposes can now be delivered.

You can not deliver any water now except to those who are entitled to their water at $6 an acre; and it is only those to whom water can be delivered in the future, by reason of the new and additional expenditures, that will be called upon to pay the $10 per acre.

Mr. CURTIS. I catch the Senator's point. I will suggest to the Senator from Idaho that that could be covered by making an addition to his amendment, reading "and the present holders who require or take additional water."

Mr. NUGENT. I doubt very much whether that is necessary, and for this reason: The system is already completed to a certain point, and this committee amendment, as prepared by the department, provides, in the first instance, that no more water rights shall be sold for $6 per acre, and that the Secretary may sell new water rights at the rate of $10 per acre for water for irrigation purposes which can now be delivered. "Now be delivered" necessarily means "can be delivered through the system as it is at present constructed"; and, further, the amendment provides that that money shall not be expended in the further completion of the project until such time as the settlers who are now in there, and who desire to have additional water for irrigation purposes, enter into such contract with the Secretary of the Interior, as the amendment provides for the payment of their pro rata share of the cost of construction. I will ask the chairman of the committee whether that is not correct.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it is. As I say, I know nothing about irrigation, but I think the matter is covered in line 24—and who require or take additional water, shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to pay their pro rata share of the cost of the enlargement and the improvement of the said system as hereinbefore provided for.

But by repeating the words above, it seems to me, it could be very easily covered.

Mr. NUGENT. It is a matter of no consequence to me in what language this amendment is couched, so long as the purpose is attained; and if the Senator has any suggestions to make with respect to a change of language, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am simply trying to call attention to the fact that you are not accomplishing what you evidently have in mind. I do not care about the matter at all, but I refer to the language suggested by the Senator from Idaho. He wants to have it read "such new landowners." That is evidently inappropriate, because no new landowners have been referred to theretofore.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest to the Senator that he change the amendment and add, after the words suggested by him, "and the present landowners who require or take additional water." Then there will be no question about it. If they do not take it they are not obligated to pay. If they do take it they simply pay for what they get.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to make another suggestion in that connection, if I may be permitted to do so. The original bill provides that it is only the white landowners who are to be called upon to pay the $10. The Indians will not be called upon to pay anything under the original bill. But if we make it read "such new landowners," then the Indians, as well as the whites, will be obliged to pay. I take it that all the land is owned either by Indians or by whites, and there are no new white owners any more than there are any new Indian owners.

Mr. CURTIS. There are white settlers who have bought outside the project. I think the Senator will agree with me that all those taking additional land or additional water should pay for it. I think the act of 1907 was a very serious mistake, as was the act of 1910. I believe that the people who take the water and use the water should pay for it. Therefore I was opposed to permitting the old settlers to get any additional rights unless they paid what those rights cost the Government. As it is you are imposing this additional burden upon the Indians, really.

Mr. NUGENT. I apprehend, Mr. President, and from what I have heard I am inclined to the opinion, that the department will recommend legislation by Congress to take care of the cost of this construction so far as the Indian lands are concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that we pass over the amendment that it may be perfected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have a suggestion to make which I submit for the consideration of the chairman and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], which to my mind would convey the idea which they seek to express. It is to rewrite lines 9, 10, and 11 so that they shall read:

But the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from new white applicants for water under the said system, or from applicants for additional water, the sum of not exceeding $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white person.

Mr. CURTIS. That amendment will be perfectly satisfactory to the chairman, if it is to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I suggest that the matter be passed over temporarily.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 16, after the parentheses, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,500," so as to make the clause read:

For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Bannocks in Idaho: For pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of July 3, 1868), $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Kansas," on page 31, line 21, to change the number of the section from 5 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 32, line 11, to change the number of the section from 6 to 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 32, line 17, to change the number of the section from 7 to 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, beginning in line 23, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That all of said appropriation, together with one-third of the funds arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 642), and set aside by said act of 1889 exclusively for the "establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians," shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in aiding in the establishment and maintenance of public schools in connection with, and under the control of, the public-school system of the State of Minnesota at places where such schools are needed for the proper education of Chippewa children.

So as to make the clause read:

For support of a school or schools for the Chippewas of the Mississippi in Minnesota (art. 3, treaty of Mar. 19, 1867), $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 19, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $85,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of the above amount shall be used to aid the public schools in the Chippewa country: Provided further, That Indian children shall at all times be admitted to said schools on the same terms and conditions as white children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Mississippi," on page 35, line 22, to change the number of the section from "8" to "9"; and in line 23, after the word "Mississippi," to insert "and for their education and civilization, including pay of employees and purchase of land for school purposes, $30,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. For the relief of distress among the full-blood Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, and for their education and civilization, including pay of employees and purchase of land for school purposes, $30,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that that item may be passed over, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] wants to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," on page 36, line 2, to change the number of the section from "9" to "10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 18, after "1868," to strike out "$3,100" and insert "$2,580"; in line 19, after the word "treaty," to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$720"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$5,500" and insert "$4,500," so as to make the clause read:

For fulfilling treaties with Crows, Montana: For pay of physician, $1,200; and for pay of carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of May 7, 1868), $2,580; for pay of second blacksmith (art. 8, same treaty), $720; in all, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 2, after "1868," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence and civilization of the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes (agreement with the Sioux Indians, approved February 28, 1877), including Northern Cheyennes removed from Pine Ridge Agency to Tongue River, Mont., and for pay of physician, two teachers, two carpenters, one miller, two farmers, a blacksmith, and engineer (art. 7, treaty of May 10, 1868), $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 8, after the word "employees," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$9,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of the Rocky Boy Band of Chippewas, and other indigent and homeless Indians in the State of Montana, including pay of employees, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 12, after the word "Montana," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $200,000 (reimbursable), to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $100,000 of any tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians in the State of Montana, and to expend the same for improvement, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Crow Reservation, Mont., including maintenance assessments payable to the Two Leggins Water Users' Association, said sum, or such part thereof as may be used for the purpose indicated, to be reimbursed to the tribe under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 3, to insert:

For the construction of a bridge across Two Medicine Creek, on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, being a link in the highway connecting Yellowstone National Park with Glacier National Park, reimbursable out of any funds now or which may hereafter be in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Blackfeet Indians, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 40, line 12, to change the number of the section from "10" to "11."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," on page 40, line 18, to change the number of the section from "11" to "12."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 25, after the word "Nevada," to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$3,000," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance and operation of the irrigation system on the Pyramid Lake Reservation, Nev., $3,000, reimbursable from any funds of the Indians of this reservation now or hereafter available.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee the cause of the change in that provision?

Mr. CURTIS. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated that that would give them all the money they could possibly use next year.

Mr. PITTMAN. The estimate of the department was $3,500, was it not?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; but they had last year $2,500, and the commissioner stated to the subcommittee that they could get along with $3,000 instead of $3,500. We asked the commissioner to get along with just as small an amount as he could without doing an injustice to the service or injury to the work, and he reported to the subcommittee that $3,000 would be plenty in that item.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was changed, then, by reason of the action of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. CURTIS. It was.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have nothing further to say about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 41, line 4, to change the number of the section from "12" to "13."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 21, after the word "necessary," to strike out "$25,000, and" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For road and bridge construction on the Mescalero Indian Reservation, in New Mexico, including the purchase of material, equipment, and supplies; the employment of labor; and the cost of surveys, plans, and estimates, if necessary, $15,000, to be reimbursed from any funds of the Indians of said reservation now or hereafter on deposit in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 15, to insert:

For the purchase of land for the Navajo Tribes, $100,000, to remain available until used and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, reimbursable to the United States from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Navajo Indians, and to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said tribe of Indians until paid: Provided, That not exceeding $10,000 of the appropriation may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in leasing grazing lands for the benefit of the said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," on page 44, line 2, to change the number of the section from "13" to "14."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Carolina," on page 44, line 9, to change the number of the section from "14" to "15."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," on page 44, line 16, to change the number of the section from "15" to "16."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 20, after the word "employees," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "14,500," so as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of Indians at Fort Berthold Agency, in North Dakota, including pay of employees, $14,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 11, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., for 253.04 acres of land embraced within the boundaries of the Verendrye National Monument, established by presidential proclamation of June 29, 1917, the sum of $1,265.20, representing the appraised value of said land at $5 per acre: Provided, That the sum appropriated shall be subject to expenditure upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 46, line 24, to change the number of the section from "16" to "17"; and on page 47, line 2, after the word "employees," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,800," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 17. For support and civilization of the Wichitas and affiliated bands who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 22, to strike out:

For support and civilization of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 2, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, for the support of said Indians and pay of employees maintained for their benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, in line 14, after the word "employees," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 3, after "1892," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$22,900"; and in line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$47,100" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For fulfilling treaties with Pawnees, Oklahoma: For perpetual annuity, to be paid in cash to the Pawnees (art. 3, agreement of Nov. 23, 1892), $22,900; for support of two manual-labor schools (art. 3, treaty of Sept. 24, 1857), $10,000; for pay of one farmer, two blacksmiths, one miller, one engineer and apprentices, and two teachers (art. 4, same treaty), $5,400; for purchase of iron and steel and other necessaries for the shops (art. 4, same treaty), $500; for pay of physician and purchase of medicines, $1,200; in all, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 20, to insert:

That the provision in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $35,000 from unexpended Osage tribal funds heretofore appropriated for construction of a fireproof office building for Osage Agency is hereby amended to provide that not exceeding $50,000 of such unexpended Osage tribal funds may be used in the construction of such fireproof building, including the removal of the present office building and rearrangement of the interior of same for employees' quarters, said amount to be immediately available.

The use of the sum of $10,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available, is hereby authorized from funds belonging to the Osage Tribe to defray expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred in connection with visits to Washington, D. C., by the Osage Tribal Council and other members of said tribe, when duly authorized or approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 51, line 16, to change the number of the section from 17 to 18; and in line 18, after the word "employees," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$185,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 18. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $185,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes through the Secretary of the Interior, showing in detail the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by this provision: Provided further, That hereafter no undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or uncontested agricultural and mineral leases (excluding oil and gas leases) made by individual restricted Indian allottees or their heirs shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases (except oil and gas leases) heretofore required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 10, after the word "payments," to strike out:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, is authorized to make per capita payments annually hereafter to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma, entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, of all the available money held by the Government of the United States for the benefit of said tribes in excess of that required for expenditures authorized by annual appropriations made therefrom or by existing law.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $100 per capita, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs, as provided herein, shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds for the expenses and the compensation of all necessary employees for the distribution of the said per capita payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 6, before the word "statutes," to strike out "United States," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $7,500 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof, as provided for in the act approved February 19, 1912, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes" (37 Stat. L., p. 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oregon," on page 57, line 2, to change the number of the section from 18 to 19, and in line 4, after the word "employees," to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,750," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 19. For support and civilization of Indians of the Klamath Agency, Oreg., including pay of employees, $5,750.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge why those small cuts were made in the items affecting Oregon? The amounts were very small in the first instance, and it seems to me that if anything is appropriated at all there ought to be enough at least to pay the operating expenses of the agencies already established.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the subcommittee asked the representatives of the department to come before it and show to the subcommittee in each of these cases just what money they needed, and the Senator will notice in the Oregon item, where we give them $5,750, they only have 20 rationed Indians; that is, 20 Indians who really need assistance—I mean in the way of aid, in the way of rations. The others are helped only partly, but get no aid of any kind or character, and the department said they could easily get along with the $5,750. I think last year they spent only a little over $5,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That pays as well for the employees?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it pays the employees. But there are 1,154 Indians there, with only 20 rationed Indians, as I said.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They would have to have the employees whether they had rationed Indians or not.

Mr. CURTIS. This pays the employees.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the department said they were satisfied with those amounts, I have no question about it.

Mr. CURTIS. There is not a reduction made in the bill that was not approved by the department, and they said they could get along with the amounts the committee recommends.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 18, after the word "employees," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Grande Ronde and Siletz Agencies, Oreg., including pay of employees, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 21, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance and operation of the Modoc Point irrigation system within the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, $4,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," on page 57, line 24, to change the number of the section from "19" to "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 23, after "1877," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$193,000"; and on page 59, line 1, after the words "in all," to strike out "$307,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota: For pay of five teachers, one physician, one carpenter, one miller, one engineer, two farmers, and one blacksmith (art. 13, treaty of Apr. 29, 1868), $10,400; for pay of second blacksmith, and furnishing iron, steel, and other material (art. 8 of same treaty), $1,600; for pay of additional employees of the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota, $95,000; for subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization (act of Feb. 28, 1877), $193,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation, and in this service Indians shall be employed whenever practicable; in all, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 16, after the word "asylum," to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting insane Indians to and from said asylum, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 19, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$185,000" and insert "$175,000," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $175,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Sioux Indians of Rosebud Agency, S. Dak., accruing under the act of May 30, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 448), and to expend the same for the support, civilization, and education of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 60, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25,000 of any funds to the credit of the Indians on the Pine Ridge Reservation, and to expend the same for the construction of roads and bridges within said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 5, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000 of any funds to the credit of the Indians on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, and to expend the same for the construction of roads and bridges within said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 11, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of any of the funds to the credit of the Indians on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation and to apply the same to the construction of a bridge and abutments and approaches thereto across the Cheyenne River in the State of South Dakota. This appropriation shall be available only on the condition that the interested counties or the South Dakota Highway Commission contribute to the cost of said bridge in the ratio of $2 for every dollar of Indian funds so expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," on page 60, line 24, to change the number of the section from "20" to "21"; on page 61, line 7, after the word "treaty," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$26,260"; and in line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$53,740" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 21. For support and civilization of Confederated Bands of Utes: For pay of 2 carpenters, 2 millers, 2 farmers, and 2 blacksmiths (art. 15, treaty of Mar. 2, 1868), $6,720; for pay of 2 teachers (same article and treaty), $1,800; for purchase of iron and steel and the necessary tools for blacksmith shop (art. 9, same treaty), $220; for annual amount for the purchase of beef, mutton, wheat flour, beans, and potatoes, or other necessary articles of food, and clothing, and farming equipment (art. 12, same treaty), $26,260; for pay of employees at the several Ute agencies, $15,000; in all, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 11, after the word "employees," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of Indians in Utah, not otherwise provided for, including pay of employees, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 15, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$300,000"; in line 20, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$175,000"; and in line 23, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, within his discretion, the sum of $300,000 of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and to expend the sum of $50,000 of said amount for the benefit of the Ute Mountain (formerly Navajo Springs) Band of said Indians in Colorado, and the sum of $175,000 of said amount for the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, and the sum of $75,000 of said amount for the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, which sums shall be charged to said bands, and the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the accrued interest to and including June 30, 1920, on the funds of the said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 934), and to expend or distribute the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress, on the first Monday in December, 1921, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 3, after "$12,000," to strike out "of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $12,000, and expend the same, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the public schools of Uintah and Duchesne County school districts, Utah: Provided, That Indian children shall at all times be admitted to such schools on an entire equality with white children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," on page 64, line 15, to change the number of the section from 21 to 22, and, in line 17, after the word "employees," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$6,500," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 22. For support and civilization of the D'Wamish and other allied tribes in Washington, including pay of employees, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 4, after the word "reservation," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$250,000"; in line 14, after the word "authorized," to insert "and directed"; in the same line, after the word "collect," to insert "on or before December 31 of each calendar year hereafter, including 1920"; and, in line 16, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$10," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 20,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $250,000: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916: Provided further, That the funds hereby appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of this project: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to collect on or before December 31 of each calendar year hereafter, including 1920, from the white landowners under the said system the sum of —— per acre for each acre of land to which water for irrigation purposes can be delivered from the said system, which sum shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land in behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against said land when the amount of such total charge can be determined, and the total amount so collected, including any money collected from Indian allottees, shall be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for continuing the construction work on the said system.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the figures "$10" were stricken out and "$2" was to be substituted, but the printer made a mistake and left out the "$2," so I ask that "$2" be inserted in the blank in place of the "$10."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 66, line 16, strike out "$10" and insert "$2."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, my attention was diverted when we reached this page. I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why the committee cut the $300,000, in line 5, to $250,000?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in order to keep the bill down as low as possible and to do as near justice as we could to the various parties interested, the committee, after inquiry, found that the $250,000 would run the Yakima project until July 1 of next year; or, rather, that it would take the $300,000, but that $250,000 would run it past the next session of Congress. The idea was that by taking $50,000 off of this item we could add it to another item where the money was needed to carry it on until that time, and we could make $50,000 of the amount appropriated next year immediately available, which would carry it from March until July.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, the Senator, as far as he can, is willing to say that that will be the policy pursued in the next bill.

Mr. CURTIS. As far as I can influence the committee it will be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, I think, appreciates the fact that this is one of the best irrigation projects in the United States, and one of the projects that ought to be carried to completion just as soon as it is possible to do so, because the Indians will get the benefit of every dollar of the appropriation that is made here.

I am in sympathy with the Senator's desire to keep the appropriations down. I feel, however, that a project like this can not be completed too soon, and if money sufficient to carry on the work as rapidly as possible is not appropriated there is in the end a loss or waste. I sympathize with the situation of the Senator, and upon the assurance that he gives with reference to taking care of the matter in the next bill, which I know will pass before the 4th of March of next year, I am confident that it will be taken care of.

Mr. CURTIS. It will be the intention of the present chairman of the committee to do everything he can to bring that about.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there was a committee amendment, on page 67, line 5, which was left out by the printer. The $125,000 should be reduced to $75,000. I ask that that be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 67, line 5, strike out "$125,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to read:

For completing the construction of diversion dams and canal systems for irrigating 12,000 acres of Indian land adjacent to Toppenish and Simcoe Creeks, Yakima Indian Reservation, as provided for in the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 28), $75,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator makes substantially the same statement with reference to this item that he made with reference to the $300,000 item just preceding?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; and the additional statement that I understand it will be some little time before that amount of money will be required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 16, after the word "act," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

That the unexpended balance of approximately $17,025 of the $22,500 appropriated by the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919 (40 Stat. L., p. 588), for the construction of a road on the Quiniault Reservation, Wash., to be reimbursed from any tribal funds of said Indians on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, is hereby reappropriated for the same purposes and upon the same terms and conditions as provided in said act, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 67, line 19, to change the number of the section from "22" to "23."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 8, after the word "employees," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support, education, and civilization of the Pottawatomie Indians who reside in the State of Wisconsin, including pay of employees, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 25, before the word "unexpended," to strike out "For the support and civilization of those portions of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, and to aid said Indians in establishing homes on the lands purchased for them under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1913, $6,899, or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to be reimbursed to the United States out of the appropriation, when made, of the principal due as the proportionate share of said Indians in annuities and moneys of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared as set forth in House Document No. 830 (60th Cong., 1st sess.), and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the said sum in the clearing of land and the purchase of houses, building material, seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment and supplies necessary to enable said Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That the" and insert "The"; on page 69, line 1, before the word "hereby," to strike out "are" and insert "is"; in line 2, after the word "expended," to insert "for the support and civilization of those portions of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan"; and in line 6, after the word "above-mentioned," to strike out "sums" and insert "sum," so as to make the clause read:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1918, approximating $55,057.37, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for the support and civilization of those portions of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan: Provided, however, That the above-mentioned sum shall be used only for the purposes set forth in section 25 of the act approved May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L., pp. 156, 157), and section 24 of the act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., p. 991).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 19, to insert:

That to carry out the provisions of the Chippewa treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., p. 1109), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, in part settlement of the amount, $141,000, found due and heretofore approved for the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin, whose names appear on the final roll prepared by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., pp. 582–605), and contained in House Document No. 1663, said sum of $10,000 to be expended in the purchase of land or for the benefit of said Indians by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 70, line 9, to change the number of the section from "23" to "24."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 17, after "1868," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000"; and in line 20, after the words "in all," to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Shoshones in Wyoming: For pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of July 3, 1868), $4,000; for pay of second blacksmith, and such iron and steel and other materials as may be required, as per article 8, same treaty, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 2, to strike out:

For continuation of investigations, construction, operation, and maintenance of the Riverton project, Wyoming, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March, 1905.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as to the amendment last read, in lines 3 to 6, inclusive, on page 71, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the item and to say that I am entirely in sympathy with the chairman in his general undertaking to cut down expenses of the Government, and especially in the Indian bill generally. I have no comment to make upon the cuts in Wyoming other than this one, which is to cut out all of what is intended to continue the reclamation project at Riverton or near there, which at the present time is being worked to good advantage. I feel that to cut out this amount at this time is really not in the line of economy.

We have now two large drag excavating machines there working with caterpillar tractors, doing the work rapidly, and they have money enough to last not later than the 1st of July, and from then until we can meet in the next session the project will be going back and downhill rather than forward.

I am going to ask the chairman to consider that further when he comes to the conference. I do not want to attack the committee in its move here now, because I know the troubles that one has in charge of an appropriation bill.

The unexpended balance under existing law is estimated at something like $60,000. Out of this amount the pro rata expense of the Denver reclamation headquarters must be met as well as the overhead expenses of the Riverton office, which is approximated at about $12,000, leaving an unexpended balance of about $38,000 to carry on the actual construction work.

The Reclamation Service explains that a balance has accumulated because they have not had sufficient funds to go ahead in a comprehensive and economic manner. They have been holding back, doing only preliminary work, until such time as they could get sufficient funds with which to go at the project with a real organization. They explain that it requires just about the same overhead in spending $50,000 as it does in spending $1,000,000. In the interest of economy they have delayed to avoid driblet expenditures.

All of the preliminary work has been done and now they are ready to commence the actual construction work.

I know that the Riverton project is one of the most desirable projects that is under way in the United States. It covers an immense amount of land and an immense amount of water, and if we can get the work proceeded with as fast as it is now being accomplished we can have those lands where they will be open to the returning soldiers and others who want to get the cheapest good lands they can. They will be taken as rapidly as they are brought into the market, as all the irrigated lands of Wyoming are being brought now into the market.

If the chairman does not feel like now striking out the amendment and disagreeing to it, I am going to ask him to consider it further when it comes to conference, and I now submit for the RECORD and consideration of the conferees a letter from the Director of the United States Reclamation Service, Hon. A. P. Davis:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1920.

Hon. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your inquiry through Mr. Spencer concerning the status of work and appropriations for the Riverton project, the following statement is made:

Under the appropriation for surveys on the Wind River Reservation the Indian Service made available a small amount for reconnoissance by the Reclamation Service of the so-called Riverton project in 1917. This reconnoissance was made by Mr. Whistler, who reported on the subject.

For 1918 Congress made an appropriation of $5,000 for surveys and the preparation of appropriation estimates. This money was expended in the fiscal year 1918 by Mr. C. T. Pease, whose report is printed in the Seventeenth Annual Report of the Reclamation Service, pages 307 to 406. For the fiscal year 1919, for continued investigation and commencement of construction Congress appropriated the sum of $100,000. For the fiscal year 1920 Congress appropriated the sum of $200,000, which amount is now being used. The expenditures are shown in the following table:

	Fiscal year.
	1918	1919	1920
Appropriations	$5,000.00	$100,000.00	$200,000.00
Expenditures	4,580.85	78,357.81	43,781.97
Balance unexpended Nov. 30, 1919	419.15	21,642.19	156,218.03
Liabilities incurred		648.83	97,964.00
Balance unencumbered	419.15	20,993.36	58,254.03

With the funds expended the Reclamation Service has made detailed surveys, including a thorough topographic map of the project, now nearly completed, upon which to classify the lands and determine both the area and water duty of the same. This is a necessary preliminary to a proper layout of the canal system and computation of capacities. Project buildings have been constructed or material ordered therefor. Two large excavating machines have been secured, shipped to the project, and put to work.

The amount of appropriation remaining available for the present year is just about sufficient to keep the excavating machines at work, make the necessary surveys, and complete the buildings in process of erection. The surveys and excavating work could be kept going at an economical rate during the fiscal year 1921 with an appropriation of $150,000. If a larger sum were made available, work could be carried on in the construction of a diversion dam, which is desirable for the early completion of the project.

Very truly, yours, A. P. DAVIS, Director.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, the item will be considered in conference, but I do not feel that the amendment should be defeated. I think the amendment should be agreed to. The committee was induced to cut out the appropriation for several reasons. First, it was not estimated for by the department, but was put in by the Indian Affairs Committee without any estimate from the department at all. In the second place, the department advies me by letter of last Monday that they still have nearly $62,000 on hand.

In the third place, I might add that the Indian Bureau does not feel that the item belongs in the Indian bill. They claim that only about 10 per cent of the land is Indian land and the balance is the white man's land, and therefore the matter should be handled, if at all, through the Reclamation Service. They claim that they have all the information they need with reference to the cost of the project, which will be about $6,000,000, and they do not feel that the Indian funds should be used to the extent of $6,000,000 on a project of this kind, but that if it is to be handled at all it should be through the Reclamation Service.

I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. The matter of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 will not be asked of the Indian Department, and that department knows it very well. The proposition that only 10 per cent is Indian land does not tell the whole story, because there is not only 10 per cent or more actually under cultivation under this water, but there is all the land lying along the line that has increased, in fact doubled and trebled, in value. A matter of five or six million dollars means that if it is carried to the ultimate limitation to which it might be carried there would be land enough brought under the project, and advantageously so, to amount to the expenditure of that sum; but, on the other hand, it is one of those projects that as it proceeds every dollar that is invested in it brings under irrigation a certain percentage of land. It is "pay as you go" in that way.

This money is reimbursable from the Indian funds, because they are getting the benefit. Eventually, of course, there will be money from another source, from the regular irrigation and reclamation; but it would be more unjust, in addition to paying these Indians for their land, to appropriate out of the general fund to reclaim and irrigate the Indian lands than it would even if the Indian funds were used to build all of this project. From a reliable source we are informed that approximately $70,000 is collected annually by the Indian Department from the stockmen for grazing privileges on the ceded portion of the Shoshone Indian Reservation. Large oil deposits have been discovered on this tract of land. A portion of these were recently sold and the Indians obtained a total bonus of $185,000 besides an eighth royalty in every lease which was made. Coal mines are being developed upon these lands, and it is expected that they will be a rich source of revenue to the Indians. We ask the Indian Bureau to do its share, and its share has not yet been done. As I said, I leave the matter with the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 21, to change the number of the section from "24" to "25"; and on page 72, line 5, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$1,436,604" and insert "$1,367,177," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 25. That in addition to the Indian tribal and treaty funds, the expenditure of which is specifically authorized elsewhere in this act, and such sums as may be required for equalization of allotments, education of Indian children, per capita and other payments to Indians, reimbursement to the United States of the expenditures from reimbursable appropriations, and expenditures for the Five Civilized Tribes, in accordance with existing laws, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not exceeding $1,367,177 from the funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes, for support and civilization of the Indians under the jurisdiction of the following agencies, to wit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 25, after the words "Red Lake," to strike out "$27,500" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

Minnesota: Fond du Lac, $250; Leech Lake, $850; Red Lake, $15,000; White Earth, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 7, after "$50,000," to insert "and the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for these Indians in the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1919, is hereby made available until expended," so as to make the clause read:

New Mexico: Jicarilla, $50,000, and the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for these Indians in the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1919, is hereby made available until expended; Mescalero, $10,000; Navajo, $922; Pueblo Bonito, $1,118; San Juan, $5,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 12, after the words "Eastern Cherokee," to strike out "$15,464" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

North Carolina: Eastern Cherokee, $5,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire why that great cut is made in the House appropriation from $15,464 to $5,000?

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or his assistant who appeared before the committee said that they could get along with that amount of money very easily this year; that they had spent that much last year, and that it was all that was required.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that is so, I have nothing to say. All I want is what is absolutely necessary.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to state to the Senator that we did not make a reduction in any item for the support, civilization, or health of the Indians that was not recommended by the department, and we gave them the money they said they could get along with. The subcommittee went over every item very carefully.

Mr. OVERMAN. Fifteen thousand dollars was given by the House, which they said was necessary, and then they come here and say they can get along with $5,000.

Mr. CURTIS. That is the trouble. We get a great many estimates in that way. I remember one that came over for $200,000, and they said they could get along with $67,000 when they got before our committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is usual with every department that sends estimates down here. They send down estimates for about three times more than they need, and that is a good thing for us to remember in connection with further appropriation bills, that when a department sends down an estimate for $75,000 they can get along with $25,000. That is worthy of consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. We asked the representatives of the department to come before the committee and show the committee what they had expended the year before, giving an itemized statement, and then what they actually needed for the coming year, and we gave them a few dollars more than they said they really needed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I commend the committee for their action in this matter.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator from North Carolina and to the Senate that after a careful investigation and after restoring four or five items which had been stricken out on the floor of the other House which the committee thought were actually needed, we made a net reduction in the bill of $127,000 below the House bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is very commendable. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations and shall remember this incident. I always have contended that the departments, in sending their estimates to Congress, invariably ask for more than they really need. I never could prove it before, but now it has been conclusively shown, for they have asked for three times as much money for this purpose as they actually need. The committee, in my opinion, have done wisely in cutting their estimate down, although in so doing they have reduced an appropriation for my State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 73, line 16, after the word "Arapahoes," to strike out "$6,689" and insert "$5,000"; and in line 18, after the word "Fox," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

Oklahoma: Kiowa, $26,700; Wichita, $300; Cheyennes and Arapahoes, $5,000; Cantonment, $1,350; Seger, $150; Pawnee, $300; Ponca, $1,700; Otoe, $1,900; Seneca, $600; Sac and Fox, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 22, after the words "Lower Brule," to strike out "$15,824" and insert "$10,000"; in line 23, after the word "Rosebud," to strike out "$11,950" and insert "$10,000"; and in the same line, after the word "Sisseton," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the clause read:

South Dakota: Cheyenne River, $100,000; Crow Creek, $1,000; Lower Brule, $10,000; Pine Ridge, $2,800; Rosebud, $10,000; Sisseton, $10,000; Yankton, $5,000; Santee, $2,084.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 2, after the word "Colville," to strike out "$74,000" and insert "$50,000"; and in line 3, after the word "Tulalip," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

Washington: Colville, $50,000; Puyallup, $160; Quiniault, $1,000; Spokane, $4,800; Tulalip, $5,000; Yakima, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 5, after the words "Lac du Flambeau," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$15,000, to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

Wisconsin: Lac du Flambeau, $15,000, to be immediately available; La Pointe, $500; Keshena (Menominee), $37,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire that we may now return to the consideration of the items in the bill which were passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 28, under the heading "Idaho," in line 21, after "$50,000," to strike out:

Provided, That expenditures hereunder for improvements shall be reimbursable to the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907: Provided, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1024), and the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 274), requiring the sale of water rights in this system for lands in private ownership at $6 per acre are hereby repealed and that hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the white landowners under the said system the sum of $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white persons for which water for irrigation purposes can now be delivered through such system and to expend the money so collected for continuing the construction, enlargement, and improvement of the said system, in accordance with the report heretofore made by a board consisting of the chief engineer of the United States Indian Service, the State engineer of the State of Idaho, and an engineer representing the Fort Hall Water Users' Association: Provided, however, That no such money shall be so expended unless and until the holders of private lands which have heretofore acquired a water right in the said system, under the aforesaid acts, at $6 per acre shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to pay in addition to such $6 per acre an amount which shall equal the actual per acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the provision of the aforesaid act of March 1, 1907, requiring the payment of the water-right charges to be made in five equal annual installments is hereby repealed.

And to insert:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1024), and the act of April 4, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 274), requiring the sale of water rights in this system for land in private ownership at $6 per acre, are hereby repealed with respect to future sales of water rights, and that hereafter water rights in this system shall be sold at the actual per-acre cost of the construction of such system: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the white landowners under the said system the sum of not exceeding $10 per acre for each acre of land owned by such white persons for which water for irrigation purposes can now be delivered through such system and to expend the money so collected for continuing the construction, enlargement, and improvement of the said system in accordance with the report heretofore made by a board consisting of the chief engineer of the United States Indian Service, the State engineer of the State of Idaho, and an engineer representing the Fort Hall Water Users' Association: Provided, however, That no such money shall be so expended unless and until the holders of private lands which have heretofore acquired a water right in the said system, under the aforesaid acts, at $6 per acre, and who require or take additional water, shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to pay their pro rata share of the cost of the enlargement and the improvement of the said system as hereinbefore provided for: Provided further, That the amounts to be collected from the water users as herein provided for shall be credited on a per acre basis in favor of the land on behalf of which it shall have been paid and be deducted from the total per acre charge assessable against such land when the amount of such total charge can be determined: And provided further, That further payments to be applied on the construction charges of such system shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and also of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], to the amendment to the committee amendment, which I desire now to offer. On page 30, line 9, I move to strike out the words "Provided further," and also the word "That," in line 10, and to insert a comma and the word "but"; before the word "white," in line 11, to insert the word "new"; and in line 11, after the word "white," to strike out the word "landowners" and to insert "applicants for water"; and before the word "the," at the end of the same line, to insert the words "and from white applicants for additional water," so that it will read:

But the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to collect from the new white applicants for water under the said system and from white applicants for additional water the sum of not exceeding $10 an acre.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NUGENT. I move the following additional amendment to the committee amendment. On page 30, line 24, after the word "acre," I move to strike out the words "and who require or take additional water" and to insert "and who may apply for additional water," so that it will read:

That no such money shall be so expended unless and until the holders of private lands which have heretofore acquired a water right in the said system, under the aforesaid acts, at $6 per acre, and who may apply for additional water shall have entered into agreement with the Secretary of the Interior—

And so forth.

Mr. CURTIS. That amendment is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection. The amendment as amended is agreed to, without objection. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 35, under the head of "Mississippi," in section 9, line 23, after the word "Mississippi," where the Committee on Indian Affairs propose to insert "and for their education and civilization, including pay of employees and purchase of land for school purposes, $30,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. For the relief of distress among the full-blood Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, and for their education and civilization, including pay of employees and purchase of land for school purposes, $30,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer a substitute for the item embraced in lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, including the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 35, beginning in line 22, it is proposed to strike out section 9 and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 9. For the relief of distress among the full-blood Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, including the pay of one special agent, who shall be a physician, one farmer, and one field matron, and other necessary administration expenses, $10,000; for their education by establishing, equipping, and maintaining day schools, including the purchase of land and the construction of necessary buildings, and their equipment, $30,000; for the purchase of lands, including improvements thereon, not exceeding 80 acres for any one family, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, to be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for its repayment to the United States under such rules and regulations as he may direct, $15,000; for the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among said Indians and to aid them in building homes, in the culture of fruits, grains, cotton, and other crops, $10,000; which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable said Indians to become self-supporting, to be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the said Secretary for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; in all, $65,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have not had the time to read over and compare the amendment with the estimate. I ask the Senator if he has copied the estimate of the department in the amendment which he has submitted?

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment conforms exactly to the estimate. I took it from the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, he is willing that the amendment shall be accepted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the committee amendment is rejected, and the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 65, I move to strike out from line 13 to line 20, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 65, after line 12, it is proposed to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell at public sale the land and buildings constituting the Cushman Indian School at Tacoma, Wash., at not less than their appraised value and on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. The proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Puyallup Tribe of Indians and to the credit of the United States as their respective interests appear.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the item relates to the Cushman School in the State of Washington, which is the only school of its kind in the State providing instruction in certain subjects to which Indians from Alaska and various sections of the State can go.

I am in sympathy with the general policy of the Indian Office in having Indian pupils educated as much as possible in the public schools of the country; I believe that is the best and wisest system; but the conditions are a little different in the case of the Cushman School from what they may be generally. This school can serve the purpose to a certain extent of a sort of central high school to which the Indians may go and secure special training.

In a letter from the secretary of the Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce of Tacoma he makes this statement with reference to this school:

The Cushman School is the only one of its kind in the State at the present time and is offering a course of study to Indian boys and girls which they would not receive in the public schools. This course of study includes farm blacksmithing, farm engineering, farm carpentry, farm masonry, shoe and harness repairing, gardening, and poultry raising for boys, and cooking, sewing, laundering, nursing, home training, poultry raising, and gardening for girls. Statistics at the school show that a large percentage of the students who graduate from the school follow this work.

The commissioner, in a letter which I have, states that the pupils that need to be served by a school of this kind can be taken care of at Tulalip and at Chewawa, which are near Salem, Oreg. That may be true, but I do not believe that the Indian boys and girls attending the Cushman School should be taken away off to Salem, Oreg. The Cushman School is so centrally located that the pupils can visit their homes and they can be visited by their parents at very little expense and very little trouble and inconvenience in point of time. I hope, at any rate, that the provision will be stricken from the bill so that the matter may be looked into very fully and very thoroughly before this school is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, it is intended merely to strike out the lines which provide for the sale of the school?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. So far as I am able I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment, for I think, by reason of certain information which has been received since the item was put in, it is perhaps best not to order the sale of the school at once. So far as the chairman of the committee can do so he accepts the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 67, after line 17, I offer an amendment about which I have conferred with the chairman of the committee and to which I think he will have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 17, in the Washington items, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to investigate and report to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1920, as to the right of Stevens and Ferry Counties, in the State of Washington, to the payment of taxes on allotted Indian lands under existing law, and to state the amount, if any, to which each of said counties is entitled.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the Secretary of the Interior has authority under existing law to do what is contemplated by the amendment, and therefore I shall offer no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the three items stricken out on page 60 of the bill. I was not present, and could not be, when those items were read. They are under the head of South Dakota.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state that those items were stricken out for the reason that they had not been estimated for by the department. My recollection is that they were put in on the floor of the House, and when we had the assistant commissioner before us he was unable to give us any information in regard to them; and so the members of the committee preferred that some investigation be made, and some report, so that we would have something to base such an appropriation upon. Of course, the money is taken from the funds of the Indians, but it is the duty of Congress to protect their funds just as much as it is its duty to protect the funds of the Government; and the committee did not feel, with the information we had, that we would be justified in agreeing to those three items.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the matter will then be considered in conference?

Mr. CURTIS. It will be considered in conference; and if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has secured the information then, the committee will take such action as it deems advisable under all the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 20, it is proposed to insert, as a separate item, the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the treasurer of the general council of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, or upon his order, out of the funds of said tribe held in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $12,500 to defray the expenses of all litigation and proceedings instituted by direction of said general council up to and including July 1, 1919, and to settle in full all such accounts so authorized and contracted for: Provided, That before said payment is made receipts in full shall be duly executed for all such claims or demands of whatsoever nature for services rendered and expenses incurred in connection with all said litigation and proceedings and duly filed with the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment at the request of the members of the legislative committee of the general council of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota. So far as I know, there is no objection to it from any source.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the money is to be taken out of the tribal funds that are now in the Treasury and its payment is requested by the council. Will the Senator have the letter of the council printed in the RECORD?

Mr. GRONNA. I shall either have it read or printed.

Mr. CURTIS. If it is printed in the RECORD, that will be sufficient.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1920.

HON. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GRONNA: Inclosed please find amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which we will very greatly appreciate your offering on the floor of the Senate. The Senate committee has concluded its consideration of the bill and it is therefore impossible to secure the inclusion of this amendment in the bill by the committee.

We are making this request pursuant to the following resolution adopted by the general council at its regular annual meeting last July:

"Resolution 5.

"Be it resolved by the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in general council assembled, That the legislative committee of the general council be, and it is hereby, instructed to secure an appropriation of $12,500 out of the trust funds of the Chippewa Indians to defray the expenses of all litigation and proceedings instituted by direction of the general council prior to July 1, 1919, and to settle in full all such accounts contracted prior thereto."

This appropriation is out of our trust funds and not out of the Public Treasury. The appropriation is to pay expenses which the general council found it necessary to incur in connection with our tribal affairs. The litigation referred to consists of two suits, one of which was prosecuted to and finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, proceedings before the departments of the Government, and a multitude of matters pertaining to our affairs. As a result of the litigation and proceedings the following, among other, results have been obtained:

A saving of $100,000 annually has been effected in the appropriations from our trust funds.

The property rights of about 1,000 minor children, which had been denied them by the department, have been established, of the value of between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000.

Applications for the issuance of patents to the State of Minnesota covering approximately 700,000 acres of Indian land have been suspended, and proceedings are now pending for the recovery back from the State of about 700,000 additional acres of Indian land erroneously patented to the State.

A saving to the Chippewa people within the last year of more than $100,000 in the redemption of Liberty bonds, bought with their individual funds and which money was needed for their individual use, has been effected.

The distribution of about $500,000 of individual funds improperly withheld from the Indians and the administration of which was costing the Chippewa tribe approximately $30,000 per annum in governmental supervision, bookkeeping, etc.

Improved educational facilities for the Chippewa children by the abolishment of the Government schools and the substitution therefor of the free school system of the State of Minnesota, resulting in improved school facilities and a saving to the Chippewa Tribe of more than $50,000 per annum.

The protection of the individual property of a large number of the members of the tribe of great value.

Investigations resulting in the preparation of drafts of proposed legislation, much of which has been acquiesced in by the department, which will wind up the affairs of the Chippewa Tribe, conserve the property of the Indians, and save millions of dollars in claims against the United States.

Considering the results obtained, the amount asked is inconsequential. It has been impossible for the general council to meet these expenses, which cover a period of more than four years, out of the limited appropriations made annually for its support.

It is necessary that these accounts should be paid in order that the work may continue, and we earnestly request your assistance in securing the inclusion of the item we inclose in the Indian appropriation bill.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. G. MORRISON, President,
B. L. FAIRBANKS,
JOHN ARTEN,
FRANK D. BEAULIEU,
Members of the Legislative Committee of the General Council of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the item on page 37 for the reclamation project on the Flathead Indian Reservation. It has been the custom to provide in express terms that that appropriation shall be immediately available, as well as to remain available until expended. I ask the chairman of the committee if there would be any objection to inserting between the word "to" and the word "remain," in line 13 of page 37, the words "be immediately available, and"?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, that amendment is unnecessary, because the item applies to an appropriation already in existence, that the department is now expending. The words "to be immediately available" apply only to appropriations to take effect in the future; for instance, items in the bill taking effect July 1 next. If that were the case, then the words "to be immediately available" would be necessary, but as it is an existing appropriation they are absolutely unnecessary, because the money is available now.

Mr. MYERS. The object of it would be to make any part of this $200,000, herein appropriated, available before the 1st of July next, if needed.

Mr. CURTIS. It is available now. I have no objection to putting in the amendment, but it would be surplusage.

Mr. MYERS. If the chairman of the committee thinks it unnecessary, I will not offer such an amendment. I am deeply interested in that appropriation, and greatly regret that it can not be larger. I want to see it protected against any possible misinterpretation or danger of any kind. However, in this particular I yield to the judgment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], chairman of the committee and in charge of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments to be proposed? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. ASHURST conferees on the part of the Senate.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, Senate bill 3383.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that suggestion for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the fact that several Senators are very much interested in the committee amendment, which is found at the bottom of page 1 of the bill, and particularly because the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is compelled to be absent to-day, I was going to suggest that for the time being we lay aside that particular committee amendment and proceed to the consideration of other committee amendments which are printed in the bill, and at least two amendments which will be offered from the floor and which have no relation to the committee amendment in which the Senator from Florida is interested. When those are completed, I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that it might be well either to call a quorum of the Senate or to decide whether to lay the bill over.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just going to suggest that the Senator from Florida is very much interested in the amendments, especially the one that comes up now, and on which, I think, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Senator from Florida is sick, and I do not know when he will be here; and I was wondering if the Senator has had any understanding to allow the bill to go over, and not to take it up for consideration to-day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; I have had no understanding. The news of the illness of the Senator from Florida reached me just a short time ago. I feel somewhat torn with conflicting emotions. Of course, the committee is exceedingly anxious to proceed with the program of this bill, but I think I am safe in saying that the committee would be willing to lay it over for a reasonable period. Of course, we can not very well delay the orderly progress of legislation in the Senate for an indefinite period.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not insist upon it at all. The other suggestion is entirely satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, then, this amendment will be passed over for the present. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, in section 3, the committee proposes the following amendment:

The first words read:

That all officers and enlisted men—

At that point, after the word "men," the committee proposes to insert—contract surgeons serving full time, warrant officers, Army field clerks, and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and members of the Female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 23, after the word "men," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or other persons above specified."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 9, the committee proposes to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter when any officer, enlisted man, or other person named in this act is ordered to make a permanent change of station, the United States shall furnish transportation in kind from funds appropriated for the transportation of the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service to his new station for the wife, children, and dependent parents of such officer, enlisted man, or other person: Provided, That if the cost of such transportation exceeds that for transportation from the old to the new station the excess cost shall be paid to the United States by the officer, enlisted man, or other person concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to change the numbering of section 5 to read "Sec. 6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be inserted in line 15, page 2, after the word "month."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the words "$126 per month," on page 2, line 15, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That commissioned officers, warrant officers, and petty officers and other enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall receive the same pay and allowances and bonuses as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for corresponding grades or ratings and length of service in the Navy, and the grades and ratings of warrant officers, chief petty officers, petty officers, and other enlisted persons in the Coast Guard shall be the same as in the Navy in so far as the duties of the Coast Guard may require, with the continuance in the Coast Guard of the grade of surfman, whose base pay shall be $70 per month: And provided further, That the senior district superintendent, the three district superintendents next in order by seniority, the four district superintendents next below these three in order of seniority, and the junior five district superintendents, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and third lieutenant in the Coast Guard, respectively.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, upon yesterday the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and I indulged in a colloquy, during the debate on this bill, in connection with the quarters provided for certain noncommissioned officers of the Army; and I agreed with him at that time to perfect, if I could, or have perfected by men who knew how to do it, an amendment which would take care of the people whom both he and I have in mind.

The bill, it will be noted, provides that all officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy, and so forth, "shall at all times be entitled to the number of rations per diem, or commutation thereof, that equal the number of rooms now authorized by law as quarters." There is some question as to whether the phrase "now authorized by law" would cover quarters which are to-day authorized by regulations which have in turn been issued as a result of the enactment of law. I have had a little statement prepared which explains that situation.

There are no statutory provisions of law which authorize quarters for enlisted men. The only provisions of law that exist on this subject will be found in the act of March 14, 1915, whereby the Secretary of War is authorized to grant $15 per month as rent for quarters for enlisted men, or in lieu thereof he may rent quarters for the use of said enlisted men when on detached duty where there are no public quarters available. By regulations, the Secretary of War has fixed the maximum number of rooms for which commutation is payable at one room for all noncommissioned officers above the grade of color sergeant, for color sergeants and firemen, Coast Artillery Corps, and for all other noncommissioned officers and privates on nondetached service or assigned to special duty of such a nature as to necessitate the hiring or leasing of quarters. The Revised Statutes also give the Marine Corps the same pay as the corresponding grades of the Infantry. That is another matter. So I have prepared an amendment to propose to this bill which will make that perfectly explicit, which I present and ask to have read, and to which I ask the attention of the Senator from North Dakota, following the copy of the bill on his desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "and enlisted men," so that it will read:

That all officers, contract surgeons serving full time—

And so forth.

On page 2, line 22, after the words "by law," insert "or existing regulations," so as to read:

Now authorized by law or existing regulations as quarters for the rank or rating of such officers or enlisted men.

On page 2, line 23, strike out the words "or enlisted men."

On page 2, line 23, after the words "above specified," or at the end of the committee amendment already agreed to, strike out the comma and insert a period and the following:

All noncommissioned officers of the Army and Marine Corps of grade of color sergeant and above, as fixed by existing Army regulations, and all chief petty officers of the Navy and Coast Guard, shall be entitled to one ration or commutation therefor in addition to that to which they are now entitled, and the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury may by regulations authorize the issuance of a further additional ration or payment of commutation therefor to such noncommissioned officers and chief petty officers above mentioned of the forces under their respective departments as they may deem proper.

On page 2, line 23, begin the word "the" with a capital "T," and in line 24 strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall," so as to read:

The commutation value shall be determined by the President on July 1 of each fiscal year, and for the current fiscal year the value shall be computed on the basis of 55 cents per ration.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand it this makes it permissive for the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to grant an allowance for more than one room for quarters. Of course it does not make it compulsory. But I appreciate what the Senator has done. I can not conceive that any Secretary, whether Secretary of War or of the Navy or any other officer, would deny these advantages to the men, who are now really suffering under our present law, as they are being paid an inadequate sum. So far as I am concerned I am satisfied with the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, because as I understand the amendment it will enable the department chiefs to do justice to the men who are now underpaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have another amendment to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 20, insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That the rights and benefits prescribed under the act of April 16, 1918, granting commutation of quarters, heat, and light during the present emergency to officers of the Army on duty in the field are hereby continued and made effective after the termination of the present emergency and shall hereafter apply equally to officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service: Provided, That such rights and benefits as are prescribed for officers shall apply equally for enlisted men now entitled by regulations to quarters or to commutation therefor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just a word. The provisions of the amendment which has been suggested by the Secretary have already been adopted by the Senate in the form of a separate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that finishes the committee amendments, and I think the amendments which were to be offered from the floor. It leaves, however, the one committee amendment which was temporarily passed over. I have contemplated asking unanimous consent that the bill be taken up at 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon, and that a final vote shall be had at 4 o'clock on all pending amendments and the bill itself.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I inquire why the Senator does not have the bill disposed of now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say to the Senator from Arkansas that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who is very much interested in the second committee amendment, found on the bottom of page 1, has unfortunately been taken ill. It is hoped that he may be back by Friday. I have had some hesitancy in putting off the consideration of the bill, but in view of the intense interest of the Senator from Florida in it I think I ought to make the suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. That will necessitate the calling of the roll for a quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule requires that under such circumstances the roll must be called.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I suggest to the Senator a way to avert that? I suggest to the Senator that further consideration of the bill be postponed until the time he has in mind. There will be no difficulty about securing a prompt decision on the matter, and that will avert the necessity for calling the roll, if he desires to do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it may be best, in order to accomplish what we want, to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas. Perhaps the Senator from Indiana and myself and the other Senators present may reach a gentleman's agreement that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill to-day the Senator from Indiana will ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill to provide for a separate department of aeronautics. He is ready to make a motion to that effect. Perhaps the Senator from Indiana will at the same time agree that at 2 o'clock on Friday he will temporarily lay aside his bill, if it shall in the meantime become the unfinished business, which I anticipate it will.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Indiana can promise now what will be done at 2 o'clock on Friday. That is out of order. I think it can be arranged in this manner: Let the Senator ask unanimous consent to lay the unfinished business temporarily aside, and let the Senator from Indiana then proceed with his bill. There will not be any trouble. Then this bill will remain as the unfinished business. It can be done to-morrow as well as to-day. Then the bill can go over until Friday and can be taken up in its order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York would be very glad to have the suggestion of the Vice President as an accommodator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill can be made the special order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is just what the Chair was looking up.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is no question of the right of the Senate to make the bill a special order without ascertaining the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think there could be any objection to it; and as a further reason, if I may point it out to the Senator from New York, if unanimous consent should be entered into now to vote upon the bill at a given time, it might preclude a final determination on the bill in the event that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] should not be able to be here. The Senator from New York would not want to insist upon a vote notwithstanding the fact that the Senator from Florida was not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York can, by a two-thirds vote of the Senators present, or by unanimous consent, make this bill a special order for a day and time that may be agreed upon, with the understanding, of course, that if it interferes with the unfinished business the unfinished business has precedence. It should be made, therefore, the special order for 12 o'clock on some day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I shall be satisfied to lay this bill aside temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States air reserve force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the Senator if he expects to have the bill passed to-day?

Mr. NEW. I hope so.

Mr. KING. There are some Senators, I think, who would like to be present when final disposition is made of the bill. I have no objection to the Senator having it taken up for consideration and discussion, but I hope the Senator will not ask for a vote upon it to-day. It was not anticipated that it would be called up to-day. I do not want to object to its consideration.

Mr. NEW. It was not anticipated by many of us, at least, and so far as I know most of us, that the bill would be considered to-day. I have understood for several days that it has been agreed that the consideration of Senate bill 3348 should follow the consideration of what is known as the Army pay bill.

Mr. KING. I do not want to object to it; but in view of the fact that so many Senators are ill, some of whom, I understand, desire, if not to express themselves upon the bill at least to vote against it, I do hope the Senator will not press for a vote to-day.

Mr. NEW. I shall not press for a vote to-day, Mr. President, since there is objection to it. I have no objection to a call for a quorum at any time to bring into the Chamber gentlemen who wish to be heard. I shall not seek to take any advantage of the absence of any Senator who has any objection to offer to the bill. I can at least make an explanation of the bill, and I think we can make very decided progress, even if we do not reach a vote. I shall not press for a vote to-day if there is objection to doing so.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I have no objection at all. I think we can make progress, and perhaps get all the amendments out of the way, if there should be any, and have general discussion and then the vote can be taken to-morrow.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I gave notice two weeks ago that I should ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, as soon as the Americanization bill was disposed of. I shall not object to making the bill presented by the Senator from Indiana the unfinished business, if the Senator is willing that it shall be temporarily postponed until this bill can be disposed of, because I do not think the consideration of this bill will take five minutes. But it ought to be acted upon. It has been on the calendar for three months. It does not change any substantive provision of the Federal farm loan act, but is aimed to improve the administrative machinery in a way that ought to be done. I will say to the Senator that if this bill arouses any opposition whatever, I will not insist upon its consideration to-day. I do not believe it will; and it ought to be given precedence.

Mr. GRONNA. It is a House bill?

Mr. McLEAN. The bill passed the House three months ago. It has been unanimously reported by the committee, and it merely provides for the appointment of an acting registrar who can perform the duties of the office when the registrar is disabled; it raises the minimum bond from $25 to $40, and provides machinery for raising money to pay the expenses of the secretary-treasurer. That is all there is to the bill. The amendments proposed by the committee have been recommended by the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have no objection to doing almost anything to oblige the Senator from Connecticut. However, we are in this situation: There is already another bill which is regarded as the unfinished business, and we are proceeding with the consideration of Senate bill 3348 only by unanimous consent, which I understand has been obtained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has not been obtained. If it had, the Senate would be going ahead. The Senator from Connecticut has not yet indicated what he is going to do.

Mr. NEW. I understood that unanimous consent had been obtained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no.

Mr. McLEAN. Unless the Senator from Indiana is willing to allow this bill to be considered for 10 or 15 minutes I shall object to the consideration of his bill, because I gave notice two weeks ago that I would ask for consideration of it when the Americanization bill was disposed of. I will say to the Senator that if this bill arouses any opposition, or if it takes any considerable time, I will not press its consideration.

Mr. NEW. With that assurance, Mr. President, I very cheerfully yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall reserve the right to object to the present consideration of the bill at least until a statement has been made of the purpose of it.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say, Mr. President, as I have stated several times in the Senate, that while the bill appears to be somewhat formidable and contains many amendments, it does not in any way affect any substantive provision of the act. It is recommended by the Federal Farm Loan Board for the purpose of remedying the administrative machinery of the act. It creates an acting registrar, who can perform the duties of registrar when the registrar is absent. It provides for raising enough money to pay the secretary-treasurer his salary. It provides for a loan committee, and it raises the minimum loan from $25 to $40 for bookkeeping accommodations. That is all there is to the act. There are many changes in phraseology necessitated that are all minor. The bill passed the House three months ago and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate. I believe if the Senator will read the bill and the report that he will not object to its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been receiving quite a number of protests fundamentally on the theory of changes in the farm loan act. There seems to be an impression, in the West at least, that one of the purposes of the bill is to increase the rate of interest to the farmers.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator has mistaken the bill. I think he refers to another bill, which removes the tax exemption from the joint-stock and land-bank bonds.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This is administrative merely?

Mr. McLEAN. It affects only the administrative features of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, to strike out the words:

Such registrars may, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, each appoint a deputy registrar who, in case of the absence or disability of the registrar, shall perform the duties and exercise the authority of that office.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

If, by reason of absence or disability, the registrar shall be unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Federal Farm Loan Board may appoint an acting registrar who shall perform the duties of said office during the absence or disability of said registrar.

And on page 2, lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, to strike out the words:

Such registrars may, with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, each appoint a deputy registrar, who, in case of the absence or disability of the registrar, shall perform the duties and exercise the authority of that office.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

If, by reason of absence or disability, the registrar shall be unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Federal Farm Loan Board may appoint an acting registrar who shall perform the duties of said office during the absence or disability of said registrar.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 17, before the word "registrars," to strike out the word "deputy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "acting."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out the following words:

SEC. 2. That the third paragraph of section 8 be amended by striking out the words "if the application for membership is accepted and the loan is granted" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the approval of the loan of any applicant for membership in a national farm-loan association in accordance with the terms of this law and amendments thereto shall constitute the acceptance of his application for membership, and," so that the paragraph as amended will read:

"No persons except borrowers on farm land mortgages shall be members or shareholders of national farm-loan associations. Any person desiring to borrow on farm land mortgages through a national farm-loan association shall make application for membership and shall subscribe for shares of stock in such farm-loan association to an amount equal to 5 per cent of the face of the desired loan, said subscription to be paid in cash upon the granting of the loan. The approval of the loan of any applicant for membership in a national farm-loan association, in accordance with the terms of this law and amendments thereto, shall constitute the acceptance of his application for membership, and the applicant shall, upon full payment therefor, become the owner of one share of capital stock in said loan association for each $100 of the face of his loan, or any major fractional part thereof. Said capital stock shall be paid off at par and retired upon full payment of said loan. Said capital stock shall be held by said association as collateral security for the payment of said loan, but said borrower shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on said capital stock while it is outstanding."

SEC. 3. That the first paragraph of section 10 be amended by striking out everything after the word "association," in line 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the words: "The loan committee provided for in section 7 of this act shall forthwith make, or cause to be made, such investigation as it may deem necessary as to the character and solvency of the applicant and the sufficiency of the security offered and cause written report to be made of the result of such investigation." And that the first line of the second paragraph of said section be amended by striking out, after the word "report," the words "of said loan committee" and inserting the words "required in the preceding paragraph," so that the two paragraphs as amended will read:

"That whenever an application for a mortgage loan is made through a national farm-loan association the loan committee provided for in section 7 of this act shall forthwith make, or cause to be made, such investigation as it may deem necessary as to the character and solvency of the applicant and sufficiency of the security offered and cause written report to be made of the result of each investigation.

The written report required in the preceding paragraph shall be submitted to the Federal land bank, together with the application for the loan, and the directors of said land bank shall examine said written report when they pass on the loan application which it accompanies, but they shall not be bound by said appraisal.

And to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That the fifth paragraph of section 7 be amended by adding after the word "association," in the fourth line thereof, the words "such funds, under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board to be provided by reasonable charges, not to exceed 1 per cent of the amount borrowed, made to applicants for loans and to borrowers," so that said paragraph as amended will read:

"The reasonable expenses of the secretary-treasurer, the loan committee, and other officers and agents of national farm loan associations and the salary of the secretary-treasurer shall be paid from the general funds of the association, such funds, under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board to be provided by reasonable charges, not to exceed 1 per cent of the amount borrowed, made to applicants for loans and to borrowers, and the board of directors is authorized to set aside such sums as it shall deem requisite for that purpose and for other expenses of said association. When no such funds are available, the board of directors may levy an assessment on members in proportion to the amount of stock held by each, which may be repaid as soon as funds are available, or it may secure an advance from the Federal land bank of the district, to be repaid with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from dividends belonging to said association. Said Federal land bank is hereby authorized to make such advance and to deduct such repayment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That the third paragraph of section 11 be amended by adding after the word "Third" the words: "To fix, under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board, reasonable charges to applicants for loans, and to borrowers, in order to meet the necessary expenses of the association, and," so that said paragraph as amended will read:

"Third. To fix, under rules and regulations of the Farm Loan Board, reasonable charges to applicants for loans and to borrowers, in order to meet the necessary expenses of the association and to acquire and dispose of such property, real and personal, as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, lines 6, 7, and 8, to strike out the words "and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'contracted for any of the purposes enumerated in one of the subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), above.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, beginning in line 22, to strike out the following:

Contracted for any of the purposes enumerated in one of the subdivisions (a), (b), and (c), above.

"(c) To liquidate mortgage indebtedness existing at the time of the organization of the first Farm Loan Association established in and for the county in which the land is situated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 5, before the words "and also," to insert "and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral $40."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, with the understanding reached a few moments ago I should like to proceed with an explanation of the purposes of Senate bill 3348.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3348 shall be laid before the Senate. Is there any objection?

Mr. BORAH. I do not wish to object, but I understand it is not to be voted on to-day and is simply to be taken up for discussion.

Mr. NEW. I shall not press for a vote this afternoon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States air reserve force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think that in order to conserve time I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McNary	Robinson
Ball	Gronna	Moses	Sheppard
Bankhead	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	Harris	New	Smith, S. C.
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Overman	Spencer
Colt	King	Page	Stanley
Culberson	Kirby	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	McCormick	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McKellar	Poindexter	Wolcott

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. SIMMONS,

Mr. STERLING, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. WALSH of Montana answered to their names when called.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. RANSDELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] are detained from the Senate by illness.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I suggested the absence of a quorum because the pending bill proposes to create a new department of the Government, and I thought it of sufficient interest to justify that request.

In presenting the bill I do not propose to be diverted into a discussion of the mistakes of the Government during the recent war. We all know those mistakes were made. There was excuse for some of them, and I am not going to refer to them at all except as an occasional reference is absolutely necessary in order to point out what I conceive the necessity for the change in policy which is proposed to be brought about by the adoption of the pending measure, if it shall be passed.

Mr. President, the whole course of the United States with reference to the subject of aeronautics has been little short of absurd; it has not reflected any credit on us as a Government or as a people. I say that with regret, but I believe the statement is justified by the facts. It is just 100 years ago now that the first substantial step in the direction of a real aeronautical development was made. It was made by an American, Rufus Porter. He took out a patent in the Patent Office in the city of Washington for an airship—a dirigible. He made a model of his machine and demonstrated by that model that aerial navigation by that means was a possibility. Nothing ever came of it, for the simple reason that he could not get money enough from any possible source to enable him to proceed with the construction of a real ship, and so the matter lapsed. It remained in that inactive condition for 70 years or thereabouts, until Count Zeppelin, in Germany, again made it apparent that navigation by that means was possible.

America undoubtedly produced the heavier-than-air machine. We are all familiar with the experiments of the late Prof. Langley, and while real success never crowned his efforts it is certainly true that he had no substantial encouragement from this Government; right here in both Houses of Congress he was derided as a crank and no substantial support was given to him; his efforts were allowed to pass for nothing. After his death it was demonstrated that the Langley machine, which is now in the Smithsonian Institution, could actually fly, and, indeed, it was made to fly.

Then came the Wright brothers. They went a long step forward, and actually made a success of the heavier-than-air machine; but this Government did not even get behind the Wright brothers, as it should have done, and they were actually compelled to go to France, where they established themselves at Le Mans in order to get sufficient capital and encouragement for the practical development of their very great discovery.

America as a Government never has done what it should have done to avail itself of the fruits of American genius; it has allowed the opportunity to lapse, so that the situation when we entered the war on April 6, 1917, was that the country which had conceived those great inventions was absolutely without one thing to show for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Wright machine was being actually manufactured by private enterprise in Cleveland and was a going concern, both in the air and financially. It was brought here by its manufacturers and inventors and tendered to the Government when we entered the war, but was declined because they were then engaged in experimenting with various devices and schemes to produce an airplane of a new type. The Wright-Martin machine at the time it was offered the Government was a flying machine weighing from three to four thousand pounds and able to carry nearly double, or at least one and a half times, that much weight. It was brought here and offered to the Government, but the exceedingly wise gentleman who represented the department of the Government having to do with the matter declined.

Matters continued in that condition, notwithstanding the expenditure of nearly a billion dollars, without any adequate results or any fighting planes or machines being delivered at the front for the benefit of our Army. Private enterprise had done what the Government apparently was unable to do, and if there had been some means by which private enterprise could have been availed of we would not have been in the deplorable condition which the reports of committees show existed at that time.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, that is all true, but I promised at the outset that I would not go into details as to the various happenings suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Illinois. It is true, as I have stated, that the Wright brothers had eventually to go to Europe before they got the encouragement that it was necessary for them to have in order to make a success of their enterprise.

I stated that our whole attitude, our whole course, toward aeronautics has been absurd. I meant just that. Nothing was more absurd than what happened here at the outbreak of the war when there was brought forward a program of aeronautical development that contemplated the production here of, I think, 10 different types—at any rate, about that number—of heavier-than-air machines. No manufacturer could look at that program and not realize at a glance that its accomplishment was an utter impossibility. It was absurd because it was brought forward by men who knew absolutely nothing of manufacturing difficulties and problems, and not only that but they knew nothing about aircraft; there was nobody here who was qualified to pass judgment on such questions.

Mr. President, without going further into this sort of thing, it is true that during the war, at enormous expense, we did develop an aircraft industry. It cost a world of money. Our first appropriation was for $640,000,000, and eventually we spent very much more than a billion dollars in trying to get aircraft production; and we made, all told, about 11,000 different machines, of various types, by the 11th of November, 1918. We then had in the country an aircraft capacity of about eleven or twelve thousand machines a year, if we had kept it up. We had 22 factories, large and small, employing over 300,000 men. The Army had trained 15,000 aviators.

Since that time what has happened? Almost every single bit of that has gone. The departments of the Government which have had charge of our air service since that time—Army, Navy, Post Office, coast defense—have allowed this enterprise to lapse, so that to-day about 5 per cent of that productive capacity remains in existence. The Army has kept about 900 of those trained fliers, and the rest of them have been scattered to the four winds, heaven only knows where.

I have here a complete statement of every machine in the possession of the Army, of the Navy, and of the Post Office Department, and if it is necessary to go into complete details I can do that, but I do not think it is necessary. The Army has practically nothing left on hand but the De Haviland 4 machines. They are not getting any new machines. The machines that they have are very nearly obsolete; and I say, and the statement will not be successfully contradicted, either, that if we were to have trouble to-day with a foreign Government—say, Mexico, using that just as an example—we have not a single fast pursuit plane with which we could go across the border. We would have to go to foreign Governments to get planes of that type, even for an expedition such as would be necessary in such an event as I have described. That is the condition of the military air forces to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. We appropriated at one time $640,000,000, which was the first appropriation after we entered the war with respect to the construction of aircraft.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. KING. We made, after that, a number of very large appropriations. Is it possible, with more than a billion dollars spent for aircraft, that one year after the armistice was signed we are in such a hopeless situation, so far as aircraft are concerned, as is depicted by the Senator? If so, somebody is censurable. The War Department certainly has been derelict not only in the use of the money which we appropriated, but in failing to make available aircraft for military purposes at the present time. Can the Senator enlighten us and give us an excuse, if there is an excuse, for the failure to have aircraft now available for use with that enormous appropriation?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, there are some reasons which hardly pass for excuses. I have no desire to visit criticism here upon anybody in particular, but the Senator asks if I have stated the facts, and I certainly have. That is the condition of the military air service to-day—I mean particularly as to the types of machine. The military air force that we have, the personnel, is efficient, but it is small, and it is absolutely running out of machines of any kind, and those that it has, as I have already said, are of a more or less obsolete type.

No thought whatever has ever been given by the Government of the United States to the development of commercial aviation. Admiral Taylor, of the Navy, said in the course of a House hearing not very long ago that there was no such thing as commercial aviation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator goes to that other subject, may I ask if the Senator is not mistaken in saying that all of the aerial service has been a failure? Is it not a fact that the aerial service that we have in the Post Office Department has been not only a success but a very marked success? The lines that have been established have not only paid, but they have been successful in every way, and have saved an immense amount of time in distributing the mails in those sections of the country where they have been established.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question, I will say that I do not think the aerial mail service has been such a conspicuous success up to this time. I was not referring, however, to the post-office service in saying what I did, and I think I made it clear that I was talking about Army equipment especially.

As I say, Admiral Taylor said a short time ago, in a hearing before a House committee, that there was no such thing as commercial aviation. Mr. President, there never will be such a thing as commercial aviation if its development is to be left to the hands of men who say in advance that there is no such thing, who have predetermined in their own minds that commercial aviation is a myth.

As an offset to that, I have here an official report made to the United States Government since that statement was made. It was made by Col. William C. Hensley, of the Army. Col. Hensley has long been connected with the Air Service of the Army. He crossed the ocean in the R-34 on her homeward-bound trip, and he has made a report to the Government, which I shall not read in full because it is somewhat lengthy, but I will read an excerpt from it, if I may. He says:

> Airships are now possible in any kind or condition of weather. No weather conditions, except a strong cross-hangar wind, prevent the Bodensee, the commercial air liner built since the armistice by the Zeppelin Airship Corporation at Frederickshafen, on Lake Constance, from making its daily flight (390 miles) to Staaken, 13 miles from Berlin.

Then he goes on to speak of other routes that have been established over there, and to state most positively that there is such a thing as commercial aviation in Europe and elsewhere.

I also have something that I clipped from a newspaper which came to my hand last night—I think the Washington Star—a report made by Mr. Augustus Post to one of the American aeronautical societies, in which he speaks of a giant Caproni plane now being constructed near Milan, Italy, which will carry 100 passengers. Those machines are being constructed elsewhere, and they will continue to be constructed; there is no question about it.

I am not going into much detail about this matter, because I think the Senate already understands, probably, a good part of what I might say; but England for this year made an appropriation of $330,000,000 for aeronautical development.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. While admiring the enterprise of the British Government, if that be true, and if it be no less true that there is a governmental deficit in Great Britain, I merely want to submit to the Senator that perhaps we ought not to be called upon to waive the interest on our loans to Great Britain, which is about equivalent to the sum of that appropriation.

Mr. NEW. Well, Mr. President, that is another story.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator has just referred to the original so-called initial appropriation made by Great Britain for the current year for aeronautical purposes. My information is—and I obtained it only quite recently—that while that is true, they have modified that materially, and that the amount which really will be available for aeronautical purposes will be considerably less than $100,000,000. Indeed, one account which I saw a few days ago indicated that perhaps not more than $50,000,000 would be available for air purposes.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, there have been all sorts of reports floating around as to what Great Britain is doing. The figures that I gave I got from British officials—not newspaper statements, but British officials—who gave them to me as facts. I am not going to stand here and say that there has been no modification of that appropriation, because there may have been; but if there has been, I am not informed of it. France made an appropriation of $220,000,000. Great Britain is making projects for aeronautical lines all over the world. I think the Senator knows that. They are doing it systematically, Mr. President, in the interest of British commercial aviation and the concerns which make British air machines.

Great Britain has to-day an air attaché at every single one of the British Embassies. There is one in Washington, and there is one at every other embassy, just exactly as she has a military attaché and a naval attaché. She attaches that much importance to the subject.

I am informed from sources which I think are absolutely authentic that within the very recent past Great Britain has sold aircraft in every one of the South American countries, with one possible exception. She has agents down there pushing the sale of machines to supply a demand for British aircraft manufactories, in order that they may be kept up and their capacity left available for Great Britain in case Great Britain wants to divert that capacity to the manufacture of military machines. That shows the contrast between their policy and ours. We have allowed our factories to pass out of existence, and if to-day we had occasion to call for another large number of machines, we are without the productive capacity to supply them. We just have not got it. We have allowed it to pass clear out of existence.

France pays a thousand francs a year on the salary of every commercial aviator employed by a French private concern. France pays one-fourth of the price of every airplane that is bought by a French commercial concern for commercial purposes. The object of that is perfectly plain, and I think it is a very wise policy. By that means she keeps up her flying personnel, a new crop coming on all the time, and she keeps a large number of machines in the air. When that is true, Mr. President, it is true that every airplane of whatever type may be put to some military use; perhaps not a very good one; perhaps it may be available only as a carrier of supplies, or something of that sort; still, it is of some military use.

If you ask what the future of commercial aeronautics is, I say that I do not know, and nobody knows. As I said before, commercial aeronautics in this country is going to be largely what this country makes it. If we are going to allow it to lapse, pay no attention whatever to its development, we are not going to have any commercial aeronautics here; but they are going to have it somewhere else, in other countries, where they are paying attention to it; and the United States will find itself as far behind in a military sense in a short time as it found itself behind in 1917 when we entered the war.

We look upon men to-day who are predicting great things for the future of aeronautics as dreamers. Perhaps they are. But within the lifetime of men who are now not only living, but Members of this Congress, Gov. Wallace, of Indiana, was defeated for reelection to membership in the House of Representatives because he voted $30,000 of the people's money to the establishment of a telegraph line between Washington and Baltimore, classed as a crazy project, a visionary scheme; and because he did that, Wallace was actually defeated. Mr. CANNON told the story on the floor of the House not long ago of having heard Wallace's opponent, William J. Brown, attack him in a speech for having voted for the appropriation; and that was the one thing that brought about his defeat at the hands of Brown.

It is true that a citizen of Washington, as long ago as 1866, not only practically invented wireless telegraphy, but he succeeded in transmitting a message a distance of 18 miles within sight of the dome of this Capitol, and nothing ever came of it, because he could not get financial backing. Charles Sumner made a speech on this floor in which he told of what that man had done, but he did it in an apologetic sort of way, and showed that Mr. Sumner himself had no faith in any future for wireless communication.

The Government made no appropriation. That man's name was Loomis. He lived here in Washington, and he took out a patent on his invention. But it was not until 1897, I believe, 30 years later, that Marconi succeeded in sending a radiogram half that distance in England. The moment was ripe for it, he got backing, the thing went ahead, and to-day you have the wireless.

That has been true of any number of other things. But, Mr. President, things have to be done for the development of a service here that are entirely outside the province of either the War or Navy Departments. This matter of development can not be left to them and be made a success. It is necessary to provide a system for the issuance of licenses, for cooperation between the cities, municipalities, States, commercial bodies, and all that sort of thing. The laying out of routes, while it may sound simple enough, is, after all, not at all simple. It means the establishment of airdromes, landing fields, and the other things that are absolutely necessary to the machine that has to fly through the air between points.

I have here on my desk an inquiry made by William V. Rooker, of Indianapolis, who is the chairman of a committee appointed by the American Bar Association whose duty it shall be to recommend changes in the admiralty and other laws as they apply to the navigation of machines—something that the Army never will take care of, and in the very nature of things can not. It is entirely outside of its province.

Mr. President, having said these things, I ought to refer to the condition before Congress. I think it is apparent to every Senator and every Member of the House who will give this matter consideration that we are proceeding in the most unbusinesslike way in our treatment of the subject. We have here at least four different committees that pass upon appropriations made for aeronautics. There is the Committee on Military Affairs, which passes on the requests that are made by the Army; there is the Committee on Naval Affairs, which passes on the requests that are made by the Navy; and there is the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which passes on requests that come from the Post Office Department; and the Appropriations Committee, I think, has direct and first-hand control of requests that are made for machines for the coast defense.

The Committee on Military Affairs has not the first idea of what is asked for before the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Committee on Naval Affairs is quite as ignorant of what is asked for at the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads does not know the slightest thing about what is being done by either of the other two, and at the end of it all we have in the most unbusinesslike way passed upon three or four different requests for aircraft appropriations, acting absolutely in the dark. No private business could be conducted on that principle and last 60 days. It would go into the hands of a receiver, or ought to, anyhow, for prudential reasons if for no other.

Now, as to what all this means. Mr. President, I am perfectly certain that this is in the interest of economy. What are the facts? You have here duplicate stations, duplicate fields at very many different places. They can be consolidated, and ought to be, and under private management would be, so that one station may take the place of two. For instance, right here in the city of Washington we have three. The Army has one at Bolling Field, the Navy has one next to it, and the Post Office Department has another out at College Park. There is no reason in the world why those three services should not be furnished from one field and with one set of overhead expenses.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. I am very much interested in what the Senator has said.

Has it occurred to the Senator that he could create in the Senate a committee on aeronautics, which would take jurisdiction of the entire subject, and that the Navy, Army, Agricultural, and Post Office Departments would coordinate? Would not that be an excellent plan in the interest of the course which he advocates of bringing about an immediate solution of the question, so far as the Senate is concerned?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from California that I thought that several months ago, and I thought it so strongly that I went to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and talked with them and other Senators. We three together went over to the House of Representatives to see if we could not get the House to agree to pursue the same course, and thus have committees on aeronautics in each body, so that these things might be considered collectively. We never got anywhere with the proposition.

I had a resolution in the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, calling for the creation of that kind of a committee. It reads as follows:

May 20, 1919. Mr. NEW submitted the following resolution, which was ordered to lie over under the rule:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules is hereby authorized and directed to report a committee of the Senate to be known as the Committee on Aeronautics, the general purpose and functions of which shall be to consider all matters appertaining to aircraft and aviation.

That was the 20th of May, last.

Mr. PHELAN. The committee has never made a report?

Mr. NEW. No. I agree absolutely with the Senator from California that it would have been a good thing. My faith is evidenced by my works in that one instance, anyhow.

Mr. PHELAN. If I will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. NEW. Not at all.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to add to the fund of information with which the Senator has regaled the Senate a statement from the Chamber of Commerce of Sacramento, Calif., where there is an aviation field, and where the subject is one of very great interest, from which it appears that the service of the airplanes in patroling the forests is of very great value. I do not know that the Senator has touched upon that point.

Mr. NEW. I shall do so later.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to read these resolutions:

Whereas the attention of the Chamber of Commerce of Sacramento, Calif., has been directed to the plan for airplane patrol of the forests of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and western Wyoming, as outlined for 1920 by Col. H. H. Arnold, director of air service training and observations group for the Western Department, and to resolutions favoring the plan which have been adopted by the Western Forestry and Conservation Association; and

Whereas we believe every precautionary measure against fires in these forest areas should be taken; and

Whereas we believe the United States should take a leading place among the nations of the world in aeronautics, and, further, that the use of airplanes in forest patrol affords the best possible training for pilots and Signal Service men, while at the same time it serves a purpose which in itself fully justifies the expense involved; and

Whereas more than half of the standing merchantable timber in the United States, 80,000,000 acres of which are Government owned, is in the area mentioned, and since the value of the airplane in detecting incipient forest fires was fully demonstrated in California and Oregon during 1919:

Now, therefore, we heartily indorse the recommendations of Col. H. H. Arnold, under date of November 5, 1919, and urge the War Department to approve these recommendations at an early date. We also urge that Congress by special appropriation give the United States Forest Service $60,000 to cooperate with the Air Service and Signal Corps patrol during 1920, and that this appropriation become immediately available.

The secretary of this organization is instructed to see that a copy of this resolution is sent to the Secretary of War. He is also instructed to send copies to our representatives in Congress, and we urge them to use their influence with the War Department and in Congress to the end that the United States may take a leading part in aeronautics while at the same time protecting the lives and property of citizens from the increasing dangers of forest fires.

CHAS. E. VIRDEN, President.
H. S. MADDOX, General Secretary.

JANUARY 7, 1920.

The statement that 80,000,000 acres of Government-owned timberland in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and western Wyoming are involved makes it very interesting, I am sure, to the Senate, because the Air Service, by observing incipient forest fires and reporting them, has saved from destruction vast areas. That is a use in the time of peace which would serve, in common with the delivery of mails, a great purpose, not only in saving the forests and facilitating the distribution of mails but in keeping the service in a fit condition for taking up the work of war when the emergency comes.

Mr. NEW. Undoubtedly. Has the Senator from California concluded?

Mr. PHELAN. I have one other matter which I think would interest the Senator very much. He enumerated what England and other countries were doing. Yesterday I received this letter from a prominent machine and foundry man in San Francisco, Mr. William Ashton Doble, dated January 14, 1920, addressed to me and reading as follows:

In line with my recent letter to you, I have been advised by one of the officials of the Hall-Scott Motor Car Co.—

That is at Berkeley, Calif., where they made the Liberty motors—that they have just completed the shipment of an order of airplane engines which they had received from the Government of Japan, and which order amounted to over $1,000,000 for engines only.

From this same source I learn that the Government of Japan has appropriated over $100,000,000 for their aviation work.

I think information of this kind, such as the Senator has given us and such as I have disclosed, shows that as a measure for the protection of our country in time of war we should provide fully for the airplane service in time of peace.

Mr. NEW. Yes, Mr. President; and in that connection I have heard a report that I believe to be true, but in the absence of positive information I do not state it as a fact, that Great Britain sold to Japan one order of $40,000,000 worth of airplanes not a very great while ago. I believe that to be true.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I think it was, asked the question a while ago as to why we have been permitted to lose or sacrifice so much of what we have and why we have not kept up since the armistice was signed. It is in part because Congress itself has lost faith, and I do not know why it should not lose faith, in the capacity of the War Department to handle the matter. Some time ago I know the War Department came before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and asked for an appropriation of $15,000,000 for emergency purposes, and made a showing that our committee believed absolutely called for the expenditure of that amount of money. We gave them what they asked. They went over to the House with it, and the House absolutely declined to give them a penny, and asserted as a reason for it that they had absolutely no faith in their capacity up there to handle things, that the War Department had absolutely destroyed whatever confidence the House had had in them originally. I am not even going to say that the House was not at fault in that. I am simply describing conditions that are lamentable, whoever is responsible for them, and wherever the fault lies.

Mr. President, I have said that a large number of these fields could be consolidated. I have here two maps, on which are marked the places where there is duplication. There is a very large number of them, up and down the coast particularly, where there are stations now maintained by the Army and stations maintained by the Navy either at the same place or so very near at hand that one or the other could easily be dispensed with without loss to the service as a whole and at a very considerable saving of money.

I have some figures which bear that out. The estimates which were made for a combined or united air service, comprising 4,000 officers and 40,000 men, plus 800 officers and 7,200 men for the Army and plus 400 officers and 3,600 enlisted men for the Navy, approximated $98,000,000, and that includes $54,000,000 for the purchase of new equipment.

The combined Army and Navy estimates run about $153,000,000 and include only some training planes and very little new equipment. There would be a saving on those figures of about $66,000,000. It is only fair to say that that does not include the pay in either case. It does not include the pay in the Army estimate or the Navy estimate, or in the united Air Service estimate, so that those are wholly beside the question. That is what can be done with the Air Service by business men if put under business management and run in a businesslike way. That is just the plain truth of it.

I should like to proceed to an analysis of the bill, if I may do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. This is a very important measure, and I am sure Senators desire to be fully advised before they cast their votes in regard to it. Does the plan which the Senator's committee has submitted contemplate the complete divorcement of the aircraft organization from the Army and Navy, and does it contemplate that it shall be manned by civilians and civilians alone?

Mr. NEW. It contemplates the creation of a new department, authorizing a reciprocal arrangement between that department and the Army and the Navy. It provides that in certain cases the department of air may detail to the Army or to the Navy such contingents as may be agreed upon; that Army officers are eligible to commissions in it, of course, and the personnel is to be taken largely from the Army, and that civilians are eligible to commissions in it, too.

Mr. KING. It does not call for a new Cabinet officer?

Mr. NEW. It does not call for a Cabinet officer. It provides for a separate department, which shall be under the charge of a director, who shall report direct to the President, but he is not to be a Cabinet officer.

Mr. KING. Could not the same result have been accomplished by utilizing either the Army or the Navy, preferably the former, for the purpose of obtaining the machinery and the personnel to carry out the plan which the bill seems to have in view? It seems to me that some officer of the Army might have been selected as the director; or at least if not an Army officer, that some civilian might have been appointed, and that he would utilize certain agencies or instrumentalities and certain of the personnel of the Army in order to carry out the terms of the bill.

Mr. NEW. I would answer by saying that if that Army officer is to be left still in the War Department and subject to the authority of the War Department, most decidedly and emphatically it would not do as a substitute for this bill. You are not going to get anywhere so long as the matter is left under the control of either the War Department or the Navy Department or divided between them. You may disguise it as you please, but there are jealousies between those departments which can not be reconciled. Officers of both come to us and say they do not entertain them; that there is no such thing; but everybody knows that there is.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. If a man were put in a position of responsibility where it was equally his duty to look after the aerial service connected with the Army and the Navy, why would not he feel the same sense of duty that would characterize the men now in either branch of the service or a Cabinet officer, if one should be chosen, who had special charge of the subject?

Mr. NEW. If I understand the Senator, he has asked pretty much the same question as that asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and I would answer it by saying that if an officer is amenable to the authority of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, if he has somebody over him, he is not in authority. I am not referring to anyone who occupies those offices now; I am speaking, of course, in the abstract. The officer must himself be in authority. If he fails to have that, the whole business fails.

I should say one thing further, Mr. President, which is very important and which I had almost overlooked; that is that last summer, after realizing, perhaps, the conditions into which our aeronautical system was lapsing, and realizing further what was being done by foreign governments, a commission was organized under the authority of the War and Navy Departments. That commission was headed by the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Crowell. It had among its membership a number of men who had been prominent in the manufacturing branch of aeronautics during the war. It had an Army representative in the person of Col. Dunwoody; it had a Navy representative in the person of Capt. Mustin. That commission went abroad and remained several weeks. It visited England; it visited France; it visited Italy. Perhaps all of the commission did not visit those different countries, but it was divided into subcommittees, who went everyhwere and interviewed practically everybody who was prominently identified with aeronautics in Europe. That commission went over there without any preconceived convictions as to what ought to be done; they all stated that they went with open minds; but they came back here and made a unanimous report in favor of the establishment of a department of air.

They said, practically, that we should never get anywhere in this country until we had such a department. Capt. Mustin, of the Navy, did make some qualifications in his report, and the bill which is now under consideration has adopted the qualifications recommended by him; so it is drawn in complete accordance with the report of that commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I have been advised by a number of persons—and no two seem to agree—as to the attitude which England has taken with respect to the unification of the air service. It has been alleged by some that England has found it advantageous to place the control of aeronautics—in the army, the navy, and commercial—in the hands of one agency, divorced entirely from the military or naval departments. Others, who claim to speak authoritatively, have reported to me that England had found that it was a mistake to separate the air service from the army and from the navy and to establish an independent aircraft service. Will the Senator from Indiana advise us what is the last conclusion reached by Great Britain and what her experience has demonstrated?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, Great Britain at this moment maintains a separate air department, and has never deviated from that policy from the time it was adopted, along in the spring of 1918, now nearly two years ago. There have been reports, of course, to the contrary, but Great Britain has maintained a separate air department for the last two years. I very recently saw a statement made by Winston Churchill on the floor of the British Parliament, in which he said that under no circumstances would Great Britain depart from that policy. The British air attaché here, Commodore Charlton, tells me the same thing, and all of my information is in accordance with what I have just stated.

Mr. President, of course, I shall be very glad to answer any questions that any Senator desires to ask as we go along. I think this is a very important matter and one that ought not to be acted upon without very full information. I am going to pass over the first two sections of the bill, as they are simply declaratory. They create a department of air and provide for a director and an assistant director of air, and amend the Revised Statutes so that the department of air may be included in the governmental departments.

However, section 3 is an important section. In the first place it fixes responsibility for the aerial defense. That is one of the greatest reasons for the establishment of this department, namely, the desirability of one central department having full responsibility for having the Nation adequately prepared to meet aerial attack. It gives this department the right to concentrate every available force which, under the present scheme of things, is divided amongst the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department. Under this bill that force can all be concentrated into one compact force; so that when we have warning that another nation is about to bomb any of our cities, like New York, or that their air fleets are being transported by means of carrier ships, this one department would have the authority to use the entire trained personnel as the emergency might demand. It could order the concentration of all air forces at one particular point.

The bill provides for the granting of aviators' and aeronauts' licenses to civilian pilots and all other pilots, and the promulgation of rules and regulations to govern such aviators and aeronauts. At the present time there is no restriction on flying in this country. Anybody who thinks he can take a plane off the ground may advertise for passengers, overload his plane, and undertake to fly it at great risk to himself and to the passengers. A regulation providing for the granting of license is necessary for the common welfare; it is an absolute necessity.

The bill provides for the issuance of licenses for airships, airplanes, and so forth. In order to control the operation of airships it is necessary to have a system of licenses. A pilot ought not to be permitted to take a machine up unless he has passed an examination and is found qualified to navigate the air. It may be possible that in the course of time that may be found to be a source of revenue, just as automobile licenses are now, but I am not counting on anything of that kind; it is merely a precautionary measure.

The bill also provides for the promulgation of rules and regulations. Senators may talk about dividing this service between the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department, and all that; but, so long as that is done, there will be conflicts in rules and regulations, each department making rules or regulations to suit itself. All such matters should be and must necessarily be in the hands of one central body if we are to have uniformity. The State Department may ask for cooperation in the enforcement of passport regulations; the Treasury Department may ask for cooperation in the enforcement of customs laws; the Post Office Department may ask for cooperation in regard to postal regulations, international and domestic. All of these services can be more efficiently performed with less duplication under a united department.

The supervision and establishment of landing fields is provided for, including the supervision of those used for private and commercial purposes. At the very beginning of aeronautical development we will have to assume, both in a military and a commercial way, that it is wise at the start that the most careful regulation and supervision of landing fields be made, under Federal control so as to avoid the unwise development of commercial projects.

One of the greatest points where unbalanced, unregulated, and ill-advised development is likely to take place is in the establishment of aerial fields. It would appear that the work of regulation can be done better by a unified department of aeronautics having charge of the whole subject and which can formulate and enforce a proper set of rules and regulations, carefully thought out, and which would have the power to modify the same for the benefit of all rather than by a number of different regulation-making authorities whose uncoordinated regulations would be apt to be at variance.

The furnishing of personnel and equipment for coast and border patrols. In that service is found one of the striking instances of the need of a unified air service. The Army Air Service acts over the land and the Navy acts over the sea. In the very nature of things there will always be a division of authority between the Army and Navy on points where the lines of authority are not definitely predetermined. How far Army planes should go to sea and how far Navy planes should fly over the land are questions that are entirely unnecessary if a unified service has control.

When the long coast lines of the United States are considered, it is easy to understand the enormous duplication of work that is bound to exist in having two or three effective coast patrols, one by the Army, one by the Navy, and one by the Coast Guard, all of which we have. The duplication of fields, of personnel and equipment is everywhere found, and yet the results, on account of the want of coordination, are apt to be not nearly so complete as if one unified service were doing the patrolling. The same arguments in favor of a unified service exist as to the border and forest reserve patrols, to which the Senator from California referred a little while ago. In the forest patrol the tendency of a unified service would be to have a greater number of small stations working toward a better patrol service, although in the aggregate neither the personnel, equipment, nor expense would be as great as where duplication of service under the present form exists.

One of the provisions in this bill is to establish and maintain an aeronautical academy or academies and such aircraft factories as may be hereafter authorized by law. The science of military aeronautics has developed to such an extent that it is just as necessary to build up and train its commissioned personnel to hold positions of any nature in matters relating to aeronautics as it is for the Army and the Navy to maintain their personnel for intensive service. The same qualities of leadership, physical perfection, rapid mental adaptation, and versatility apply to this force as apply to any other forces which are permanently to represent the Government in times of national necessity, and complete responsibility is placed upon them. Under the Army and the Navy plan there is no course given which looks to specialization in military aeronautics. In this air academy it is contemplated that the science of aeronautical engineering, including airplane design and construction, will be one of the most important provisions of the curricula. It is contemplated that air strategy and aviation tactics, looking toward the proper utilization of both heavier-than-air and lighter-than-air craft, will be given full and complete consideration. Necessarily, the air academy will not be as large nor as extensive as the Naval Academy or the Military Academy, but it is contemplated that the course will be along corresponding lines. In addition, it will be necessary to establish, perhaps, air academies for staff purposes or air academies for line purposes. This is analogous to that now used by the Army so far as the aircraft factories are concerned. Should it become necessary for the air department to build their own airplanes, it is contemplated that the work would necessarily and properly be under the operation of the air department. However, it should be distinctly understood that the passage of this bill does not give authority for the present establishment of an aeronautical academy nor an aircraft factory. It only contemplates that when these are authorized by law, they will be operated by the air department. The matter of establishing them, and all that, is left entirely to Congress.

Other sections of this bill transfer the property, planes, and their appurtenances to the department of air from the departments now having them.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to talk a little about section 4; and I will hurry along through with the bill.

I call special attention to section 4:

That at the direction of the President the director of air—

At the direction of the President, now—

Shall, in time of peace and war, assign to the War and Navy Departments for duty with the Army and Navy, in addition to such permanent air units of the Army and Navy as may be authorized by this act, such aeronautical units as, computed upon the basis of the prevailing size and disposition of the Military and Naval Establishments, the President shall deem necessary. The tactical employment of all such units while so assigned shall be under the exclusive control of appropriate military or naval commanders, and the personnel of all such units while so assigned shall be subject to the disciplinary laws and regulations governing the branch of the service to which said units shall have been assigned.

It is in no sense contemplated, by the establishment of a department of aeronautics or department of air, to take away from the Naval or Military Establishments any arm which is necessary for unity of command. Indeed, it is the very object of this legislation to foster and promote and further insure unity of command. Those units which are indispensably auxiliary to the Military and Naval Establishments are, by the express provisions of this bill, left under the absolute control of the Army and Navy, including the selection of personnel. However, the purpose of this provision is to permit the temporary assignment of units as supplemental to the control of their own auxiliary units. In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the element of command, there is a definite expression by Congress that those units of the air force, when so assigned to Army and Navy, shall be under the exclusive control of the appropriate military and naval commanders, and even subject to the disciplinary laws and regulations governing the branch to which they are assigned. It is a complete answer to any objection and every objection that has ever been made by the Army or the Navy to taking the management of the air force away from them. Senators will see by this that there is complete authority to assign to them anything that the President may at any time see fit.

I am passing over hurriedly what I have here, because I shall not now read a number of the sections which go into more or less minor details. I do, however, want to give a little attention to section 11.

Section 11 provides:

That the air forces of the United States, under the technical control of the department of air, shall be known as the United States air force, and shall consist of the regular air force and the reserve air force, and such other air forces as may hereafter be authorized by law, which shall consist of all commissioned officers and enlisted men serving in or assigned to the department of air, all reserves of said forces, volunteers, or any other air forces acting as a part of or attached to the department of air.

This provision combines the air forces which are combatant, or capable of combatancy, which are under the control of the air department. As there is at present no National Guard force authorized by the law, this is a subject which will be left open, for the reason that in the end it is quite probable that the units of aviation developed by the National Guard will be observation units. It seems that the National Guard should be allowed to develop observation units only, and that these should be under the Army Air Service and the Navy Air Service, with the same arrangement as to equipment, training, and the like that apply to the regular Air Service of the Army and the Navy. This section contemplates that a strong reserve force shall be established throughout the United States, including all the 15,000 flyers trained by the United States during the war with Germany. It is planned in this manner to have a definite control over this experienced navigating personnel in the way of reserve centers near large cities, where this force may have an opportunity to practice flying occasionally, in order that in case of a national emergency their services could be immediately utilized. While this force is not yet authorized, this section contemplates that when authorized it shall be under the air department.

Mr. President, I am not going to ask for a vote on this bill this afternoon, and I do not know that I care to say anything more about it in detail until we get closer to the hour when we can vote upon it. I shall be very glad to answer any questions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the Senator made any computations with a view of ascertaining the approximate cost that will be entailed in the administration of this act?

I am not now, of course, inquiring with respect to the cost that will be incurred from year to year, because that is impossible to determine. The appropriations will vary. I can appreciate that one year the appropriation for aircraft might be very great, and the succeeding year there might be a substantial diminution in the amount of the appropriation; but I fancy that the administration charge—the overhead expenses, to use the common expression—will be substantially the same from year to year, unless some emergency arises so that the machinery would be very largely increased.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. KING. What does that amount to?

Mr. NEW. Here is an estimate, going somewhat into detail, for the united air forces: Estimate for aviation schools, and special equipment for them, $1,097,050; maintenance and repair of buildings, $3,000,000; new construction at stations, $11,837,000; purchase of new equipment, $54,080,250; maintenance and repair of equipment, including miscellaneous stock and hire of civilian personnel, $14,960,000; experimental, $13,000,000; or a total of $97,974,877, from which should be taken $4,350,000, which is now asked for by the Post Office Department, and which can be supplied out of this.

Mr. President, that, of course, does not mean absolutely that the expense of this service shall be $97,000,000. As I have shown here, $54,000,000 of it is an estimate for equipment. Congress may buy just as much or as little of that equipment as Congress, in its wisdom, sees fit, and the matter of establishing the schools spoken of is left entirely to Congress.

That is, in general, an answer to the Senator's question, I think.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator does not fix that as a limit, or as a minimum or maximum, because, in my humble opinion, neither the Senate nor the House is ready to appropriate any such sum as that for aircraft production for the next year or two. I think that the amount allowed for overhead expense is entirely too great. Unfortunately, whatever the Government undertakes it mars, and it is accompanied with extravagance and waste. That is particularly true in the War Department. The War Department during the past year or two has not given us a record of which it or anybody else ought to be very proud in the matter of efficiency and economy, and one objection I have to this bill—and I do not know that it can be avoided—is the creation of more machinery.

It seems to me that we spend the greater part of our time in creating more administrative machinery, more executive machinery. We create more bureaus, more departments, and offices, and provide for more officeholders and functionaries, and in that way pile up the expenses of the Government and increase the already staggering taxes under which the American people labor. If this scheme calls for $100,000,000 annual appropriation for aircraft, I shall vote against it, and I believe others will vote against it. We are not ready to embark upon a policy that calls for $100,000,000 for aircraft production for the next few years.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I think he misapprehends just a little. I am in entire sympathy with his objection to the creation of new bureaus, new agencies, and all that sort of thing. This, while it apparently creates one, as a matter of fact provides for a consolidation of three or four; it very much lessens the personnel that will be required to administer the Air Service of the United States. The total that I read to the Senator of approximately $98,000,000 I admit is large, but it is a competent estimate of what that service can be provided for in contrast to the estimates that are now made for the supplying of what is really a smaller service for the Army, the Navy, and the Post Office Departments. They aggregate nearly $160,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator means those are the estimates which have been submitted?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. KING. But, of course, Congress would not appropriate any such sum as that.

Mr. NEW. I do not think a Senator can say "of course" Congress is going to do any particular thing. I have been a Member of the Senate long enough now to realize that you can not always tell.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I really think that the Republicans in the House and the Republicans in the Senate, if it is not unparliamentary to refer to our brethren at the other end of the Capitol, and if it is not unparliamentary to refer to our brethren upon the other side of the aisle, realize the fact that the American people are indignant at the high taxes and resent this idea that we are going to appropriate six or nine billions of dollars in a day of peace; and we have to begin cutting, and cutting to the bone, and hewing, and I propose, as far as my vote is concerned, to begin hewing with the War Department, where there has been such indefensible waste, waste that ought to bring before a court-martial some officials, and into other courts some who have been connected with extravagance and waste in the War Department.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, just how indignant does the Senator think the public will be, and what form will its manifestation take, at a showing of a saving of something like $60,000,000 in one estimate as against other estimates?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is an inquiry. Permit me to say that the people do not care what the estimates of the departments are, and I have gotten so that I do not care. I do not pay any attention any more to the estimates of the executive departments. They are made regardless of the needs of the public or proper and economical administration. They are made too often to satisfy the whims and the capricious and ambitious designs of men who want to extend their authority and their jurisdiction.

Mr. NEW. I have no quarrel with the Senator over that proposition.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I care to say on this subject this afternoon, inasmuch as it is understood that there is to be no roll call. But I would suggest the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Indiana will pardon me. I want to talk for about two minutes before the reading of the bill is begun.

Mr. NEW. That is satisfactory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to an amendment which I shall offer, which excludes from the provisions of the bill the Post Office Department. My reason for doing this may be briefly stated in this way:

About three years ago we appropriated $100,000 for a trial air-mail service between this city and New York. It was started under the joint auspices of the War Department and the Post Office Department. It had not been operated long before differences arose between the two departments, with a result that was very destructive to the aerial mail service. My recollection is that Army officers said to their flyers, "The weather is such to-day that you can not fly," and therefore the mail from here to New York did not go. Of course, a mail service in order to be efficient must be regular, and it was soon found that the two departments could not run the aerial mail service. Therefore the War Department turned it over to the Post Office Department, and since that time this service has been a most conspicuous success.

We have increased the routes to three. We now have a route from here to New York, we have one from New York to Cleveland, and we have one from Cleveland to Chicago. All three are regular routes. The flyers make the trips with amazing regularity, regardless of weather. They have learned to fly in all kinds of weather. They have had very few casualties. The service pays for itself at the usual rate of postage, as has been demonstrated by the department, and it has been a most marked success.

It is the only successful aerial postal service in the world to-day. No other country has such a service, and the people want it. It saves a great deal of time between here and New York in the distribution of the mail, and between New York and the far West. The two routes to the West save now something like 24 hours, and the people of that great western country out there are not only demanding its retention but they are demanding it very vigorously.

In addition to that, new routes to the West and to the South have been proposed, and they ought to be established. But if you are going to take it out of the hands of the Post Office Department, which has made it a great success, and put it into the hands of this new department, in part, you are going to destroy that service. It will be just exactly as it was when it was in the hands partly of the Post Office Department and partly of the War Department. A divided authority can not be effective. It must be under one control, and to put it into the hands of this new department would be destructive of it, and I wish to secure the exclusion of the Post Office Department from such a bill as may be passed.

Of course, it may be all right to consolidate the aerial service in the Navy and the aerial service in the Army. There are reasons why they should be consolidated. I am not expert enough to say as to that. Certainly our aerial services in both of those departments have not been conspicuous successes, and something ought to be done. I judge from the remarks of the Senator from Indiana that there is good reason for consolidating these two services into one to make our war air service under one management and control. But do not let us take this service away from the only department that has made aerial service a success, whose activities are wholly separated from those of the War Department and the Navy Department, and wholly separated from the air department, and put it in an untried field.

I say that every American citizen ought to be intensely proud of the fact that we have the most valuable Air Service in all the world, and the only one that really amounts to anything. I take a great deal of pride in it, because, as the Senator from Utah will remember, he and I had a debate on this subject three years ago, when I first came into the Senate. He was opposed at that time to the institution of any such service, did not believe it would be a success, and a great many people believed with him, because it was an untried field. But the Post Office Department has made it a success and Congress has appropriated larger sums each year. It is self-sustaining. It does not cost the country anything; it pays for itself, and we ought to keep it in that department where the success has been met.

I merely make these remarks in passing so that the Senator from Indiana may understand the amendment which I shall offer when it comes up to be voted on.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, to the Senator from Tennessee I may just say this, that the Post Office Department, of course, is averse to giving up its control over the air mail. The War Department is just as averse to giving up its control over Army aviation. The Navy Department is averse, the Treasury Department will be, and every other department of the Government will be.

Mr. President, I never knew a time or an instance where any single department of the Government was willing to give up control of anything it had. If you found the mumps in any department of the United States Government, and somebody came along and tried to transfer it somewhere else, there would be an objection raised on the part of that department that it was being required to give up something that it had under its jurisdiction.

As to the objection that the Senator makes, I would like to read what the Postmaster General said at the time this transfer was not thought of, and he was simply writing a report about what had happened. He said:

The Aerial Mail Service was inaugurated with the cooperation of the War Department, which furnished the machines and aviators and conducted the flying and maintenance operations. This cooperation, which was of inestimable value, was maintained until August 12, when the entire operation was taken over by the Post Office Department and the work performed by this department with its own equipment and personnel. The task which the Army had undertaken was new and full of unsolved problems. A few flights in the beginning were defaulted, partially abandoned, or interrupted by stormy weather, but gradually the service settled down to an absolutely dependable one. It gives pleasure to report that the high standard of daily perfect flights which the Army succeeded gradually in establishing is being maintained by the Post Office Department regardless of weather conditions.

Mr. President, as I said, one object of the bill is economy, the consolidation of flying fields. As one instance, we have, as I may have stated earlier in my remarks, three fields here in the city of Washington, of which one, at College Park, belongs to the Post Office Department. The other two are across the river, one under the Army and one under the Navy. There are three sets of overhead charges on those three fields, and so it is at other points. One of the objects of the bill is to consolidate such places.

I desire to say further to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that it is to be left entirely to the Post Office Department to say where they want routes established. It will be left to the department of air to furnish the equipment and the personnel for working those routes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has referred to a communication from the Postmaster General. I wish to call his attention to a later statement, dated January 6, 1920. Here is what the Postmaster General has to say about it at this time:

WHY DO THEY WANT THE AIR MAIL?

What is the purpose, then, of attempting to take out of the hands of a civil department the efficient and economic operation of a commercial function? It is not necessary to the conduct of an efficient fighting force. In fact, it would be a mere side-line activity of a military air department. It can not seriously be contended that a military air department can conduct the postal air service more economically and more efficiently than it is being conducted by the Post Office Department, as demonstrated by more than a year and a half of operation and as compared with the cost of air operations for military purposes here and abroad.

There is some other reason for this persistent desire to tie up the air mail service with a military air service. Whether it is the reason or not, it is easy to see that the proposed department of air would be likely to get larger appropriations if it transported mail from city to city than if it devoted itself to purely military work. It can not be in the interest of either economy or postal efficiency to take the air mail out of the hands of the Post Office Department and put it under a militarized air service, and certainly it can contribute nothing to military efficiency to carry mail sacks back and forth daily between certain cities; then, if it is not the hope of getting larger appropriations from Congress each year, what is behind this powerful and persistent campaign to turn over to the proposed separate military air force this mail-transporting function of the Post Office Department?

The idea that it would be a great thing if the military fliers in their air maneuvers could be put to work carrying mails instead of flying their planes empty appeals to some men.

Would those men vote to put the Infantry to work on the letter carriers' rounds, the Cavalry to patrolling the cities, and the Artillery and transports to hauling street litter to the city dumps just to keep them busy at some civic function?

And what would happen if you turned the air mail over to a military department of air? Remember always that the pending bills would make it an Army and Navy consolidated separate fighting force for the expected purpose of greater military efficiency in the air.

WOULD SPEEDILY KILL AIR MAIL.

The first thing that would happen would be that while you might put the military fliers to work on some civic occupation, it would cost the Government more per mile and per pound to carry the air mail than under an efficient postal administration.

The next thing that would happen would be an immediate loss of efficiency in postal service, not that the military operatives would not be capable men, but because, first, it would be an operation incidental to the main purposes of the proposed department of the air, which is sought to be created, not to jitney sacks of mail on strict daily schedules between given points but to develop and increase our military proficiency in the air; and, secondly and chiefly, because the Post Office Department could not compel a coordinate branch of the Government to render that degree of service which it could compel its own employees to render or which it could compel a bonded contractor to perform. This is not a groundless fear or imaginary eventuality. It is bitter experience in the Postal Service. The maintaining of schedules and the unfailing performance of service is the very soul of the mail transportation. Fines under the law and recovery on bonds have proven the only means of forcing that dependability of service which postal efficiency requires where the Post Office Department itself does not operate the service.

Long years of experience have taught the Post Office Department that it can not obtain the same efficient service from a coordinate branch of the Government over which it can not exercise direct authority as it can over its bonded contractors or its own employees, and in the light of that experience the Post Office Department serves notice now that Congress will kill the American air mail speedily and with certainty if it transfers its operations from the Post Office Department to the proposed department of air.

I can not add anything to what has been so well said by the Postmaster General so recently. It is apparent to all that if we want to kill the air mail service, we could not do it more effectively than by turning it over to this new and untried department of air.

Let us turn over to the air service the functions that properly belong to it. I am willing to turn them over to it. I have no objection to the Senator's bill, though I have my doubts whether it will cure all the defects which he thinks it will cure. I think they are going to be very slow to build it up, even under an independent air service, as separate from the Army and as separate from the Navy. We have not had any success in either one, so I am willing to join with the Senator in trying something else than the Army and the Navy, but I am not willing to join the Senator in putting into that untried department this splendid service that has been made such a success.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not know that there is much profit in controversial statements between the Senator and myself on the subject at this time. As a matter of fact, however, the air service of the Post Office Department is so very limited, there is so little of it, that it is hardly worth while talking about it as an established service. One of the purposes of the bill is to extend it very greatly and to establish routes generally; not merely to have one between Washington and New York City and one between New York City and Chicago, but to very greatly extend the aerial Postal Service.

The Senator says let us turn over to the air department what the Army has and what the Navy has, but let us preserve the Post Office service. Yes; let us turn over to the other fellow everything that we have not got. Each department makes just exactly that objection for itself.

You will hear just as much from the Army and just as much from the Navy, and I have no doubt the coast defense will come with a plea for its continuance and a statement of what will happen if its service is taken out of its organization. That is one trouble with Government affairs, as we know. They get into a certain department and into a certain rut, and all the powers of man at least can not serve to get them out.

The report of the Postmaster General which I read a while ago was one that was written at a time when there was no thought in the mind of the Postmaster General or anybody else that his beloved postal air service was about to be taken from him. There was not any threat of it at all. Then he was generous enough in what he had to say about the Army service. It is true that the whole business was in its infancy, and in the service that the Army rendered to the Post Office Department at that time I have no doubt that there were some deficiencies, as there will be, no matter who conducts it.

I do not think that I have anything further that I care to urge at this time. I believe there is a desire to have an executive session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desired to say just a word before adjournment. There seems to be a very small attendance here, however, and I shall not talk simply for the RECORD. I would like to say something in reference to the airplane service as connected with the Post Office Department. I think, however, in view of the fact that the Senate is ready to go into executive session, I will say nothing on the subject to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Indiana lay aside his bill temporarily?

Mr. NEW. I will do so in order that the Senate may go into executive session. That is the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there ought to be an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 29, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 28, 1920.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

David F. Houston, of Missouri, to be Secretary of the Treasury, vice Carter Glass, resigned.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Edwin T. Meredith, of Iowa, to be Secretary of Agriculture, vice David F. Houston, nominated to be Secretary of the Treasury.

ASSISTANT TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

John Brooke Evans, of Pottstown, Pa., to be Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, Pa. (Reappointment.)

SURGEON GENERAL OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Hugh S. Cumming, of Hampton, Va., to be Surgeon General of the Public Health Service in place of Rupert Blue, whose term of office has expired.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

J. William Thurmond, of Greenville, S. C., to be United States attorney for the western district of South Carolina. (A reappointment.)

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Hayden M. White, of Buffalo, Wyo., to be register of the land office at Buffalo, Wyo., vice Ralph R. Read, resigned.

SOLICITOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Frederick McCarthy, of Ansonia, Conn., to be Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, vice Albert Lee Thurman, resigned.

ASSISTANT SOLICITOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

James J. O'Hara, of Massachusetts, to be Assistant Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, vice Edward T. Quigley, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be colonels.

Lieut. Col. William P. Jackson, Infantry (Inspector General's Department), from January 13, 1920.
Lieut. Col. Matthias Crowley, Infantry, from January 13, 1920.
Lieut. Col. John J. Bradley, Infantry, from January 13, 1920.
Lieut. Col. Douglas Settle, Infantry, from January 18, 1920.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Maj. William B. Cochran, Infantry, from January 7, 1920.
Maj. Harry F. Rethers, Infantry (Quartermaster Corps), from January 13, 1920.
Maj. Herschel Tupes, Infantry, from January 13, 1920.

To be majors.

Capt. Ode C. Nichols, Infantry, from January 7, 1920.
Capt. Kirwin T. Smith, Infantry, from January 9, 1920.
Capt. William W. Bessell, Infantry, from January 13, 1920.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Harris M. Melasky, Infantry, from November 19, 1919.
First Lieut. Sidney H. Young, Infantry, from November 20, 1919.
First Lieut. John C. Whitcomb, Infantry, from November 21, 1919.
First Lieut. Charles D. Lewis, Infantry, from November 22, 1919.
First Lieut. Paul H. Brown, Infantry, from November 22, 1919.
First Lieut. William S. Eley, Infantry, from November 22, 1919.
First Lieut. Paul W. York, Infantry, from November 24, 1919.
First Lieut. Ferdinand G. von Kummer, jr., Infantry, from November 25, 1919.
First Lieut. Joseph P. Sullivan, Infantry, from November 25, 1919.
First Lieut. Asa P. Pope, Infantry, from December 1, 1919.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 28, 1920.

POSTMASTERS.

MISSISSIPPI.

Clara B. Lee, Arcola.
James J. Hiller, Calhoun City.
Lawrence V. Stribling, Carthage.
Mary E. Luster, Edwards.
Gertrude Martin, Fernwood.
Sarah L. Townsend, Holcomb.
Margaret S. Walker, Houlka.
William J. James, Lyman.
Carson Hughes, Oakland.
William T. Sparkman, Pascagoula.
Emile J. Adam, Pass Christian.
Myrtle A. Tanner, Pelahatchee.
Sue V. Clements, Pickens.
Marvin B. Holloway, Poplarville.

Janie H. Wiygul, Shannon.
James F. Jones, Shubuta.
Lillie B. Carr, Sumner.
Susan R. T. Perry, Tchula.
Tom H. Tabor, Weir.

NEW JERSEY.

Helen G. Miller, Andover.
Harry C. Wheaton, Anglesea.
Laura B. Van Slyke, Avenel.
Alfred B. Gibb, Bernardsville.
George W. Roe, Branchville.
Francis A. Banville, Cliffside.
Charlotte S. Hurd, Dover.
William F. Barry, Elizabeth.
Jacob W. Binder, Hackensack.
Adolph Lankering, Hoboken.
Thomas Post, Midland Park.
Lewis R. Hogan, Millville.
William J. Cowgill, Paulsboro.
Thomas E. Hunt, Penns Grove.
William K. Blodgett, Point Pleasant.
James J. Conor, Ridgefield.
Frank M. Stevens, Ridgewood.
Arthur F. Stecher, Riverside.
Abram A. Reger, Somerville.
Albert A. Sickley, Springfield.
James V. Ludlow, Tuckerton.
Emil Groth, Weehawken.
Louis Ponsiglione, West Fort Lee.
Edward C. Francois, West Hoboken.

OKLAHOMA.

David S. Cumming, Adair.
John E. Reasonover, Bixby.
James E. Smith, Bluejacket.
Harry F. Wolfe, Bristow.
Grover C. Fulton, Cardin (late Tar River).
Joseph H. Blythe, Cherokee.
Rolland R. Morris, Coweta.
Leslie Hurlock, Dewey.
William T. Hughes, Fort Cobb.
Charles R. Stiver, Grove.
Frank Olsmith, Guthrie.
James D. Rives, Holdenville.
George P. Morton, Hollis.
Oscar R. Blassingame, Howe.
M. Louise D. Bruce, Lookeba.
Ralph P. Witt, Maud.
Nelson L. Eggleston, Minco.
David W. Wells, Mountain View.
William B. Williamson, Okmulgee.
John A. Burch, Paden.
Theordore E. Futrell, Porum.
Claude C. Taylor, Sapulpa.
Stanley Shepherd, Seiling.
Joe W. Van Deventer, Skiatook.
John W. Fuller, Stonewall.
Dora V. Burton, Stroud.
Frank Emanuel, Sulphur.
Henry F. Turner, Vian.
Faye F. Mitchell, Wanette.
Cora S. Brown, Waukomis.
John C. Puryear, Wetumka.
John L. Rogers, Wilson (late New Wilson).

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Maj. Dwight W. Ryther.
Maj. William F. Creary.

To be majors.

Capt. Gideon H. Williams.
Capt. Fred W. Bugbee.
Capt. William M. Goodale.
Capt. Leonard T. Baker.
Capt. Charles S. Frank.
Capt. Franklin S. Leisenring.
Capt. Charles F. Andrews.
Capt. James M. Petty.
Capt. John B. Shuman.
Capt. Charles G. Lawrence.
Capt. Allan L. Briggs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, ever mindful of Thy children, we thank Thee for that spirit which Thou didst send into the world in the life, character, and precepts of Thy son, Jesus Christ—a spirit which is manifesting itself in a more practical sense and bringing men of all nations closer together.

The World War through which we have just passed, with its widespread desolation, in the destruction of life and limb, homes, and through sorrowing hearts, are moving great men and women to deeds of love and kindness in our own country. Sickness, disease, and death are moving the churches and all philanthropic organizations with that spirit which is marching on, not only in our own country but throughout the world, to alleviate sorrow and suffering.

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
> With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me:
> As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
> While God is marching on.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS AND CANALS—LEAVE TO SIT.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Railways and Canals be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Railways and Canals be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week.

Mr. GARD. I think that is a very desirable thing to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REQUEST TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject matter about which the gentleman wishes to speak?

Mr. DALLINGER. It is in reply to an extension of remarks on the Berger matter by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that request and make it after the House begins business this morning?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that the gentleman ought not to take the time unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] is present. He is not present this morning.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] did not speak on the day the Berger matter came up, but he extended remarks in the RECORD containing, to my mind, not only very serious reflections on the committee, but on the Members of the House who voted to sustain the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no objection to the gentleman making his speech; but does not the gentleman think it is fair to Mr. GRIFFIN to wait until he is here? He is here every morning, but does not happen to be here now.

Mr. DALLINGER. I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] that at the first opportunity I should do this. I have been sick and unable to do it before.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] is generally here when we meet, but he is not in the Chamber this morning, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PRIMER ON THE INCOME TAX

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a revision of my Primer on the Income Tax of the War Revenue Act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the war-revenue act. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is it that the gentleman desires to print?

Mr. HAWLEY. A revision of a pamphlet explaining the manner in which internal-revenue taxes are selected, similar to the one I printed last year. This revision brings it up to date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

CERTAIN LABORERS IN THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. FORDNEY (when the Committee on Ways and Means was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11309) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the Customs Service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Speaker or the gentleman from Michigan if this is a privileged bill? If it is, the gentleman can not call it up on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GARNER. It is not privileged. We tried to make it that way some time ago, but somebody objected, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. FORDNEY. This is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay going wages to men loading and unloading vessels.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought we passed that bill last week.

Mr. FORDNEY. No. It was objected to then, and so I ask to take it up now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill. It is on the Union Calendar, and under the rule——

Mr. GARNER. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH. I shall object to that.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11309, with Mr. FESS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule two hours' general debate are allowed. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will take only a very few minutes. I should like to have one amendment to the bill. I will explain the amendment to the House.

This bill is requested by the Treasury Department. Under the law the Treasury Department is limited in the payment of wages to men loading and unloading vessels to 31¼ cents per hour. Prior to December 2 the Government had paid the going wages in the various ports, especially in the South, but the Comptroller of the Treasury on the 2d of December ruled that the law prohibited the payment of a greater sum than 31¼ cents per hour. The going wages paid for that class of labor throughout the whole country are far above that amount, and now the Government wants authority to pay additional wages in proportion to what are paid by other people.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman if this is skilled labor? Does it require any particular skill to perform this work?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; these men are largely longshoremen, but the wages paid for this class of labor in New Orleans, as stated by one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, are from 80 cents to $1.20 an hour, and the Government can not get men there at 31¼ cents an hour when other people are paying from 80 cents to $1.20.

In Galveston the wages range from 60 cents to 85 cents per hour for that class of work; at Norfolk from 50 cents to 55 cents an hour; at Tampa from 40 to 55 cents per hour; at Providence, 75 cents per hour, while the Government, under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, is limited to 31¼ cents an hour.

Now, that is all there is to this bill. It authorizes the Government to pay the going wages, such wages as others pay for that class of work.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does this class of labor employed for this particular work enjoy the benefits of the 30 days' leave of absence, the same as other employees of the Government?

Mr. FORDNEY. These people are not employed by the Government except at times when the Government has vessels to unload. They are not in the general employ of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. They are not on the permanent roll?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; they are daily laborers and only employed at times when the Government has vessels to unload.

Mr. WALSH. How many will this affect?

Mr. FORDNEY. On an average 176 men, and it will never reach above 200 men. Now, in line 4, after the word "of," I would like to insert the word "temporary," so as to make it positive that it means temporary laborers only. The bill is limited in time to December 31, 1920.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course this bill is designed to reach an exigency.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is there any likelihood that the exigency will have ceased to operate on December 31 next?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee did not feel that it would like to extend the authority for an indefinite time, because it gives quite wide authority, and we had hoped that at the end of one year's time conditions might be so settled throughout the country that there would be a material change from conditions to-day.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman know what is being done now?

Mr. FORDNEY. Since the ruling of the Comptroller of the Currency I do not know what the Government is doing, but the Secretary of the Treasury told me this morning that they were greatly embarrassed because of the failure to pass this bill. I did not ask him what they were doing, but he said that they were greatly embarrassed and wished this legislation to be passed just as quickly as possible to enable them to meet the situation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That embarrassment is likely to be duplicated a year from now, it seems to me.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, with all due respect, that I am opposed to increasing the cost of production as far as possible in the country, because on the cost of production depends the cost of living. I have said before, and I wish to repeat, that in the cost of production, no matter what is produced, articles manufactured or otherwise produced, the labor cost is at least 90 per cent of the total cost of production. While the high cost of production goes on it is not becoming to any man who wishes to be reasonable to say that we can lower the cost of living by legislation.

We need more production in the country in order to lower the cost of living. It may be that some of our laws can be so changed that we could increase production, but so long as there is a scarcity of each and every article in the market, just that long the price for that article is going to be high. While the cost of production is high there is no question but that there is going to be a scarcity of that product in the country, and the price of the product is going to be high to the consumer.

Let me give you an illustration. In many lines of industry men are getting fabulous wages and the cost of that labor is added to the cost of production. There came a young man into my office the other day, from my home town, an unskilled laborer, a farmer's boy, who had found employment in a factory in my home town, where there are many plants in operation. He was working in a room where there are four men working in a group. The stint per day was 250 pieces of whatever machinery they were making, and for all they produced above 250 pieces they received extra pay. That boy's pay was $78 a week for five and a half days' labor.

So long as that high cost of product goes on, so long the high cost of living is going to continue. Therefore, I say I am opposed to increase in the cost production where it is possible to prevent it. But in this particular case the situation that exists is unavoidable. We are bringing from Cuba and South America and the West India Islands at the present time large quantities of sugar so badly needed by the people and one of our most valuable food products. These men are very largely used in unloading sugar, so the Secretary of the Treasury tells me. Now, we have to pay just such wages as the going wages as prevail in the port of entry.

Gentlemen, I feel that it is absolutely necessary to pass this bill in order to give the Government the opportunity to succeed in getting labor to do the work that must be done and pay the going wages.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Has the department paid anything in excess of 31¼ cents per hour, as indicated here, in any cases heretofore?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. They have paid the going wages prior to the ruling of the Auditor of the Treasury Department, but since that time they are limited to the 31¼ cents an hour; but let me say to the gentleman that this money paid by the Government is charged to and paid by the owners of the ships.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. This is a reimbursement proposition?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. The Government pays and collects it from the owners of the ships.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If such payments were made in excess of the legal rate, what has been done toward the recovery of illegal payment beyond that rule—anything?
Mr. FORDNEY. Not at all. The Secretary of the Treasury has asked me to add an amendment that would relate back to a certain date, at which time they began to make those payments contrary to law, in order to relieve the man who engaged those laborers from liability under his bond. I do not believe it is wise to attempt to have a provision of that kind put in the bill, because we would then justify something that was not lawful, but if an attempt is made to enforce payment from that man because of the obligation of his bond, it will be time enough for Congress then to take it up and relieve him.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is the point I wish to bring out in response to my inquiry. Under the law there is a liability resting against the officer who made these payments, the collector of customs, for instance, who is disbursing officer for purposes of that sort, and also the executive officer. A liability rests against him, and in order to make that question clear and to relieve that officer from such a liability, some action should be taken in relation to that point, because the question can be raised against that officer at any future time, and he may be embarrassed thereby.
Mr. FORDNEY. My reason for not pressing that was this, that although that officer under his bond is liable, yet he employed the men and collected the money from the owner of the vessel, and the only liability that rests upon that man that I can see would be for the owner of the vessel to begin suit to recover. He was perfectly willing that those wages be paid by the Government for the work, and the owner gave his consent, and I do not think that any man under those circumstances would get very far in court in collecting damages from the Government official under bond.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It is that phase of the question I have in mind—that the owner of the ship at some particular time might bring suit, which would embarrass the man who was a former Federal official.
Mr. FORDNEY. That is true, and that is why the Assistant Secretary asked that such an amendment be made in this bill. But I believe there would be greater success for the bill if we did not offer such an amendment, but met that situation if it arises at any time, and I will vote at any time to relieve the Government official under his bond from liability.
Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.
Mr. BEGG. Why is it necessary for the Government to collect the money to pay the longshoremen and then turn around and pay that same money to the men who do the work? In other words, why is it necessary for the Government to act as an agent for the shipowners in furnishing labor?
Mr. FORDNEY. We have a Government merchant marine; that vessel is owned by the Government. There is no one else to appeal to but the Government in that particular case. If it is a private ship, then the private owners look to the Government to furnish the employees and will pay whatever is necessary. This is to relieve the Government in employing men on Government ships, and where it is found necessary to relieve the individual to also relieve him at his suggestion and agreement.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. This matter of unloading vessels must be conducted under the customs laws.
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The department itself has jurisdiction and oversight, in order to prevent fraud on the customs, and for that reason the Secretary of the Treasury has jurisdiction of these men who do that work, whether it be for a Government-owned vessel or a vessel owned by private individuals. The Government itself must supervise this, otherwise fraud might enter against the customs.
Mr. FORDNEY. That is true. I thank the gentleman for making that statement. I do not wish to discuss the matter further unless somebody wants to ask a question.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.
Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has reported out from his committee a Senate bill providing for the loading and unloading of vessels at night, preliminary entry of vessels. Is it the gentleman's intention to call that measure up after this measure is disposed of?
Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that it is the purpose of the gentleman's colleague, Mr. TREADWAY, who was requested to make a report on that bill, to call that bill up at the very first opportunity.
Mr. TREADWAY. I am under instructions from the committee to call it up at the first opportunity, and I understood the chairman to say this morning that he desired it called up following this bill.
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the measure.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for one hour.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I doubt the wisdom of enacting such legislation as this to accommodate some 175 or 200 laborers in the Government service and attempt by the language of the bill to hold out the hope that we are passing temporary legislation. It is rather singular that there should be a great difference in the wages paid this class of work between New Orleans and other ports where the Government undertakes to pay for the unloading of these vessels. These are temporary positions and the result would be that we would establish a standard for paying temporary laborers higher wages than some of the officers of the Government get as salaries at the same ports. For instance, in New Orleans they get 80 cents an hour up to 4 p. m., and $1.20 an hour thereafter. It would be pretty easy for a half dozen temporary laborers to see to it that a particular vessel is not unloaded or disposed of by 4 o'clock, so that it would be necessary to work several hours after 4 o'clock at $1.20 per hour in order to complete the work. In Providence 50 cents per hour is the lowest price at which laborers can be obtained, and many demand as high as 75 cents and a dollar per hour. Extremely high prices are paid to laborers in that city, and we are told that some of the laborers on the regular rolls of the Government are resigning to work outside. That is the custom with respect to temporary labor.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WALSH. Yes.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Would the collector of the port have authority to decide the hours during which men should work and when they should quit?
Mr. WALSH. I suppose he would.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does he have authority under the law to determine the time for the clearance of the vessel, whether he keeps it one day or half a dozen days?
Mr. WALSH. I imagine he has.
Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Under those circumstances the collector can say, "We will stop at 4 o'clock," and $1.20 an hour thereafter could be avoided.
Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; he could say that, but the first thing that collector would know he would get a wire from Washington to the effect that that vessel must be cleared the next morning at 9 o'clock, and he would have to go around and get his temporary group of men to complete the work on the vessel that night.
Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WALSH. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. If it were not a Government ship it would be entirely in the option of the owner of the ship to say whether they went on after 4 o'clock, but if it was a Government ship it would be up to the Government to say what should take place.
Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this applies to both. Now, why adopt the wisdom of establishing a policy for temporary laborers to the effect that they shall get the prevailing rate of wages in that particular community?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WALSH. I will.
Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely wish to ask the gentleman whether his main objection to this bill would be relieved by the placing into it of a maximum rate per hour?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I would have no objection to this measure if we put a maximum into the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. For the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the bill reaches the amending stage I propose to move to strike out, on line 6, page 1, the following words: "The local rates prevailing" and substitute in lieu of these words "75 cents per hour," which would make the section read "not exceeding 75 cents per hour."

Mr. WALSH. I would favor such an amendment. I do not know whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] would be willing to accept that amendment or not.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Will not that mean that if 75 cents is placed in the bill as a maximum, 75 cents will be the minimum at all the ports, and we shall have practically fixed the price of 75 cents an hour?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is this the intention of the gentleman or does the gentleman believe that it would be wise to do it?

Mr. WALSH. I believe it is much more preferable for us to fix a standard which shall be uniform in all the ports, rather than to say that at one port a man can get a dollar an hour, because that is the prevailing rate, and at another port they can get only 75 cents, because that is the prevailing rate. But if you do it that way, it means that men at these ports will immediately raise their scale by saying, "Why, they are getting $1.20 at New Orleans, and we must get $1.20 in Boston or in Tampa." These men, while they may not enjoy individual acquaintanceship, have means whereby they make this information available from one port to another.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well.

Mr. TILSON. Will not that mean that at ports where labor is obtainable at 75 cents per hour labor will be obtained for the unlading of the vessel, and in ports where wages are higher than 75 cents it will be entirely impossible to get anybody to unload a vessel?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no. If wages are at 75 cents an hour in Tampa, and they require a dollar an hour at New Orleans, how long do you think the men at Tampa are going to work for 75 cents an hour when they know that over in New Orleans they are paying them a dollar for the same class of work?

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I first yield to the chairman, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. If that is true, why does not the same condition prevail now? Why is it now that in Tampa the wages are 40 cents an hour and in New Orleans 80 cents? It should apply now as well as later on if we put this language in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The rate now, both at Tampa and at New Orleans, is higher than the Government can pay, but when the Government places the standard of approval on the higher rate, of course the places where the lower rate prevails are going to come in and demand it.

Mr. FORDNEY. These are the rates prevailing both in Tampa and New Orleans.

Mr. WALSH. You are attempting to fix the standard for the same class of service, no matter where it is done. For the Government they will receive the same rate of pay. We ought not to permit the fluctuation of wages in the different parts of the country to enter into the fixing of the Government wage. If that is so, we might say that certain officials who come from certain sections of the country should get a certain salary because similar work in that section of the country receives that rate of salary, while in another section of the country they should be paid a higher salary because similar work in that section paid a higher rate.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will yield, please?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. The work in Tampa, Fla., is identical with the work going on in New Orleans, when the wages in New Orleans are double the wages paid in Tampa, because of the condition of labor. The inability of the Government to find laborers in New Orleans, where wages are from 80 cents to $1.20 an hour, is because of the inability to get men. There are plenty of employees at Tampa, but there is a shortage in New Orleans.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly. But the reason for that is that the Government can not pay those wages now.

Mr. FORDNEY. No. Those are the wages paid by individuals.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; those are the wages paid by individuals, but the Government can not pay them. I submit to the gentleman that by virtue of this legislation we are establishing a very dangerous precedent for work performed by the United States Government in attempting to fix a standard which shall be based upon local demands, and it will result in the local demand rising in accordance with the demands made in the places where the highest rate is paid, and we are thereby going to disrupt the Government service not only in this line but in all other lines of employment if we are going to fix the rates of temporary labor on any such basis as that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why should not laborers employed by the United States Government receive the prevailing local rate? Is there a good reason why they should not?

Mr. WALSH. Of course there is a good reason. If you follow the recommendations of the classification commission when it shall have reported you will find that you will be asked to pay more for Government work done under Government auspices than you will when it is done under private auspices. This is simply yielding to the demand of a few laborers gathered throughout this country, 176 in number, and it is an attempt to establish a policy that will be sought to be put into force in every class of Government service hereafter. The worth or value of the service performed for the Government can not be any greater in New Orleans and elsewhere than in Providence, even though they do not use the same class of labor.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CARSS. Does the gentleman object to the Government paying as good wages as private individuals?

Mr. WALSH. Not in most lines. In some I do, because you should take into consideration certain advantages which Government employment gives which private individuals do not enjoy.

Mr. CARSS. I think the language of this bill will cover the situation. I think it is all right.

Mr. WALSH. Now, I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, who is familiar with matters relating to the employment of labor, if he does not think that if we attempt to fix the rate of wage at New Orleans at $1 an hour, or $1.20, and the prevailing rate now at Galveston is only 85 cents an hour, immediately these men at Galveston, when they hear that the Government is paying a dollar an hour in New Orleans, will demand a dollar an hour at Galveston?

Mr. CARSS. I do not see any reason why they should, because the men in New Orleans are already getting a dollar an hour.

Mr. WALSH. But they are not. The Government is not paying that.

Mr. CARSS. A good many of these men are stevedores and longshoremen and are working for the Government only when they have not anything else to do, and the customs officials find that in order to get the work done they must pay the standard rate of wages.

Mr. WALSH. We will establish a policy whereby we will pay temporary laborers more than we will be paying permanent employees of the Government, some of them who will probably be supervising this very same work, because there is nothing here to stop this demand or keep it within reasonable limits, and if they know that in a certain locality they can receive the prevailing rate of wages there is nothing to prevent this little group of men from making demands for $2 an hour and saying that they will not work for less; and there will be nothing left for the Government to do but to employ them at that rate.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If there is no limit put on as to what can be paid per hour, is it not probable, in the light of our past experience, that the Government will become the medium through which they will bid against each other, and the Government will be the highest bidder and pay the maximum price, as it did during the war when the Government went out and bid up wages and increased the price?

Mr. WALSH. That had not occurred to me, but I think that would be so.

Mr. Chairman, I would be willing here and now to fix the highest rate of wage paid in any of these ports, and to say that the Government can pay that, because that is the standard we are going to pay. But to say they shall pay the prevailing rate—nobody knows what that rate is going to be, and we are offering thereby an inducement to these men to raise the prevailing rate and thus increase their compensation by indirection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield with pleasure to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to inquire, if the wages are fixed in this particular service for the Government, why not fix them in all the different employments that the Government is engaged in?

Mr. WALSH. That is just what I intended to convey in more clumsy language, I will say to the gentleman. If you start with this you might just as well go on all down the line.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It would appear that way. I notice another thing about this bill. I do not know but that it is perfectly proper for all the committees of the House to engage in labor legislation, but this is absolutely a labor provision. Still it has never been referred to the Committee on Labor, and it seems to me that a due consideration of the matter might properly have been had by that committee.

Mr. WALSH. It might very well have been.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 17 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, in view of the widespread opposition and the general demand for time to oppose this measure, I just want to take two or three minutes more.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] states that he intends to offer an amendment fixing the rate at not exceeding 75 cents per hour. That would make the rate of pay 5 cents less than they now get at New Orleans, 15 cents more than they get at Galveston, 25 cents more than they get at Norfolk, from 20 to 35 cents more than they get at Tampa, 25 cents more than they get at Providence, R. I., and probably a little less than what they now get at New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. It seems to me that if we fix the maximum, even though it becomes the minimum, it will be a more equitable adjustment of this measure, and I should sincerely trust that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] will accept the amendment to fix the rate at 75 cents per hour, because, as I say, there is only one of the ports the gentleman has mentioned in his report on the bill that now pays more than that, and that is only 5 cents more. They get 80 cents at New Orleans.

In the large ports like New York, Philadelphia, and Boston I think they will be able to get labor at that rate. There is no great scarcity. Now, we all know that the shipping operations of the Government were seriously interfered with here awhile ago by a strike, but as I understand it this particular legislation has no bearing upon that controversy, because this is simply for temporary laborers, and I want to repeat again that the result of this bill will be to encourage the demand for a higher rate of wages, more than they are now getting, and to keep increasing the rate and lifting it up and up, and it will permit the department to pay $2 an hour. If this little group of laborers come down some morning and find a ship that has got to get out in a hurry, they will say, "Oh, we will not work on this ship. The prevailing wages for this class of work now have gone up to $1.50 an hour, and the officials in charge will have to pay $1.50 an hour." I submit it is an extremely dangerous precedent and a bad policy for this Government, because there are certain advantages accruing from Government employment that do not accrue in private enterprise.

Mr. CARSS. The gentleman says that under certain circumstances he would be willing to pay these men the prevailing rates. Then he compares them with regularly employed Government employees. Now, gentlemen will understand that these men are itinerant workers. They work a few days at a time. They receive no bonus and no benefits such as are paid to other regularly employed Government servants. They expect to get the prevailing rate when they do work. I can not see any danger in this bill. I believe the Government should pay as great wages as anybody else pays, if not a little better.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is fine. Open up the Treasury.

Mr. CARSS. If you fix the rate at 75 cents an hour, if other employees get from 80 cents to $1 an hour, then you will have the same trouble you are having now.

Mr. WALSH. This money comes out of the Public Treasury. It is for only 176 men; but although it is confined to a small class of temporary laborers, you can by establishing this precedent and saying that this will be the policy of the Government set in motion forces that will tend to disrupt the entire Government service of employees, temporary and permanent. If these laborers are entitled to an increase, let us give them an increase. If they have been getting 35 cents an hour, let us say that we are willing to pay 75 cents an hour and that that is the standard, and if they will not take that and will not seek agreeable Government service the Government will get along as best it may. It will get along as it has been getting along during the last several months since they found that they could not pay the higher rates of wages which the comptroller ruled they could not, but which the officials had thought they could.

Now, I should like to propound a question to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY] as to his personal views and inclinations toward the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois fixing a maximum, which will probably become the minimum at 75 cents per hour.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would be perfectly willing to accept an amendment of that kind, except for this reason: I believe that if you fix a maximum it will immediately become the minimum, and I believe that if we do not fix a maximum in the bill at some ports around the country laborers can be employed at a rate far below 75 cents an hour. But as an illustration let me say to the gentleman that the men in the Customs Service in the various ports of entry all over the country receive very widely differing compensation for the same service. For instance, in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and New Orleans the salary of a customs official is more than double the amount paid by the Government for that same class of work in other ports of entry.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, there never has been any uniformity in the payment of either laborers or officials at these various customhouses, and what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is proposing now is a reversal of the former policy.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And his idea is to put labor on a uniform basis, and, as the gentleman anticipates, to bring about the payment of a minimum everywhere without any regard to the varying conditions at the numerous customhouses of the country?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I will say to the gentleman that in the various customhouses of the country the salaries paid range from $1,500 to $3,500 a year for men doing exactly the same class of work. If that be true, why should we fix the minimum in all the ports of entry for other classes of labor for the same kind of work?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the gentleman is now mixing up annual salaries with compensation for temporary labor. There is no analogy between the two. Certainly at a port where the collector of customs has three vessels a year he can not expect to get the same salary as the collector at a port where they have 300 vessels a year. That has nothing to do with this problem, but if you are going to fix the wages of temporary laborers according to what is paid in the various localities, why not fix the wages of permanent laborers who are on the pay roll in the same way? That is not done in the various departments. We fix a standard and say they shall receive so much, whether they are in San Francisco or Tampa or New York or on the Great Lakes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; gladly.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is perhaps hard for any man to explain just why this condition prevails throughout the country, but for the same class of labor on the Pacific coast to-day the wages are more than double what they are in the South.

Mr. MADDEN. Not the wages paid by the Government.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; paid by the Government and by individuals. I know that in the South the wages paid in the lumber woods are from $3 to $5 a day, and wages on the Pacific coast are from $5 to $10 a day for the same class of work. Unskilled laborers in great numbers are receiving from $9 to $10 a day on the Pacific coast, while the same kind of laborers receive less than $5 a day in the South.

Now, why that should exist I am not able to say, except that in different parts of the country different conditions prevail.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman referring to conditions in the lumber industry?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; because I am more familiar with that.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to ask a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether he knows a case in which the Government of the United States fixes two standards of compensation for men doing like work?

Mr. FORDNEY. Right here in the report it states that labor in New Orleans is 80 cents per hour up to 4 p. m. and $1.20 per hour thereafter, while in Tampa the prevailing rates are 40 cents per hour.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. FORDNEY. If that does not answer the gentleman's question, I do not know how to answer it.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield further to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish simply to ask the gentleman to maintain his equilibrium long enough to answer me this question: Does he know of any case where the Government of the United States, by any law passed by the Congress of the United States, has fixed varying compensation to be paid to men doing the same class of work?

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to answer that question?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan to answer it.

Mr. FORDNEY. The only case I can give right here is the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury, where the law fixes the wages at 31½ cents per hour all over the country that the Government will pay for this class of work. They thought they had the power to pay additional wages so long as it was collectible from the owner of the ship as wages for the same class of labor, as the wages varied at each port, from one port to another, 100 per cent or more for the same class of work.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to answer that question?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 37 minutes left.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut to answer it.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Illinois has asked if there is any place in the Government service where wages are fixed in this way?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; I did not ask that at all.

Mr. TILSON. Then, let the gentleman state his question again.

Mr. MADDEN. I asked the gentleman from Michigan if he could point to any place in the United States where the Government was authorized by law to pay two classes of compensation for one class of work?

Mr. TILSON. Very well, I will answer the gentleman's question. Take the arsenals of the country where there is required a great deal of both skilled labor and unskilled labor. It has been the universal practice under the law that the prevailing rate of wages in the vicinity for work of like character and quality shall govern the rate of wages. This is the rule at all the arsenals. A different wage is therefore paid for the same kind of work in different arsenals in the country. The same rule applies in case of the navy yards, as I am informed.

Mr. MADDEN. That is not fixed by law, but is paid under a lump sum.

Mr. TILSON. It is fixed in accordance with law and has been followed in practice for 50 years at least.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to ask a further question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if the cases to which he refers are not fixed by the wage board and paid out of lump-sum appropriations, where discretionary power is left to the head of the department, and that it is not fixed by law at all?

Mr. TILSON. I can not point the gentleman to the law because, for one reason, of its antiquity, for, as I said, it has been the practice for 50 years. I can not, however, believe that it has been going on for that length of time without there being some law for it. It would not have passed the auditor or controller during all the years if it were not in accordance with the law.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not yield to this supplemental discussion any longer, but I want to pay my respects to the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who cites as a parallel case—the lumber industry—in fixing the wages of labor in the Customs Service. Great heavens, if you fix that as a standard, the gentleman from Michigan will be working days, nights, and Sundays in an attempt to provide revenue for the Government to meet its obligations in the matter of pay roll of temporary and permanent laborers. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3315. An act to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6863) entitled "An act to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes"; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

COMPENSATION OF LABORERS—CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield me 10 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman from Iowa 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this bill has raised a great commotion over a very small matter, as I shall undertake to show, in every respect that has been discussed. It affects about 176 laborers; it does not cost the Government a cent, no matter which way we pay it, because the expense is all reimbursable.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the case with Government-owned ships?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think these men are used on Government-owned ships, and if they are, it is to so small an extent that that can be disregarded. The amount paid by the Government is insignificant. It is said that in no other case did the Government fix a different rate for labor in different localities. In one sense that is true, but in another it is not. The fact of the matter is, that the Government, with the approval of the law, and in accordance with the law, is, all over the country, paying different prices for exactly the same kind of work, and yet gentlemen stand up here and profess to be greatly alarmed because this bill will have that effect. They are paying different prices in the arsenal at Watervliet than they are at Rock Island. They are paying different prices at one navy yard from what they are at another. They are paying under the Chief of Engineers a different price for common labor in one harbor or river or port from what they are paying for common labor in another. That is going on and has been going on for years—ever since the foundation of the Government, so far as I know. Yet gentlemen express great fear that we are entering upon a dangerous plan, because we have adopted a rule in this bill that will permit that thing to be carried out.

I can not see where the danger is going to result. It has been going on and nobody has ever complained of it before. It is true there has been no express provision of law, and if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] should ask me where I would find such an express provision for it, I would have to tell him I did not know of any. But it has been done. It has been ratified by various auditors of the Treasury; it has been approved. But as the matter is being done now, with laborers in the Treasury Department, it can not be approved.

Mr. MADDEN. It has been done under lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Under lump-sum appropriations as a rule, and under general provisions, and I think in some cases with reference to river and harbor work for maintenance, it has been carried on in that manner.

Mr. MADDEN. But the only objection there is to this, if the gentleman will permit, is to make it a matter of law. It is not a matter of law now, and there is no objection to their doing it if it is not a matter of law. If it is left to the discretion of a department head to use a lump-sum appropriation, then without any special authority of law he has a right to fix the compensation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the other situation is the worse of the two. Under a lump-sum appropriation they are permitted to use the money to pay any wage they see fit. They are not limited to the going price, and in some cases I think they do exceed the going price of labor. In this bill we provide they shall not exceed it. How they can get the work done on these ships without paying the going price, I can not imagine. I can see from certain standpoints objections to this, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and some others think we ought to have a fixed maximum price. As soon as you do that it will become the minimum price and be paid everywhere, and you will get the work done where that is high enough to obtain the labor, and where it is not high enough you will not get the work done any better than you do now. That is the plain situation which will result if you undertake to fix a maximum price.

I will say, while on this little matter, that we spent a great deal of time in the committee, and some of us are not entirely satisfied with the situation that will result. I think myself it would have been better to have had a provision whereby the owners of the vessels, who have got to pay this in the long run, should furnish the laborers, and that the work should be done under the direction of the customs officials. But the Treasury does not want that done, as they think it will not work out well. I can not see the objections to it myself, and I think at the end of the year, maybe, we may be able to persuade them that a different method should be adopted, which I think will be preferable to the plan in this bill. But, at all events, they have not seen fit to accept it at this time.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think that the prevailing wages in any particular locality furnishes a very sure guide? Where that phrase is used, could not an administrative official, as a matter of fact, pay any rate of wages necessary to get the work done?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think they are likely to do so, although they might as they do under the lump-sum appropriations for these different classes of work. Yet I think there is some force in what the gentleman from New York states, but it was the best thing we seemed to be able to fix up to satisfy the Treasury, and we have made it apply only to the balance of this year. So the gentleman can see it was not entirely satisfactory to the committee. And yet all these other plans were heard and were rejected by the committee for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman please yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why was it limited to just this year if we are fixing the wage?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For this reason: We thought, in the first place, we might be able to work out a better plan. I think myself it would be much better to have the owners of the vessels, who have got to pay this labor anyway, to furnish the labor and let it be done under the direction of the customs officials. But the Treasury officials do not like that plan. And it was further thought that possibly at the end of this year this might not be necessary. At all events, we did not want to make this a permanent policy of the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume, from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying the report of the committee, that this work is very necessary to be done in order to protect the interests of the department. Otherwise it would not be requested.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; it is very necessary. They have to handle heavy merchandise at times in order to compute the duty.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It seems to me the situation is covered by these two sentences:

> It is absolutely impossible to secure labor at the present time for 31½ cents per hour, especially for short periods of time.

And the further statement:

> Unless relief is obtained through legislation it will be impossible to carry on the customs business at many of the ports.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that is correct. It is unquestionable if this work has got to be done you have got to pay enough so that the laborers will accept the wage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask for one more minute.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HERSEY. I want to ask the gentleman if this class of work, of unloading vessels, does not require experience and skill, and most strenuous labor on the part of the employees?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman himself is better informed on that than I am, and I would like him in my time to state his judgment briefly in reference to that.

Mr. HERSEY. It is my understanding that you can not pick a man from the street anywhere that can do that work and do it satisfactorily.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that is the case. I think they must be men of experience.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY].

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am quite familiar with the whole subject, but I will not go into details, because they have all been gone over and it is unnecessary to waste the time.

I wish to say that in the port of New York I have seen much of this condition, of great cargoes of material that were to be shipped to Canada or shipped up into eastern Pennsylvania, and so on, consisting of ore and various items, and a lot of laborers were necessary in order to load it. Alongside of the vessel, we will say, there are three scows, worth $15 to $20 a day, which were employed by the company to take away this stuff, and the ship's time was worth, perhaps, from $100 to $200 or $300 a day, and the whole business was tied up because you could not get labor. And the reason they could not get labor was because the laborers could get more by working for some stevedore on the next dock. So it was a ridiculous proposition.

Gentlemen talk about laborers going down to the docks. A gang of them will go down there every morning. Their labor is for sale, the same as any other product is for sale, and they sell it to the highest bidder, and if the Government does not pay what they want for it their ships can lay there and lose all this money. The time of the ships is lost and the time of the labor is lost, because the Government is not permitted to meet the competition.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEARY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the prevailing rate for labor of this kind in New York?

Mr. CLEARY. Well, I am not in the business now. Since coming to Congress I have dropped it, and therefore I am not familiar with it. But I do know this, that you have to pay the same that everybody else pays. We have barges. We used to get labor to work in repairing those barges at $3 a day. To-day we pay $9 a day. Why, if we did not pay it we could send the boats over to the dock and let them lie there and lose $20 a day by it because we did not pay $9 a day for labor.

It is foolish. You have got to do what the bill provides. You have got to meet the prevailing rate of wages, just as you have got to meet it in anything else if you want the work done. This labor has to be done in connection with appraisers' stores on public docks, with ships coming in loaded with stuff going to Canada and all over the country, and you can not handle it, because you are not allowed to pay the prevailing rate of wages. What a ridiculous position it is to put the Government and the people in and the business in.

The wisdom of the bill, too, is shown in the caution displayed in the provision making it expire on the 31st of December. That shows that the framers of this bill did not want to go into this any longer than was necessary, but they had to meet the present situation. Every sensible man knows that. You do not need to talk a lot of philosophy as to what should be done here and there. Here is a simple matter. You must not tie up your ships, you must not tie up your commerce and create demurrage on cars and ships and boats because the man in charge has not the power to pay the rate of wages necessary to get the men. You, on the other side of the dock, are working your ship, because you are paying the prevailing rate of wages. There is no demurrage there, because you are able to do it in a business way. But the poor Government is tied up because it can not meet the requirements. That is the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to this state of facts. To-day in the navy yards, about which so much has been said, and in many other Government activities—in the Postal Service, for example—certain lump-sum appropriations are set apart, out of which certain mechanics and laborers of certain classes are paid, and under these appropriations it is within the power of the head of the department to fix the hourly compensation for the men. It may be one rate of compensation to-day and quite another rate of compensation to-morrow. But I undertake to say that whatever the compensation is it is uniform for the same class of work.

Now, it may be higher than what is proposed in the amendment that I intend to offer or it may be lower. Take it in the case of the substitute letter carriers and clerks. Every one of them is required to pass a civil-service examination before he can enter, and is required to have an education before he can pass. Their compensation is now fixed by the hour under the law at 60 cents an hour. Nobody will undertake to deny that they are not as well qualified to earn 75 cents an hour, or a dollar an hour, as the men who are being legislated for in this bill. Nobody would undertake to say that the law should provide that the man in New York working as a substitute should get 80 cents an hour, while the man in Chicago working at the same class of employment should be paid 60 cents an hour.

That is what this bill does. While we may be able to do it, and while it might be very proper that we should differentiate where the discretion is left to the head of the department out of lump-sum appropriations, there can be no justification whatever for providing by law that we shall fix one rate of compensation here and another rate of compensation there for the same class of work. It has never been done. It ought not to be done. If you embark upon that policy, then you will have broken down the uniformity that has always prevailed in connection with Government employment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman said that we are fixing rates of wages by this bill. I would like to know if the bill fixes any particular price at any place?

Mr. MADDEN. No. This bill by its terms leaves the field wide open. My contention is that that is unwise. When we pass a law it ought to be specific and uniform and not wide open, without any knowledge on the part of any man living as to what the compensation is going to be for that work. I maintain that the gentleman from Michigan, with all his wisdom as chairman of the Committee on Labor, would not dare to report a bill like this with the hope of getting it passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Maybe that is the reason why it was not referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I maintain further that if we embark upon the policy provided in this bill we shall have broken down every vestige of policy heretofore existing in relation to uniform compensation for similar work.

I propose to offer an amendment making the maximum pay 80 cents an hour for these men in every port of the United States; not in one port, not in another, but in all ports; and I will undertake to say that the Government of the United States will be able to employ all the men it needs at that rate. These men are laborers. Six dollars and forty cents a day for an eight-hour day for a common laborer nobody can deny is fairly good compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-six minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the number of persons to be affected by the terms of this bill has been indicated at 176.

Mr. MADDEN. That has nothing to do with the case. It is the merits that count.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Some have suggested 160. Whether the number be greater or less is perhaps not so material as the conditions under which the payments are made.

What portion of this money will be paid out of the National Treasury? It is perhaps difficult to determine to-day with the degree of accuracy which normal conditions would readily suggest. For a long period of time prior to the war not more than 20 per cent of the amount involved in these payments would go out of the National Treasury. The remainder would be paid by the owners of the vessels as a reimbursable proposition.

Of course, under the practice and the law you would turn to the accounts and find that the entire amount was paid out of the Treasury, but the owners of the vessels would reimburse the total amount of the payment at a particular port for a particular service, and that money would be covered into the National Treasury, so that the net amount actually paid by the Government would be very small. It has been suggested that in most instances it would be unimportant.

But let it stand at 20 per cent as an estimate. With 176 persons to be paid out of this total fund, and perhaps not more than 20 to 25 per cent of that amount to go out of the National Treasury, you can readily see that no large amount of money is involved.

More than that, I am inclined to the opinion that you will pay out more from the actual revenues of the Treasury with a maximum of 75 cents per hour than you will under the operation of the wording of the bill as it stands. So, upon that basis, I would figure to pay the smaller amount, and for the period indicated, December 31, 1920, as the limit beyond which this provision can not go. Then we may be able to understand the normal conditions more clearly and find out just exactly what provision can be wisely and safely made as a permanent policy.

But, mark you, gentlemen, the Treasury Department insists upon the control of these men, because it believes that they should be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury through his subordinates. And why? If the owner of the vessel should make the selections, it would be a much easier matter for him to slip a number of men into the service who could cleverly practice fraud upon the customs. For that reason the department holds to the practice of making its own selections and paying the men. If the owner of the vessel employs the men, what right has the Treasury Department to pay anything out of the National Treasury? Why not let him pay the men outright and have no accounting beyond that point?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] a few moments ago emphasized quite strongly the idea of uniformity in the salaries for like service. I can turn to the records of the department for a period of five years preceding 1903 and show that many officials at customs ports that did practically nothing received salaries larger than those received by customs officials at ports which were collecting $50,000 to $500,000 of revenue a year. For that 5-year period there were more than 30 ports in the United States that were collecting less money than it cost to run them by from $40,000 to $50,000 a year. That is an illustration. I will not enlarge upon it. I simply emphasize again the fact that the department should select the men and hold them as Government employees for the temporary period during which they serve.

I believe that we will pay out less money up to the 31st of next December under the terms of the bill than we would under the amendment proposed. Therefore I stand for the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to all the speeches that have been made upon this bill, and I have wondered if some of the gentlemen who have spoken have ever been around the port districts of the large cities and have seen the laborers as they congregate at the docks. I represent, in part, the city of Boston, and in my district are the large docks that do business around the port of Boston, so that I know the labor situation pretty well.

It is all very well to stand here and say that these men are getting $6 and $8 a day. That is not so. Their earnings are regulated entirely by the amount of work that comes into the port, and some weeks they do not make many dollars. The greatest injury that has befallen the Government in its management of the vessels which it is operating has been the inability to compete with the private shipowners in the employment of men. It is impossible to get men to work for the Government for 35, 40, or 50 cents an hour when on the other side of the ship men are getting $1 or $1.50 an hour. They will tell you that the men stand around the docks, and that we are establishing a precedent that is going to be bad if we give this raise of pay. My contention is that you are obliged to meet conditions where they prevail. It is impossible to get men under such conditions, and unless we meet prevailing conditions we are putting the Government under a severe handicap. I believe that the Government should lead in the matter of wages. My observation of conditions is that if the Government is going to have workmen in this employment it should pay what is considered fair compensation by meeting the prevailing wage.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. This is emergency legislation, as I understand it?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. And I think we all concede that the work has got to be done. Now, in these unsettled times, what assurance is there that 75 cents an hour would secure men to do this work at any particular port in the United States?

Mr. TAGUE. There is no assurance, and it can not be done. You can not get men to work for 75 cents an hour and be satisfied with their employment when on the other side of the ship men are getting $1 or $1.50 an hour.

Mr. MADDEN. I deny that that condition exists.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. From the gentleman's knowledge of the situation in his own port, would it insure the work being done?

Mr. TAGUE. That is the trouble now. The ships of the Government are neglected and the private ships are being loaded and unloaded, and the delay of Government ships results in great loss not only on account of the delay of the freight but on account of the demurrage which must be paid by ships as they lie in port. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says that the wages in the Post Office Department are regulated by law, and that is true. As one illustration of that standardization of wages I want to bring to the minds of Members the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH], who told us that it was impossible to get men in Texas to handle the mails because the prevailing rate of wages is so far in excess of that paid by the Government. The same condition prevails in the city of Akron, Ohio, where it has been found to be impossible to get men to handle mails, and the Post Office Department have been sending all over the country asking men to come to Akron and handle the mails at 40 or 60 cents an hour, and unable to get men to do the work. These are the conditions that we are facing, and are the conditions that we must meet, no matter what criticism may come. How are we going to establish any precedent that is going to injure the Government in any way, shape, or manner by doing what is absolutely necessary to do in order to get the business of the Government done? I trust this bill will pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would be perfectly willing to accept the limitation suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], but I believe it would be bad law. I believe it would fix the minimum immediately for the Government to pay. Men engage in employment at such wages as they are satisfied with and willing to take, and if this Government can employ men in Tampa, Fla., at 40 or 50 cents an hour and can not employ men in New Orleans for less than 80 cents an hour, the Government ought to be permitted to pay such wages as are going in the port where they employ that labor. I believe if you fix the wages at 75 cents an hour as a maximum for the Government to pay, then you will embarrass both the Government and the private owner in the ports where they have been employing labor for less than 75 cents an hour.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is it not a fact also that in different ports different wages are paid?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And that you can secure this labor at a lower figure at one port than you may possibly be compelled to pay at another port?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is my argument exactly.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts should pass, you would be compelled to pay the maximum at all the ports?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. The remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] might be misconstrued, and I may have misunderstood him when he asked me if the wages I spoke of now paid in the South and on the Pacific coast were in the lumber industry. The remark may have indicated that the lumber business is an insignificant and unimportant industry. Let me say to the gentleman that there are employed in the sawmills of the United States to-day 800,000 men, and more than 800,000 men are employed in the lumber camps getting out logs for those sawmills. These people support a population of 8,000,000 people. Eight per cent of our population is no insignificant portion of the laborers in this country who are employed, and whose wives and children depend upon them for their bread and butter.

Wages do vary all over the land, not only in the lumber industry, but in every other industry located in various parts of the country. In the South, generally, the wages are lower than are paid for the same class of work on the Pacific coast and the Northwestern States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Something was said about temporary employees. Can the gentleman state how many people are engaged in unloading these vessels?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; the Secretary of the Treasury says on an average about 176 all over the country employed by the Government. This law will affect 176 men.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are they engaged in work all the time?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; they are only engaged such portions of the time as the Government needs them to unload ships.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What does the Government have on those ships?

Mr. FORDNEY. Every conceivable kind of a product in the world, but that which comes largely from the South is sugar from Cuba and southern markets. We have a merchant marine to-day carrying goods from every port in the world except in the Orient—every port on the Atlantic and South America.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One hundred and seventy-six men could not unload $2,000,000 worth of merchandise.

Mr. FORDNEY. An average of 176 men per day will unload a great deal of freight, let me say to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A short time ago I noticed in the press that there was a cargo of sugar in New Orleans that could not be unloaded and had to be taken to Galveston.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; because they could not find laborers at 31¼ cents an hour.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They would not pay the going wages?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; they could not; and they had to transfer her to another port in order to find labor to unload her. Now, gentlemen, I do not wish to discuss this matter any further, and I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to what the gentleman from Michigan stated with reference to the proposed amendment by the gentleman from Illinois. I understand his objection to it is that it would fix not only a maximum but it would fix a minimum. The bill as it is drawn fixes a minimum but does not fix any maximum. If it is $1 an hour now at Tampa, Fla., next week it may be $1.50 an hour, because it is $1.50 an hour at New Orleans. There is no maximum to it, no limit to which these men may go in their demands.

My colleague from Massachusetts, the gentleman from the hub of the universe, states that on the docks in Boston the laborers congregate and wait for employment. This is an emergency measure and there is no collective service or regulation involved, and men do not have to work if they do not want to. My opposition to it is that it established a precedent for these multiple standards for Government employment. I have expressed my opposition to it in as many ways as I am capable of in my limited control of the English language, and I think perhaps I had better yield and permit the reading of the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything at this time, and would not except for the fact that the gentleman from Michigan some time ago asked unanimous consent to consider the bill, and I objected to it as it was then framed. The amendment that the gentleman from Michigan has proposed making it temporary I think meets the situation as far as we can. I was impressed with the idea at that time that we should fix a maximum, but I think any man ought to be frank when he finds himself in error, and I think on reflection that I am in error. I think if we fix a maximum it would become a minimum at every port, and I think it would be a matter of economy to take the language we have in the bill and permit the payment of the prevailing price and let the collector do the best he can to see that the Government does not have to pay an unreasonable wage. It is a business proposition and we have to meet it, and it looks like the gentleman from Michigan has framed an amendment and safeguarded the Treasury as best he can and at the same time do justice.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman believe that it is safeguarding the Treasury of the United States when you are encouraging men to raise the standard of wages, and where a man may be getting $1 now to encourage him to demand $2 tomorrow?

Mr. WINGO. No; and if I had time I would discuss that question, which is different from the one that I was discussing. We have got to meet the situation that exists. The situation is this, that with the present authorized rate he can not get any labor at all. You have got to have them, and the practical way to do it is to say to the administrative officer, "Go out and pay what you find necessary," because if we fix a maximum it will immediately become a minimum. That is what I am afraid of. I share the fears of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I felt that way the other day, but on reflection I think it is the best way to meet a bad situation that has to be met.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would not ask for this time if it were not that the gentlemen seem to have some extra time at their disposal. I already have expressed my opinion of the bill, and it is well known from what I have said that I am in favor of it as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has presented it to the House from the Committee on Ways and Means. I support it because I think in private business a person who is engaged in unloading vessels all over the United States would not want a fixed or upset price that he should pay in every port in the United States. That would not be a business proposition. If he employed men in the different ports he would have to pay the scale of wages paid in each particular port or he would not get the men.

In the moment or two remaining I wish to congratulate the Committee on Ways and Means upon bringing in a bill that is purely and absolutely an unalloyed labor measure. I may expect some time when a bill is filed for consideration of the duty on some article that is bothering and perplexing the Ways and Means Committee that it will be referred to the great Committee on Labor in the House, and in that way reciprocate this favor which the Committee on Ways and Means has done for them.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. But my time is very limited and please make it brief.

Mr. GARD. What sort of alloy did the gentleman say was contained in this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is a proposition a little hard to analyze at this time. I was just considering a jurisdictional question. Down before the Labor Committee there are three bills now for old-age pensions, and when they get through with the intricate analysis of these bills, and they are found to be a proper subject of jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee, we might transfer some of these pension bills to that great committee, which seems to have so much time for business properly relating to other committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this bill received the unanimous report of the committee, both Democratic and Republican. I want to trust the Democrats once in a while, and this is one thing that I want to trust them in. They need the employment now to load and unload the food supplies coming to and going from this country. They say that they can not get laborers unless we give them this authority. I want to give it to them. I want to trust them, and I believe we can trust them once in a while. There is no politics in this measure. I yield five minutes now to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN].

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, it has been the practice of the department to fix the compensation of labor which is employed for short periods of time at such rates per hour as was found to be prevailing in the different ports. That has been the custom heretofore. However, under a decision of the comptroller of November 19, 1919, and one of December 2, 1919, it was ruled that such practice is contrary to the law which limits the pay of customs laborers. It has been the practice in the past to liberally construe this statute and the Government has been able to secure laborers only by so doing. To fix a maximum rate would be unwise. If it was too high, it would be unwise, and if it was too low, it would be equally unjust. The only fair way to do it is to pay the rate that prevails under the conditions where labor is secured. Everyone who is familiar with the labor market knows that the prices vary in every port in the United States and every city in the United States. Everyone employing labor, every contractor, knows that they have to pay different rates for labor in different cities and in different ports. If the Government is the employer of labor, then it must pay the local rates wherever it may find itself in need of labor. If we were to fix the rate at $6 a day to-day as being fair, do we know that that would be fair to-morrow, with the uncertain conditions that exist in the United States? It may not be at all fair or just to-morrow; it might be entirely too high or it might be so low that the labor could not be secured. If $6 a day were fixed and were too high to-morrow, what would be the result? Everyone would want to be employed by the Federal Government, and a political situation would soon develop where the Congressman, for instance, might be asked to use his influence to see that the fortunate employee be secure as to his position. If it were too small, it would be unjust to ask labor to work for the Government for less than the going local rates, and in addition the Federal Government would be handicapped in not being able to secure good and efficient workmen. The only way we can do is to pay the prevailing rate. If the Government is in the market for labor, it must do this. We would think very little of a contractor's ability who would say, "I am going to pay the same rate to all my laborers wherever I may secure a contract in any part of the United States during this year." In order to secure the desired number of men to work for him he finds himself in the position where he is forced to pay the rate that prevails in the particular locality where his contract work is located, and so it has been and will continue to be the experience of our Government.

I think this bill reported out by the committee is the only way in which we can meet this situation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to fix the compensation of laborers in the Customs Service as he may think advisable, at a rate not exceeding the local rates prevailing in the various ports and districts for the same classes of labor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that in line 4, after the word "of," the word "temporary" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FORDNEY: Page 1, line 4, after the word "of," insert the word "temporary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, at the end of the word "labor," line 7, on page 1, to add a proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 1, line 7, after the word "labor," insert: "Provided, That it shall not exceed in any event 80 cents per hour."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, in order to make this unanimous, we will accept that amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know whether we want to do that or not.

Mr. CARSS. You have provided in any case that it shall not exceed 80 cents an hour. In case men work overtime, no provision is made.

Mr. MADDEN. We can not provide for overtime in this bill.

Mr. CARSS. They have to work overtime, and if you do not provide for it, you should provide for it. But you limit the men to 80 cents an hour. I oppose the amendment on that ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. CARSS demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall expire December 31, 1920.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby suspended while this act remains in force.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to return to the section that has just been amended—section 1.

Mr. WALSH. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been heard. The Chair thinks it is too late, anyway, to submit the request. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FESS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11309) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the Customs Service, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LADING OR UNLADING OF VESSELS AT NIGHT.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I call up the bill S. 3418.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, as this is on the Union Calendar, the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3418, with Mr. FESS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee, S. 3418, has to do with the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes. It is an amendment of the original act of February 13, 1911. There has been ever since that act went into effect and I think previously to that for the inspectors of customs at customhouses and inspectors of vessels, who have to do with the unlading, a uniform day of 10 hours. This, as you know, is two hours longer than the accepted working day at the present time, and there can be no good reason why the same length of day's work should not be accorded to the men having to do with the customs work as in any other line of governmental employment. Therefore this amendment will reduce the hours of labor from 10 to 8. It also puts into effect as law the method of payment for overtime, rather than having that payment for overtime regulated by customs regulations. It establishes as law, in other words, the system for payment for overtime. It also permits all men who are ordered to report for lading or unlading of vessels to be paid, when ordered to report, for overtime. It seems that through a regulation of the customs department if these inspectors have been ordered to appear for work and for any reason a vessel was not there for them to go to work on they did not receive pay for that time. That seems entirely unfair. It is not the fault of the inspectors that the vessels are not there. It is not a fault of theirs that they are not working rather than waiting to work. Therefore there is this further provision whereby payment will be made to the men if ordered to report for overtime work.

The bill does one other thing. It seems there has been a distinction between payment to men who were employed in unlading cargoes on vessels and those unlading or examining baggage of passengers. There can be no good excuse for that condition other than the fact that no provision of law covered the point, and through a Treasury decision at some time these men who are liable for overtime work in unlading vessels consisting of passengers' baggage and examination of that baggage receive no pay for that work, whereas their colleagues in the same line of work happening to be employed on the freight of the same boat would be paid. I might add that phrases appear in the bill showing that this payment is made by the steamship company reimbursing the Government for the amount paid. The pay of these inspectors has been very low. The rates of pay are $4, $5, and $6 per day for a 10-hour day. I think the members of the committee will agree with me that while we retain that same rate of pay we ought to be willing to pay these men for overtime on a basis of an 8-hour day rather than on the basis of a 10-hour day.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. I agree with the gentleman's viewpoint, but I wanted to ask for information as to why the necessity of having these men work overtime? Is there not enough work to justify the employment of other men?

Mr. TREADWAY. If a vessel arrives in port at sunset, naturally the people on board do not want to remain there overnight if they can avoid it.

Mr. BEE. I understand.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, again, if it is a matter of unloading freight, very frequently it is of a perishable character, as the gentleman from Texas well knows, and therefore it is important that the men should proceed to unload as rapidly as possible.

Mr. BEE. I wanted to ask if there was enough of this to justify the employment of additional men, instead of the employment of these men overtime?

Mr. TREADWAY. I should judge that there are ample men for the service, for if additional men were employed there would be the rush hours just the same. If two boats, for instance, are being unloaded at one of our minor ports at the same time, it can be seen that the need for overtime work will be just as likely to occur as though there were additional men for a few particular hours; so that it is better not to raise the number of employees, but pay a living wage to the men who for many years have given faithful service in this line of work.

Mr. BEE. Under existing law, they are not permitted to work over eight hours, as I understand it. That is, an eight-hour day is fixed?

Mr. TREADWAY. No, sir. That is what we are endeavoring to change in this act. The present law provides for a 10-hour day, and here we fix it at 8 hours, with a provision for overtime beyond that.

Mr. BEE. So as to conform to the standard fixed elsewhere in the country?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. There is no reason why men in the Customs Service should not be as much entitled to an eight-hour day as those in any other line of governmental employment.

Now, this bill, Mr. Chairman, has the support of the Treasury Department, as evidenced by their approval of this draft and some previous drafts, which were really more beneficial to the men than the bill now before us. This is practically the bill as it passed the Senate.

The committee desires to offer one amendment. On line 9, page 2, we have inserted the word "major." In other words, as the bill reads, the overtime might be paid if a man only reported for a very few minutes at a time, whereas if the word "major" were inserted, it would then be necessary, on the basis of two hours' overtime, for the man to be employed at least one hour. I shall take the liberty of changing the phraseology of that amendment in a very slight degree, meaning just the same as the word "major." From the information I gather there is likelihood that the word "major" would cause confusion and require no payment until the men had actually worked two hours, so that instead of the word "major," it is suggested that after the words "fraction thereof" there should be inserted the words "at least one hour," which is practically the same.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. I understood that the customs inspectors were very much underpaid.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks there would be sufficient overtime work to give these men adequate compensation under the provision for overtime in this bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will state to the gentleman that the department, as I am informed, is taking up the rescheduling of all customs employees, and pending that official report to the Secretary of the Treasury, or whoever may be making the investigation, this method is agreeable both to the department and to the men; and I might add, there is sure to be much more overtime on the basis of 8 hours than if the men were working 10 hours.

Mr. HUSTED. There is, then, a reasonable prospect that by some future legislation the compensation of these men will be increased?

Mr. TREADWAY. We are informed by the Chief of the Customs Division that the entire schedule for the payment of the customs employees is under consideration for revision.

Mr. HUSTED. With a view to increasing it?

Mr. TREADWAY. With a view to increasing it.

There has been submitted to a Member of the other branch, who was particularly interested in this bill, an opinion from the collector of the port of New York, where of course the larger number of these men are employed. I wish to read, Mr. Chairman, just a short extract from that letter. I read:

On behalf of the underpaid customs employees of this port I want to express grateful appreciation of your successful efforts in putting through the Senate Senate bill 3418, which provides, among other things, for compensation for the customs inspectors employed on baggage duty for their services at night and on holidays. This will place them on an equal footing with inspectors who are employed on cargo and who now receive from the steamship companies compensation for night work.

Then the collector goes on to say that fundamentally he does not believe in the Government being reimbursed for Government work by steamship companies, but that has not directly to do with this case. He says further:

I am sure if you knew as definitely as I know the distressing conditions among the Government's employees in this port, you would realize more fully perhaps why we are grateful to you for this effort in our behalf. When you realize that with the exception of a bonus of $240 per annum to all Federal employees receiving up to and including $2,500, these men are getting practically the same scale of wages given them a quarter of a century ago, you will understand, I am sure, why I have profound admiration for their patience and their patriotism in sticking to their jobs.

As a matter of fact, we are rapidly losing our most efficient men. Resignations are coming to me daily, and the force is now materially reduced beyond where it was prior to the war. The merchants' association and other civic organizations in New York have interested themselves in the situation, and will soon make an appeal to Congress to take some steps in the direction of safeguarding the interests of importers and exporters in this port by way of strengthening the customs machinery here.

At all angles our Federal employees see a most prodigal display of unprecedented wealth. Meanwhile they are harassed with the consciousness that in many instances at home their children are suffering for the want of proper food and clothing. They know that ours is the richest Government in the history of the world, and they are wondering why they, the servants of this most wealthy Government, must go on in poverty.

The letter is signed by Byron R. Newton, collector. I think that is very strong evidence in behalf of the legislation called for by this bill from a man of experience in the very line of coming in contact with these men who are working for a very meager stipend, needing to be men of good appearance, gentlemen in their conduct toward the passengers with whom they come in contact, and recognizing that the service must become impaired unless a means can be found, as is furnished by this bill, to increase the pay of the men.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BENSON. I wanted to ask a question about this amendment that the gentleman proposes to offer. Would not the effect of that amendment which the gentleman proposes be that the men would have to work nearly nine hours a day?

Mr. TREADWAY. It would.

Mr. BENSON. Well, in view of the tremendous cost of unloading a boat and the relative small cost of carrying a few extra men on half pay, would it not be better to leave it as the Senate fixed it in the first place?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not think so. There has always been some discrepancy in that question of how the overtime is to be paid. I understand the department does not now pay the man who stays one minute overtime. He must stay at least 31 minutes overtime. Therefore, if you are putting this matter of pay into law rather than into a Treasury regulation, it seems to our committee that unless you specify a certain definite length of time; if a man stayed one minute overtime, he would be entitled to half a day's pay. That is considered unfair by the steamship companies whom we must in a sense stand next to in getting up the form of regulation under which their boats should be handled at ports. But I might say again, as I did in answer to the gentleman from Texas, that the phrase, changed as I submitted it rather than in the committee print, will be entirely acceptable to the men, so that we are legislating for them, and if the legislation is acceptable to them I think it is proper that the phraseology should remain.

I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURROUGHS). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is this the matter the gentleman spoke of this morning?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GARD. There seemed to be some desire that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] should be present.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say that the Speaker felt that it would be better to get my time on one of these bills instead of asking unanimous consent that perhaps might not be granted.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think it would be much better to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] here if he intends to make a reply to him?

Mr. DALLINGER. This is a reply to Mr. GRIFFIN. He has already had his say.

Mr. GARD. Mr. GRIFFIN's remarks were inserted in the RECORD without being spoken on the floor?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes; and there was no chance to answer them at the time.

Mr. GARD. I do not want to object to the gentleman proceeding, but I really think Mr. GRIFFIN should be here.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that I would be glad to yield to some other gentleman while Mr. GRIFFIN is being notified that my colleague is about to speak. Will that be agreeable to the gentleman?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. If that is agreeable, I will withdraw the time allotted to my colleague [Mr. DALLINGER] temporarily and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I intend to offer the following amendment, and I might as well discuss it now. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUPRÉ: Page 3, line 10, strike out the quotation marks, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That in those ports where customary working hours are other than those hereinabove mentioned the collector of customs is vested with authority to regulate the hours of customs employees so as to agree with prevailing working hours in said ports, but nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to affect or alter the length of a working day for customs employees or the overtime pay herein fixed."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, as those who have caught the purport of the amendment will discover, no hostility to the bill is intended by it. On the contrary, I am heartily in favor of the measure, both in its fixing an eight-hour day and in its overtime provisions. The amendment is offered simply to meet the situation that exists in my home city of New Orleans and possibly in other ports of the country. The bill as drawn provides for overtime pay between the hours of 5 o'clock postmeridian and 8 o'clock antemeridian, proceeding on the theory that working hours begin in all ports at 8 o'clock in the morning and end at 5, with an hour for lunch. It happens that in the city of New Orleans conditions are different, as was set forth in a telegram received by me from the agent of the New Orleans Steamship Association, which will explain exactly what the situation is there. I will ask the Clerk to read the telegram.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 27, 1920.

Hon. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We understand that Senate bill 3418 passed the Senate December 16, has been reported favorably, and this bill fixes rate of overtime compensation and hours in reference to customhouse officers and employees, etc. The regular day hours of longshoremen at New Orleans are from 7 in the morning to 4 in the afternoon, with meal hour from 12 to 1, while bill in question provides hours of customs employees from 8 in the morning to 5 in the afternoon, so that there will result much confusion and unnecessary expense. Therefore the New Orleans Steamship Association request that you will use your influence toward having inserted in this bill a clause providing that in those ports or in those industries where the customary hours are from 7 in the morning to 4 in the afternoon authority be vested in the collector of customs to regulate the hours of customs employees to agree with prevailing customary hours in those ports or industries. We would appreciate your giving this matter your earnest attention.

S. T. DEMILT.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In accordance with that request and in accordance with the condition that exists in New Orleans, I have offered the amendment, which is entirely permissive. It leaves with the collector of customs the authority to regulate the hours of customs employees so as to agree with the prevailing working hours in those ports; but I have safeguarded the eight-hour day which this bill provides for, and I have safeguarded the provision for overtime by adding the words—

But nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to affect or alter the length of a working day for customs employees or the overtime pay herein fixed.

I have submitted that amendment to the two majority members of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee who considered the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], and they think the amendment is entirely unobjectionable, saying that the conditions referred to had not been drawn to the attention of the committee.

Gentlemen here will realize what would happen if longshoremen, who have a way of their own about many things, decided to go to work at 7 o'clock and work until 4, and under the law the customhouse employees, who should work concomitantly with the longshoremen, could not get any overtime pay until between the hours of 5 p. m. and 8 the next morning. There would be a hiatus between 4 o'clock when the longshoremen stopped work and 5 o'clock when the customhouse employees would begin to get their overtime, and naturally the latter would not want to work in the interim. The result would be very unfortunate, and this merely allows the collector of customs to say that those two bodies of men, both of whom are essential to unloading and loading the ship, may be allowed to work at the same time. It is not mandatory in any way, but merely discretionary with the collector. A similar telegram has been received by my colleague Mr. O'CONNOR, of Louisiana, who is here in the Chamber, and who shares with me the views expressed by me both as to this bill and to the amendment proposed. I send to the Clerk's desk a telegram from the United States Customs Inspectors' Association at New Orleans, which has just this moment been handed to me, and which I will ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 28, 1920.

Hon. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ and
Hon. JAMES O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives, Washington:

House bill 10532 will come to a vote within next two days. Stop. Will appreciate your further assistance so badly needed at this time.

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS INSPECTORS' ASSOCIATION,
PORT OF NEW ORLEANS,
By AUGUSTUS B. HARRIS, Chairman Legislative Committee.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will say that the bill referred to in that telegram is a bill that was introduced in the House, and is similar in all respects to Senate 3418, which we are now considering.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BENSON].

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Chairman, the purport of the bill has been called to my attention by a number of men working in Baltimore. I happen to be familiar with the work these men are doing, and this bill meets a much-needed reform. At one time these men were allowed to collect extra pay from the shipper, but now under some regulation that is prevented.

They are really the most underpaid for men of their ability and fidelity of any men in the Government service. There is only one objection in spite of the fact that the men seem to be satisfied with it. I think the one hour extra time, practically nine hours a day, should be changed to half an hour, as the shippers are willing to pay for the extra time, because it facilitates the loading and unloading of the vessel, and the shippers can get their ships that much sooner. I think an amendment might be made to reduce it to half an hour, which was the old practice, and allow them to be paid overtime above the half hour.

The shippers are anxious to pay them, and it is a small matter to the shippers but a big thing to the men. I trust the chairman will see his way clear to offer an amendment such as I suggest.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE].

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, in New York City we have a great many of these men employed in the Customs Service, and during the war an attempt was made to get them to leave the service. You can understand that men familiar with the shipping business during the war could receive much larger remuneration outside of the service than inside; and yet, notwithstanding the temptation, the greater portion of the customs employees and inspectors stayed and maintained their relationship with the Government.

I know many men, working there nights and Sundays and then having to report early Monday morning, stayed there and performed their duties notwithstanding these tempting offers from outside.

Yesterday something was said by a gentleman in the House that it seemed strange, in view of the complaints as to the low salaries of employees, that they should want to hang on to the Federal pay roll. As a matter of fact, I always give advice to young men and women who seek service on the Federal pay roll not to do it. The best thing they can do is to seek employment outside; but once they get attached to the Federal service it then becomes a question, after leaving that service, where they will get similar employment. I believe the Federal Government is not helped by suggestions that young men and women should leave its service, but we should attempt to give them adequate compensation for the services they render to the Government.

In our own city of New York I know that the letter carriers and postal clerks and other Government employees are receiving much less than the wages paid to unskilled labor. The temptation for men and women in the Federal employ to quit the service is much greater than most people realize, and I am certain that Members of Congress do not desire to encourage them to do that, but desire rather to hold efficient employees by adequate compensation. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he is going to discuss this bill.

Mr. DALLINGER. No.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] if he intends to reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes; I would like very much to reply.

Mr. WALSH. I doubt, Mr. Chairman, the propriety of jumping in a controversy like this on Calendar Wednesday.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts intend to proceed out of order?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is a deferred situation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish?

Mr. DALLINGER. I have been yielded 15 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman couple with that unanimous consent for me to reply for not more than 10 minutes?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is hardly in order. I control the time.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but the gentleman can not yield the time to gentlemen to speak out of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] proceeding out of order?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I doubt whether we should stop here on Calendar Wednesday and jump in a controversy which would not be in order under the rule. The gentleman from New York says that he wants 10 minutes to reply, and I imagine that it would be expected that my colleague [Mr. DALLINGER] might want five minutes more in surrebuttal. I do not like to object, but if the gentleman from New York is going to ask for this time I think I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time is under the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from New York can not get the floor without the gentleman from Massachusetts yields.

Mr. WALSH. No; but the gentleman from New York would ask unanimous consent to proceed, and it would not be very gracious to refuse after the gentleman from Massachusetts had proceeded.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the course of his remarks, to discuss the situation in the New York Legislature?

Mr. DALLINGER. It is not.

Mr. WALSH. What is it the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to discuss?

Mr. DALLINGER. It is a reply to an extension of remarks placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], to which I had no opportunity to reply, nor did anyone else. Those remarks were placed in the RECORD on January 10.

Mr. WALSH. I do not object.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it not possible to have 10 minutes assigned to me by the gentleman who has charge of the time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he can obtain the floor by taking the other hour in this debate if he is opposed to this bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I could obtain the floor to discuss this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will announce his opposition to the bill, he can control the hour in his own right.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But I might not be permitted, under those circumstances, to proceed out of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARD. How much more time is there remaining of the hour which the gentleman from Massachusetts controls?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-six minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, could the gentleman from New York get along with eight minutes?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I agree to yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that he may proceed out of order?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the extension of remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] on the Berger resolution, to be found in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 10, which in my opinion constitutes a reflection upon the members of the special committee which reported the original resolution of exclusion and upon every Member of the House who voted for the same.

I am confident that if the gentleman had been here on November 10, 1919, when the whole matter was discussed at length, and if he had read the Constitution of the United States, which he took a solemn oath to support, he would not have taken the indefensible position which he has.

He says in his opening statement that "it is not becoming to this House, said to be the greatest deliberative body in the world, to deny to any man, whatever his opinions, his day in court. It is unfair to a large constituency of American voters in one of the sovereign States to say offhand, without deliberation, that their constitutional right of representation in the American Congress shall be denied simply because the individual of their choice is not personally acceptable to the present membership of this body." He then goes on to say that such a course would "establish a vicious and dangerous precedent." Further on he makes the statement that "this precipitancy smacks too much of lynch law." Since I can not believe that the gentleman from New York would intentionally misstate the facts, I am forced to the conclusion that he made the statements referred to simply because he was entirely ignorant of the precedents of the House and of the facts in this particular case.

At the opening of the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, on May 19, 1919, objection was made to the swearing in of Victor L. Berger, a Representative elect from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, on the ground that he was at that time under conviction and sentence for the violation of a law of the United States, involving disloyalty to the country during the war, and a resolution was offered by me, which was unanimously adopted by the House, referring the whole matter of his eligibility to membership to a special committee of nine Members appointed by the Speaker. The committee was appointed on May 21, 1919, and I had the honor to be named as chairman of the same.

Two courses were open to the committee. We could have reported to the House the next day after our appointment, simply stating the record of the conviction and sentence, and recommending Mr. Berger's exclusion as an unfit man for membership in the House until such time as he should be acquitted of the crime for which he had been convicted. Such a course, in our opinion, would have been not only unfair to Mr. Berger, who contended that he did not have a fair trial in the United States district court at Chicago, but would also have been an unjustifiable surrender by the House of the exclusive power given to it by the Constitution of the United States to be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members.

In the Tennessee contested-election case of Patterson against Carmack, in the Fifty-fifth Congress, the majority of the Committee on Elections in its report well says:

> But in "judging of the elections, returns, and qualifications" of its own Members, under the Constitution, this House exercises judicial power and is a court of competent and exclusive jurisdiction. In passing upon these returns and elections, even if no Federal statute is in existence regulating the elections of its Members, it interprets and construes the State election laws which, for the purposes of such election, are to be regarded as having the quality of Federal legislation, and the opinions of State judges are only to be adopted so far as they commend themselves by the intrinsic force of their reasoning; and where such decisions are in conflict with its own determination the precedents established by Congress are the expression of the law and must control that court with the same force and effect that its own prior deliberate rulings guide and control any other court. (Hinds' Precedents, vol. 2, p. 661.)

Moreover, as a matter of precedent, the House has always insisted upon this right. During and after the Civil War it repeatedly excluded Members elect for disloyalty without any action of the courts having been taken. In the Utah cases of Cannon and Roberts it excluded Members for violation of the law against polygamy, although no court proceedings had ever been instituted, and in the Whittemore case it excluded a Member elect for selling his appointments to West Point and Annapolis on the ground that it was a violation of the Federal statute against bribery. In the present case the fact that Mr. Berger, after a long trial, had been convicted for a violation of a law of the United States by a Federal jury at Chicago and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment by a Federal judge, simply made the prima facie evidence against him very much stronger than in any of the preceding cases in the history of Congress.

The other course open to the committee and the one which was followed was to examine into all the facts bearing upon the conduct of Victor L. Berger during the war with Germany, disregarding entirely the fact of his conviction by a United States court. In order, however, to obviate the necessity of summoning all the witnesses who testified at the trial at Chicago, both for the Government and for the defendant, which would have necessitated a very large expense to both sides, the committee decided to consider all the evidence introduced at the Chicago trial as before the committee, just as if all the witnesses had appeared before our committee and had been examined and cross-examined. We then permitted Mr. Berger to put in any additional evidence which he desired and to make any statement or explanation in regard to his conduct. The hearings before the committee commenced on June 11, 1919, and the case was not concluded until September 15, 1919. After long and careful deliberation the committee submitted its report to the House on October 24, 1919, and on November 10, 1919, after a thorough discussion, in which Mr. Berger himself was, by unanimous consent, given all the time he asked for to speak in his own behalf, and actually occupied three times as much time as the chairman of the committee, the House, by a vote of 311 to 1, followed the recommendation of the committee and adopted a resolution excluding him from membership.

At a special election on December 22, 1919, a majority of the voters of the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin saw fit to give a majority of their votes to a man who had been found by this same Congress to be disqualified to hold the office under the Constitution, to fill a vacancy caused by his own ineligibility. There had been no change whatever in the status of the case. Victor L. Berger was just as much disqualified on January 10, 1920, as he was on November 10, 1919, and the resolution which I offered setting forth the facts and again excluding him from membership was adopted by the House by a vote of 330 to 6.

Under these circumstances, to state that Victor L. Berger has not had his "day in court," and that "the House of Representatives has acted without deliberation," and that "their action smacks too much of lynch law," is so far from the truth as to be positively ridiculous.

No man ever had a fairer hearing by a legislative body than Victor L. Berger. He was permitted to put in any evidence that he saw fit and to make any statement to the committee and to the House regardless of the rules of legal evidence. If the committee had found that he had not had a fair trial at Chicago and that he did not violate any law and that he had been a loyal citizen during the war, the committee would have reported to the House of Representatives that he was entitled to his seat. As a matter of fact, however, the committee found that he did violate the espionage act. It also found that, disregarding entirely the passage of the espionage act, both before and after the act was passed, Victor L. Berger was the prime mover and leader of an organized conspiracy to hinder, embarrass, and obstruct the Government of the United States in carrying on its military operations and to prevent, if possible, the United States from winning the war with Germany. The committee found that from the beginning of the war and down to the time of his indictment by the Federal grand jury, Victor L. Berger did give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States, and this finding was approved by the House of Representatives on November 10, 1919, by a vote of 311 to 1. Under the Constitution the House is the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members, and the fact being found that Victor L. Berger did give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States, he is as ineligible to membership in the House of Representatives as if he were still an Austrian subject, and will remain ineligible until such time as both Houses of Congress shall see fit by a two-thirds vote to remove his disability.

The same state of affairs would exist and the same ineligibility would continue even if the United States circuit court of appeals should see fit on some technicality to reverse the decision of the United States district court in the Berger case without any "muddle" resulting therefrom. Such a reversal might take place if two out of the three judges of the circuit court of appeals should differ with the district judge on any one of hundreds of objections to the admission of evidence. I understand that counsel for the defense in the case of United States against Berger and others are very hopeful of obtaining such a reversal, because of a recent decision of the United States circuit court of appeals for the seventh district in another case, to the effect that the Government was not justified in introducing evidence of acts and expressions of the defendant previous to the passage of the espionage act. As a matter of fact, five of the seven circuit courts of appeal which have decided espionage cases have held that the Government was justified in introducing acts and expressions of the defendants previous to the passage of the act for the purpose of proving criminal intent, and these decisions have been uniformly upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States on writs of certiorari.

Inasmuch, however, as the Government has no appeal in criminal cases, the verdict might be set aside and the Government be compelled to try the case over again. All of the evidence, however, introduced by the Government of acts and expressions of Berger and his associates between the entry of the United States into the war and the passage of the espionage act would be perfectly competent as proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that Mr. Berger and his associates did give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States within the meaning of section 3 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution and would amply justify the House of Representatives in its action, irrespective of what took place after the passage of the espionage law.

If the same facts had been found in regard to any Republican or Democratic Member elect, the House would have taken precisely the same action. The record of the House of Representatives in the past shows that in these matters of exclusion it has never been actuated by partisan considerations. If Victor L. Berger, who took a solemn oath as a Member of Congress in 1911 to support the Constitution of the United States and to defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic, had been loyal to his adopted country during the war with Germany, no objection whatever would have been made to his taking his seat in this House in 1919, any more than there was any in 1911. If the people of the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin had seen fit to elect any one of a dozen prominent members of the Socialist Party in Milwaukee, among whom may be mentioned the Socialist mayor and the Socialist county attorney, who were loyal to the country during the war, no objection whatever would have been made to their being seated. That they should insist upon sending here a man who was disloyal to the country during the war is a reflection upon their loyalty and a defiance of Congress and of the Constitution of the United States. It is the same as if after the American Revolution a Tory constituency in Boston or New York, after the adoption of the Constitution, had elected as their Member of Congress Benedict Arnold and had demanded that Congress seat him.

Mr. Speaker, there is no man who is more jealous of the right of free speech than I am. There is no man who is more regardful of the precedents of Congress. I believe that no Member elect chosen by any constituency should be deprived of the immediate right to take the oath of office as a Member of this House unless there is strong prima facie evidence against that right, and that no Member elect should be permanently deprived of a right to his seat unless after a full, fair, and impartial hearing he has been shown to be disqualified under the Constitution of the United States, which is binding upon the people of every district as well as upon all the Members of the House itself. The House of Representatives has always insisted upon its power to exclude Members elect who have been found to be thus disqualified, but it has never abused that power and never will.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the gentleman from New York, Congress will continue under the Constitution to be the sole judge of the qualifications of its own Members, and, regardless of all partisan considerations, will continue to exclude from its membership any man who has been found to be disloyal to his country and who may be chosen by a misguided constituency in defiance of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire, first of all, to assure the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] and the Members of this House that I hold both for him and for them the highest opinion of their judgment, discretion, and patriotism, and at the same time I beg of you to believe that I am not behind anyone in loyalty or love of country. I have no sympathy whatever with Mr. Berger, nor with the principles for which he stands. My attitude with regard to him was simply one of large, magnanimous toleration. I did not plead to have him seated. I know that the newspapers, reporting the result of our action, stated that those of us who voted in the negative voted to seat Mr. Berger. We did nothing of the kind. We voted against unseating him precipitately. Our attitude was one of deliberation. We desired to have the House wait. We desired to keep Mr. Berger standing at the door to await the determination of his trial, which is still under way and undetermined. There is no adjudication of the Chicago trial as yet, except the verdict of the jury, which may be set aside by the highest court in our land.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No. I beg to be excused just at this time. Suppose the highest court in the land should decide that Mr. Berger was improperly convicted under the law and the facts, what a situation that would present to the House; what a situation it would constitute in the committee itself, after having taken the record and the minutes of that trial and embodied them in its hearings, and presumably having given them consideration! But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] says, aware of the difficulty that confronted him and of the awkward situation, "Oh, if our committee had come to the conclusion that Mr. Berger was improperly tried, improperly convicted upon the law and the facts, we would have so reported to the House." I believe that they would have so reported, but therein lies the danger. Where, in our Constitution, is there any authority for the House of Representatives, even exercising its plenary authority of control over its own membership and their qualifications, to undertake to review the determination of a court while pending? The framers of our Constitution very wisely divided our Government into its three coordinate branches—the executive, the judicial, and the legislative.

It is the function of the judiciary to pass upon guilt or innocence, and not that of legislative bodies. If it was ever so intended that they should have that power it would have been given specifically in the Constitution.

The gentleman says that he doubts whether the gentleman from New York, referring to myself, has read the Constitution. I beg to say that I have given it considerable study. There is no difficulty in the fourteenth amendment except such as we deliberately make for ourselves. If a man gives aid to the enemy or engages in sedition, his act is treason, and treason is a crime. Where is the tribunal where men are tried for crime? It is in our courts, not in our legislatures. We can very well forego the plenary authority we have to pass on the qualifications of Members and say, particularly where they have been charged with this offense and subjected to a trial, that we will await the final adjudication of the court. Nothing would be lost by that policy. I think it would have been becoming of this great deliberative body to have gone slowly and deliberately, and not undertaken to wrest from the courts their right to review the evidence. We should not have meddled with it; the gentleman's committee should not have meddled with the court record while it was in the sanctuary of our courts. That is my attitude—no intention whatever to impeach the judgment and patriotism of the gentlemen of the committee or of the gentleman from Massachusetts, no intention whatever to hurt the feelings or the sentiments of anybody in this House, but taking the ground wholly and solely that the United States of America is big enough, grand enough, noble enough to be calm, deliberate, judicial to the last. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very much in favor of the bill pending before the committee. It seems to me that the Government has been waiting rather a long time to grant some relief to these men who have been so patient and faithful for so long without such relief. A great number of these customs employees and other employees covered by this bill are employed along the dock fronts in the customs service in the great ports throughout this country, and many of them at the ports in my district—the ports of Galveston and of Texas City. Those men work at all times and in all weathers, and they do not complain. They can not stand the burden and pressing costs of the high increase in living without some relief, however. This bill undertakes to put into force and effect by law regulations that the Government, through the Treasury Department, has already sought to establish almost to the same degree. The bill carries a little greater compensation, as I understand it, than now obtained, compensation that is absolutely needed.

The measure provides, however, that this cost does not fall upon the Government, but falls upon the owner, agent, master, or consignee of such vessel or conveyance who wants the services of these inspectors, weighers, and other employees to discharge their vessels at a time when these men ordinarily would not be required to perform that duty. If those gentlemen want that convenience and that service and are willing to pay for it, I do not see why Congress should hesitate to grant that privilege to these men who are as faithful a body as any that the Government employs. And this recognition of the eight-hour day in this Government service, and which obtains in other branches of the service, is such also as is due them, and I am glad to see recognition accorded them by the committee which reported this bill and by the Senate that passed it, and I hope it will be passed by this committee and the House.

I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall fix a reasonable rate of extra compensation for overtime services of inspectors, storekeepers, weighers, and other customs officers and employees who may be required to remain on duty between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 8 o'clock a. m., or on Sundays or holidays, to perform services in connection with the lading or unlading of cargo, or the lading of cargo or merchandise for transportation in bond or for exportation in bond or for exportation with benefit of drawback, or in connection with the receiving or delivery of cargo on or from the wharf, or in connection with the unlading, receiving, or examination of passengers' baggage, such rates to be fixed on the basis of one-half day's additional pay for each two hours or fraction thereof that the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock p. m. (but not to exceed two and one-half days' pay for the full period from 5 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock a. m.), and two additional days' pay for Sunday or holiday duty. The said extra compensation shall be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel or other conveyance whenever such special license or permit for immediate lading or unlading of or for lading or unlading at night or on Sundays or holidays shall be granted to the collector of customs, who shall pay the same to the several customs officers and employees entitled thereto according to the rates fixed therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such extra compensation shall be paid if such officers or employees have been ordered to report for duty and have so reported, whether the actual lading, unlading, receiving, delivery, or examination takes place or not. Customs officers acting as boarding officers and any customs officer who may be designated for that purpose by the collector of customs are hereby authorized to administer the oath or affirmation herein provided for, and such boarding officers shall be allowed extra compensation for services in boarding vessels at night or on Sundays or holidays at the rates prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as herein provided, the said extra compensation to be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel."

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "or," insert the word "major."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TREADWAY. I offer an amendment to strike out the word "major," and after the word "thereof," in the same line, line 10, insert "of at least one hour."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "major," and after the word "thereof" insert the words "of at least one hour," so that as amended the lines will read:

"Such rates to be fixed on the basis of one-half day's additional pay or each two hours or fraction thereof of at least one hour that the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock p. m."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was first presented to the subcommittee of which I was a member I confess it gave me something of a shock. When I read the bill and saw that it gave a day's overtime for any time beyond the prescribed day, it somewhat disturbed me. For instance, it provided in the original bill that after the first eight hours any service rendered, even one minute, should entitle the inspector to an extra full day's pay. The bill as passed by the Senate was somewhat different, and this in turn has been somewhat changed by our committee, until it is now in its present shape. Upon a first reading even yet it would seem that we are rather liberal with other people's money. You will note that for a little overtime we allow an additional day's pay, and for a little more overtime still another day, so that within the compass of one 24-hour period an inspector can make three and one-half days' pay. A somewhat closer examination, however, will reveal this fact, that these men are paid a very low salary—$4, $5, or $6 per day—and that the hours which they have to work are not at all such as the average man would arrange for himself as an ideal schedule.

Mr. PARRISH. Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. PARRISH. I would like to know, for the benefit of the RECORD and myself, personally, how much they get per day?

Mr. TILSON. They get $4, $5, or $6 as their basic salary. There are three different grades. If they work only a day, without overtime, that is what they get. The old schedule, under which they now work, is a 10-hour day, beginning at 7 o'clock in the morning and running until 6 o'clock at night, with one hour off for luncheon. The rule provides that after 6 o'clock any time over entitles them to an extra day. They gain something on this arrangement, because they often have to work overtime, and so they undoubtedly gain many overtime days in that way.

What this bill seeks to do is to enact into law what has been a Treasury regulation, with this change, that instead of a 10-hour day it makes an eight-hour day, which the subcommittee thought proper. Instead of providing that for any time after an eight-hour day the inspector shall receive an extra day's compensation, we provide in the bill that for any time beyond two hours or a major fraction of two hours—that is, for any time beyond an hour—he shall receive an additional half-day's pay. Even this would seem liberal were it not for the very low salary and the very bad hours which these men have to work. It seemed to the subcommittee that, taking the regulations which have prevailed for many years, and taking the very low compensation which these men receive per day, the schedule as fixed in this bill is not more than fair for them.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that if the bill stands as it is now written there will be three days' pay for overwork. I am reading now in line 9:

Such rates to be fixed on the basis of one-half day's additional pay for each two hours or major fraction thereof.

That you have changed to one full hour?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Now, if the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock post meridian, it would not exceed full two and one-half days' pay?

Mr. TILSON. It can not exceed the two days and a half additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have a couple of minutes in order to clear this up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut have two additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JUUL. In lines 13 and 14 you do not speak of two days' pay for Sunday work, but you speak of two days' additional pay. Two days' additional pay would mean three days of pay. I have not any fear in connection with this. I am willing these men should be paid, but there is such a thing as putting the services so high that were will not be any pay. In other words, you will put the price for their services so high that nobody will use them.

Mr. TILSON. No; the owners of the vessels which have to be unloaded are very glad to get the service of these men, and they do not make any protest whatever at the amount they have to pay for it.

Mr. JUUL. Of course, the American people, being the ultimate consumer of what is unloaded, pay the bill in the end.

Mr. TILSON. Yes. The committee was looking at the fairness of the proposition and looking to the interests of the shipowners themselves. The committee tried to be fair to everybody, to the inspectors, to the shipowners, and to the general public, which, as the gentleman from Illinois says, ultimately pays the bill.

Mr. JUUL. Then I am correct in supposing that this means three days' additional pay for Sundays?

Mr. TILSON. Two additional days for holidays.

Mr. JUUL. That makes three days.

Mr. TILSON. If they use the entire overtime that is possible under this bill it would amount to two extra days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is. Does the gentleman from New York want to offer an amendment?

Mr. PELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], in charge of the bill, to the fact that it seems to me the language originally contained in the committee amendment, "major fraction thereof," referring to the overtime of two hours, is better than the language he offers as a substitute, since the language "major fraction" preserves the continuity of expression, whereas the language of the gentleman's substitute uses the word "fraction" and strikes out the word "major," and then uses the language "of at least one hour," so that it would read, "half day additional pay for each two hours and a fraction thereof of at least one hour." Does not the gentleman think that the present language is better?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that I believe that the language in which the committee phrased the amendment is much better language, so far as English goes, than the substitute, but the change is made at the request of the inspectors themselves. Two of them called on me yesterday and called my attention to the fact that if a man worked more than one hour it would mean that he would continue on two hours. In other words, they would not set him to work an additional hour and then stop, but would continue him on for two hours, so that they wished to have it appear that even if a man worked the even hour rather than an hour and one minute he would get paid for this overtime.

Mr. GARD. It is the desire on the part of these gentlemen to see that they get pay if they work an hour overtime?

Mr. TREADWAY. If they work one hour overtime they will get the pay provided, as we intended they should. I will say that formerly the Treasury Department ruled that 30 minutes constituted the beginning of overtime, whereas we have raised that to one hour; and the phrase, as the inspectors themselves designated they would prefer to have it, would take care of the situation better than the word "major," and therefore it was offered in their behalf rather than as a piece of good English.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROGERS. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question concerning the word "of," in line 18 of page 2. The point is an exceedingly small one, but I can not make that word "of" mean anything. It does not seem to have any object or any purpose there at all. I wondered if by chance it was a misprint.

Mr. TREADWAY. In response to the inquiry of my colleague from Massachusetts I may say that any man who can add a "k" to the name of a river can find occasions for very small amendments if he will hunt for them, and I ask unanimous consent to adopt the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

I move to strike out the word "of" in line 18. It is evidently a misprint.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] moves to strike out the word "of" in line 18, on page 2. In the print of the bill I have, Senate bill 3418, there is no word "of" in that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18: Strike out the word "of," after the word "unlading."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, with all due deference to both gentlemen from Massachusetts, this word "of" is in line 18 because it should be there. It reads as follows: "Whenever such special license or permit for the immediate lading or unlading of or for lading or unlading at night or on Sundays." There are two subdivisions.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman was correct, would he not insert the word again after "unlading"? It ought to be uniform. It either ought to be there in both places or in neither.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the object of the preposition "of"?

Mr. GARD. To limit it to the designation of two things. One is for the immediate lading or unlading, and the other the unlading at night. I do not think it amounts to a great deal one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my hearty approval of this measure. The force of customs inspectors and other customs officers covered by this bill have been and are, in my opinion, much underpaid. They render faithful and arduous service. During the winter months their work is particularly exacting and hard. They are an intelligent set of officials, and were they to turn to other avenues of employment outside of Government work and do it with the same zeal, earnestness, fidelity, and efficiency as they do in the Customs Service, a private employer with due regard to his own interest would give them a large increase over what their official salaries are. They are necessarily required in wind and weather, and in storm and often amid great difficulties, to perform their service, and they have performed it well, and I am glad that at least something has been done toward helping this very deserving class of Government employees. In the light of living conditions, the ever-increasing cost of living, the inability of these men, especially in the large cities, to get along with the meager pay they are receiving, and so that they may properly and decently provide for themselves and their families, it is but meet and proper that the Government should properly provide suitable compensation. Even this bill fails to give these men what they in justice and fairness ought to get. This, however, is a step in the right direction, and I am glad to support the bill.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, no one who has ever returned to the United States can have failed to notice the courteous and efficient treatment that he has received from the customs officials. I have come through several American customhouses myself and have been impressed every time with the thoroughness, the politeness, and the sense of duty displayed by these men. Of course, there have been complaints, but my own observation is that in every case the complainant is a would-be smuggler.

These men belong to a particularly hard-used class. They must have a certain education and must keep up a certain amount of appearances. They are like all people on small, fixed incomes, being crushed between the devil and the deep sea. We should, I think, do what we can to relieve their case and the case of post office and other Government people, but we must not forget that their condition is only a symptom of the serious dislocation of our social and economic structure. They represent the majority of the brain workers of the country, and it will seriously menace our institutions if this class is to be left discontented and its legitimate grievances only treated with local palliations. Big, general, constructive laws will do far more even for special cases than the mere treatment of symptoms. The immediate suffering must be alleviated, but we must not be blind to the real demand of the country that we should frame the laws under which the people can start up that production which alone can be the answer to our economic difficulties.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUPRÉ: Page 3, line 10, strike out the quotation marks, insert a semicolon, and the following:

"Provided further, That in those ports where customary working hours are other than those herein above mentioned the collector of customs is vested with authority to regulate the hours of customs employees so as to agree with prevailing working hours in said ports; but nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to affect or alter the length of a working day for customs employees or the overtime pay herein fixed."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I reserve a point of order against the amendment for the purpose of hearing an explanation of it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, this is the identical amendment which I discussed during the general debate at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. I would have preferred to wait until this time, because it requires a renewal of the discussion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have looked forward with intense interest to the pleasure of listening to the gentleman.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am delighted that I have so interested an auditor as the gentleman from Ohio. This amendment has the approval of the two gentlemen on the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who have considered this measure. The bill in question, in providing for overtime pay, fixes the same between 5 o'clock p. m. and 8 o'clock a. m. It happens that in the city of New Orleans the working hours of the longshoremen are from 7 a. m. to 4 p. m., and in order that there shall be no conflict between this bill and the working hours of the laboring men of that city, and possibly in other ports, this proviso simply authorizes the collector of customs to adjust the hours of the customhouse employees with those of the prevailing working hours in that city. In other words, if the men begin their work at 7 o'clock and work until 4, the collector of customs can provide that the overtime shall be from 4 p. m. until 7 the next morning instead of from 5 p. m. until 8 o'clock the next morning. It is entirely permissive. If the collector of customs sees any reason why it should not be done, it is within his authority not to do it, and I have safeguarded absolutely any possibility of lengthening the working day to more than the eight hours provided by the bill or of interfering with the overtime charge in any way.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I understand it, it is simply to conform the hours in the lading and unlading of vessels and the customhouse hours at that port.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Entirely; and at other ports, for aught I know. I trust the gentleman from Ohio has enjoyed my explanation of the matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it would indeed be a hard-hearted man who would press the point of order in the face of so intelligent and lucid an explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask unanimous consent to return to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] to strike out the word "of" in line 18. My attention has been called to the act which this bill amends, and the word "of" is not in the original act, so there is no question that the word "of" is a misprint and should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to reoffer his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the request should be to vacate the proceedings by which the amendment was not agreed to. It is not a question of returning to the paragraph, as we are now considering the same paragraph.

Mr. TREADWAY. We are on the same paragraph. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the amendment was rejected there is no such amendment in the bill. Therefore all that is necessary is to ask unanimous consent to reoffer the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I put the request in that form.

Mr. PLATT. Why does not the gentleman move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected?

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to the gentleman reoffering his amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 2, line 18, after the word "unlading," strike out the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the sentence beginning with line 15: The extra compensation referred to, is to be paid to the collector of customs, is it not?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The sentence is so awkwardly framed that apparently it means that something is to be granted to the collector. The words "extra compensation," are so remote from the words "collector of customs," that apparently the word "granted" relates to the collector.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say that has been the law since the Sixty-first Congress, and this is the identical language in the law. There is nothing here that amends the original law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am speaking of what is in the bill under consideration. "The extra compensation" is "to be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel." To whom? You have to look a long ways further on to ascertain to whom it shall be paid. The bill reads that "whenever such special license or permit for immediate lading or unlading at night or on Sundays or holidays shall be granted to the collector of customs," and so forth. But nothing is intended to be granted to the collector.

I suggest, and I think the change of phrasing will make a much better sentence, that the language of the bill should be recast so as to read as follows:

"Whenever such special license or permit for immediate lading or unlading, or for lading or unlading at night, or on Sundays, or holidays, shall be granted, the master, owner, agent or consignee of such vessel shall pay said extra compensation to the collector of customs, who shall pay"—and so on.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman's language is clearer, but the bill as prepared follows the identical language now in the law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is very involved language, even if it is the language of the original law.

Mr. TREADWAY. The only drawback that I can see is that there is practically nothing to send the bill to conference.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is a House bill, is it not?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; this is the Senate bill, and I think the Senate would agree to the two amendments we have already adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FESS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TREADWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on Ways and Means any further business?

Mr. TREADWAY. Nothing further.

The Clerk called the committees.

Mr. WALSH (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7629.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. IGOE. If the Judiciary Committee is called now and takes up any time of the House, does that count as a full day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that point temporarily.

MOTION-PICTURE FILMS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7629.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts intend to ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee may have two full days for the consideration of its calendar?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman I will say that I do, and for this reason: The hour is late, and it will not take five minutes to pass this measure. After the measure is passed I shall move that the House adjourn, but before doing so I shall ask that the Judiciary Committee may have the call on next Wednesday and have two full days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may bring up the bill referred to from the Judiciary Committee and that thereafter the committee shall have two days, notwithstanding the consideration of this measure this afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7629) to amend the penal laws of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 245 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 245. Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier, for carriage from one State, Territory, or District of the United States or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States through any foreign country, to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any obscene, lewd, or lascivious, or any filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, or any drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception, or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use; or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or whoever shall knowingly take or cause to be taken from such express company or other common carrier any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the only amendment to the penal law which this bill makes is to insert the words "motion-picture film" in section 245. Section 245 places a penalty upon persons who bring or cause to be brought into the United States, and so forth, or deposit or cause to be deposited with an express company for transportation certain inhibited objects, obscene books, pamphlets, pictures, papers, letter writing, prints, or other matter of an indecent character, and this includes within that classification motion-picture films of an obscene or filthy character.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman's technical knowledge sufficient for him to advise me whether the correct expression is film or reel?

Mr. WALSH. The proper expression as I understand it, the one that has been carried in the revenue law, is film. The reel is the mechanism, the object on which the film is wound or rolled.

Mr. GARD. The films are wound around the reel and that is the way they are shipped.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I am reminded by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that the film is the real thing. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3331. An act authorizing the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington, at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CANDLER (at the request of Mr. VENABLE), for an indefinite period from Thursday last, on account of illness.

To Mr. KIESS, for the balance of the week, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 28, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER GILLETT: On account of the pressure of other assumed public duties I can not give that attendance necessary to a full performance of duty as a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1, and must, therefore, respectfully tender, and do so hereby, my resignation as a member of that committee.

With highest considerations,

Very truly, yours, JOE H. EAGLE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an interview had with Mr. Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which appeared in the Baltimore Sun of this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 29, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting tentative draft of a bill to enable the Navy Department to transfer to any other branch of the Government desirous of same any vessel which has been or may hereafter be stricken from the Navy list under law; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for increase of certain salaries under the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 638); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11307) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the qualifications of directors of the National Banking Association, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 589), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11268) granting a pension to Alexander Emory; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5356) granting an increase of pension to George W. Mason; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7845) granting a pension to John M. Williams; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 12123) fixing the compensation of the United States customs guards and night inspectors; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 12124) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BURROUGHS (by request): A bill (H. R. 12125) to define and punish vagrancy in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 12126) to grant additional pay to officers, enlisted men, and others who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war with Germany, to provide revenue for the payment of the same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 12127) to amend the act of September 8, 1916, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 12128) granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, and to the widows of such soldiers, sailors, and marines; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARSS: A bill (H. R. 12129) to provide for the erection of a public building at Eveleth, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BENSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 283) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STINESS: Memorial from the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, recommending to Congress the passage of legislation providing for a quarantine station in the port of Providence; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROOKS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 12130) granting an increase of pension to Edward H. Bennett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 12131) for the relief of the heirs at law of Jacques Clamorgan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SANFORD: A bill (H. R. 12132) granting a pension to Michael F. Fisher; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1162. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, of Detroit, Mich., relative to the famine in European countries; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1163. Also, petition of the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, of Detroit, Mich., urging that the treaty of peace be ratified immediately; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1164. Also, petition of the City Council of Chicago, relative to the building of a new post-office building in the city of Chicago; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

1165. By Mr. ANTHONY: Memorial of the Senate of the State of Kansas, opposing further continuance of Government control of the railroads, etc.; also the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, adopting the same resolution; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1166. By Mr. BRAND: Petition of representatives of 18 short-line railroads operating in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, favoring the passage of the Cummins railroad bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1167. By Mr. BURROUGHS: Resolutions of General Phil Sheridan Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, by Hannah R. Wallace, Somersworth, N. H., corresponding secretary, protesting against deferring payment of interest due on foreign loans made by the United States, and also in opposition to military, financial, or commercial assistance by the United States to any State seeking to reduce an alien people to subjection, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1168. By Mr. CRAGO: Petition of City Council of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring aerial mail service for Pittsburgh; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1169. By Mr. CURRY of California: Petition of the Sacramento Aerie, No. 9, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Sacramento, Calif., protesting against immigration of orientals into the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1170. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, opposing the Federal urban mortgage bank bill (H. R. 10518); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1171. By Mr. DYER: Petition of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Mo., relative to certain legislation now pending; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1172. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the City Council of the city of Chicago, relative to a new post-office building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

1173. By Mr. HILL: Petition of 20 residents of Chattanooga, Tenn., for the enactment of House bill 10518, to create a Federal urban mortgage bank; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1174. Also, petition of 292 residents of New York City for the enactment of House bill 10518, to create a Federal urban mortgage bank; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1175. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Resolutions of the Flint (Mich.) Board of Commerce, in favor of legislation to make illegal the publication or circulation of radical or seditious literature; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1176. By Mr. KIESS: Petition of Octagon Post, No. 291, American Legion, of Galeton, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1177. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Hooker Electrochemical Co., of New York City, relative to car shortage; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1178. Also, petition of John F. Davidson, of Kingman, Ariz., relative to water-power legislation; to the Committee on Water Power.

1179. By Mr. SCHALL: Petition of the Lincoln Club, of St. Paul, Minn., urging the passage of the espionage bill now pending; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1180. By Mr. WATSON: Petition of the Willet C. Sanford Post, No. 433, American Legion, Morrisville, Pa., in favor of House bill 10650; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1181. Also, petition of Bucks County Historical Society, Doylestown, Pa., protesting against the proposed acquisition by condemnation by the Government of lands extending from Tullytown to the Delaware River for the construction of a United States arsenal or other military objects; to the Committee on Military Affairs.